Who is robbing our preachers of the time that ought to be spent in mental and spiritual preparation? Is it the church itself? Is the mere business of the Kingdom invading the province of the higher energies? Visit almost any Annual Conference, and the spiritual is subordinated to the business of the Conference. The same is true of the General Conference. Without realizing it, we have allowed the serving of tables to drive the spiritual from its rightful pre-eminence. We have allowed the business drift of the modern world to enfold the whole church, bishops, secretaries, boards, preachers, with its crushing power. We can never forget the pathos with which Bishop Hoss used frequently to say to us: "If I had only declined the office of bishop, I might have made a preacher." It is but just to add that our episcopacy is not lacking to-day in men of great preaching ability and spiritual power, but what might not these men do if their hands were untied from the secular tasks to which the church has bound them? Not infrequently I hear some of them using almost the exact words of the late Bishop of Oxford—"the extreme difficulty of continuing to be in any sense a student when one has become a bishop." When we add to this the fact that every general board is fixed with a holy ambition to make its department a success, and that they must needs harness the pastor in order to do so, do we wonder that in time the preacher, receiving these "calls from above" by almost every mail, feels a sense of loyalty to the organization to try to carry out all these instructions until at last he finds himself denuded of spiritual strength? This is not theory. Looking back over a pastorate of twenty-five years I feel that my church robbed me of spiritual power by setting me to so many secular tasks. Fortunately, I had a rather thorough education and knew how to save time intellectually. But what of our young preachers, who, often illy equipped, need to do so much prolonged study, especially of the Bible? Who will save them from the secularizing net?

Is any one to blame? No; we are the victims of "big business" in the modern world. Our connectional system peculiarly exposes us to its danger. Even as I write I can hear the sound of the hammer in the adjoining room, once set apart as an assembly room in the Publishing House for a place of gathering and almost daily prayer and praise. It is being converted into offices. Strong young men are being taken from the pulpits to serve desks. Sometimes, when I think of American Methodism, I think of that marvelous piece of statuary in the Vatican, known as the Laocoon, made famous by the genius of Lessing. It is unquestionably the greatest piece of sculpture that has come down to us from antiquity. It depicts a father and two sons who have about reached manhood. An immense serpent has wound itself about the young men, and the father, rushing to their rescue, has been wrapped in the deadly folds. The expression of horror depicted on their faces and the knotted muscles of the father as he strives against the tightening coils are beyond words.

The Centenary revival now being so earnestly and wisely begun will, we trust, give us a great ingathering and a spiritual breathing spell. But it alone will not cure the trouble. We must more wisely orient the pastor in our polity. I have heard all the discussions in the Joint Commission on Unification. They have ranged from the rights of the bishops to the rights and privileges of the laymen, but the pastor was never once seriously considered. The first General Conference of united American Methodism, if such a one should be called, will have a glorious opportunity to set free the key-man of Methodism to deliver himself with all his synthetic energies on a lost world. "Loose him and let him go."

JAMES S. NOEL.

By Rev. W. Winans Drake.

"The good that men do lives after them." This saying is impressively illustrated in the life of James S. Noel. The magnificent church which he erected as a memorial of his son, James S. Noel, Jr., will stand for generations as a memorial of his own life, and will be all the while fulfilling the purpose for which he gave it. Such a gift as this is even yet so rare that it is proper that it should be remembered with appreciation and gratitude by those whom it benefits.

James S. Noel, son of J. D. and Mrs. M. E. Noel, was born in Caddo Parish, La., on October 17, 1844. In his boyhood he attended school in Clarksville, Texas, where he was under the influence and instruction of "Old Master" McKenzie, well known as one of the pioneers of Methodist education in Texas. The impressions and ideals suggested by the school and the personality of its master never faded away, and his schooldays were the subject of thought and conversation to the end of his life.

In his young manhood, Mr. Noel joined the Confederate army and served with gallantry and enthusiasm the cause of his section. At the close of the war, he entered upon his business career in Mooringsport, La., and for many years was a successful merchant and planter in that community. It was here that he spent the years of his active manhood and laid the foundation of the fortune which enabled him to give such a generous gift to the church in his later years. It is worth while to note that Mr. Noel's fortune was not mainly the result of a special good fortune, but was built up by the slower processes of industry, sobriety and thrift, lessons which he had learned through the necessities of his early life. During the years of his residence in Mooringsport, he was actively identified with the church as an official member, and former pastors testify gratefully to the fidelity with which he stood by them in their work.

In January, 1868, Mr. Noel was happily married to Miss Fannie Bauguss, of Mooringsport, who, after fifty-two years of happy and devoted married life, remains to mourn his departure and to look forward to a happy reunion beyond. Of the six children born to this union, all are still living except the one son in whose loving memory the James S. Noel, Jr., Memorial Church was erected. This church was built in Shreveport in the years 1912 and 1913 at a cost of about $75,000, and under Mr. Noel's personal and careful supervision. The lines upon which it was planned indicate an unusual grasp of the needs of the future, making it adequate for the needs of a rapidly developing church for years to come. In making this munificent gift he was actuated, as he frequently said, by a desire first to glorify God and to commemorate the life of his beloved son. His interest in the development of the church which he had founded was intense. While he avoided even the appearance of a desire to dictate its policies, and even refused to occupy a place of responsibility in its management, he constantly conferred with his pastor about its interests and rejoiced in its progress and prosperity. He was always in his place at the services and at Sunday school, unless sickness prevented. Over and over he said to the pastor, "If the church isn't religious, there isn't any use in having it," indicating his desire that the emphasis should be spiritual. A few weeks before his death, when health and strength seemed to be returning after months of indisposition, he asked his pastor to come over and have a special prayer of thanksgiving that "the Lord had spared his unprofitable servant." He often spoke in his last days of the possibility of his going, and, though he wanted to live, expressed his readiness, through his Savior's mercy, to go. After his death, there was found among his papers, a series of prayers which he had written on each birthday since passing seventy. I quote the following from one of these: "My Heavenly Father, I thank thee that I have been spared to see another birthday. * * * I desire to live as close to thee as possible, and serve thee with my whole heart, and when I am called to die, I may be prepared to enter heaven."

Mr. Noel was a man of marked individuality and unusual force. He aggressively espoused the cause of every moral movement in the community, and it is safe to say that his influence and effort had much to do with the banishing of the saloon from Caddo Parish some years ago.

He was marked by simplicity of character, and had no use for ostentation and pretense. He frequently told his pastor and others that he did not want his funeral to be marked by display, and wished the words of the preacher to be of the simplest.

For a number of years past his home has been in Shreveport. His plain but substantial home stands under the shadow of the great church in which he so much delighted; and it was here on January 15, 1920, surrounded by his wife and children and other relatives and friends, that he passed to his eternal reward. At his special request, he was buried beside his son in the Mooringsport cemetery to await the coming of his Lord.

METHODIST UNIFICATION: THE COLORED MEMBERSHIP IN THE UNITED STATES.

By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

The proposed plan for the Unification of American Methodism incorporated the present Negro membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the reorganized church, and looks toward continued co-operation with the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, especially in the way of financial support. The gratifying thing about this agreement is that while it is acceptable to the majority of the Northern Commission, the majority of the Southern Commission believe that it surrenders no principle which our church holds to be vital. The entire church should congratulate itself that on this important question the Commission was able to come to an agreement. Of course, we do not expect everybody to be satisfied. Extreme men in both churches will doubtless object to what we have done, for both commissions have made concessions. And this is as it should be; for the correct position in matters of expediency is never found at one extreme or at the other, but always midway between extremes.

Let us keep the record straight. The Joint Commission on Federation at their meeting in Chattanooga, in May, 1911, made the following recommendation:

"We suggest that the colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Protestant Church, and such other organizations of colored Methodists as may enter into agreement with them, be constituted and recognized as one of the Quadrennial or Jurisdictional Conferences of the proposed reorganization."

The Oklahoma City General Conference, having before it the report of the Joint Commission on Federation, passed the following resolution:

"We recommend that the colored membership of the various Methodist bodies be formed into an independent organization holding fraternal relations with the reorganized and united church."

Mark well these words: "We recommend. The General Conference did not say: "We instruct our commissioners to enter into negotiations with the Methodist Episcopal Church on the condition and with the understanding that the colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church is to be formed into an independent organization." The General Conference laid down no ultimatum. It went no further than to say: "We recommend that the colored membership be formed into an independent organization."

When the Joint Commission on Unification met in Baltimore in January, 1917, the Southern Commissioners felt that, before opening negotiations with the Northern brethren, they should come to an understanding touching the limits of their authority. After much discussion the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the resolutions adopted by the General Conference of 1914 under which we hold our Commission, set forth certain principles as basic to a genuine unification of American Methodism,

"Resolved, first, That we consider ourselves bound by the basic principles as therein set forth;

"Resolved, second, That we interpret these basic principles to be:

"(1) That neither the General Conference nor any of the Jurisdictional Conferences shall be vested with final authority to interpret the constitutionality of its own acts;

"(2) That the Jurisdictional Conferences shall have full legislative powers over distinctly local affairs;

"(3) That the colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and such colored churches as may elect to take part in the reorganization of American Methodism, are to be dealt with in such a manner as shall give full recognition to race consciousness, while at the same time offering to them the largest possible co-operation."

Observe the language here used: "That the colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church be dealt with in such a manner as shall give full recognition to race consciousness." With this understanding of our instructions, we have conducted all our negotiations. And that we were right in our interpretation of the Oklahoma City paper, is made perfectly plain by what was done at the Atlanta General Conference. First, the General Conference approved our work in the following language: "Resolved, that we express our high appreciation of the faithful and earnest efforts of our Commission to secure unification in accordance with the basic principles of the suggestion for unification framed and proposed by the action of the Federal Council of Methodism and approved in the main by our General Conference in 1914." Note well that this resolution affirms that our efforts were "faithful," as well as "earnest." Besides this, the Atlanta General Conference rejected the report of the minority which sought to give explicit instructions to our commission touching this matter. Later, when a resolution was presented by a gentleman from South Carolina, seeking to amend the majority report, by giving definite instructions touching "the place of Negroes in Unified Methodism," the General Conference, by an emphatic vote, declined to give any such instructions to our Commission. The General Conference of 1918 did "reaffirm the action of the General Conference of 1914, and declare the readiness of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to continue negotiations on the basis approved by that action." In explaining the meaning of the majority report, James Cannon, Junior, who had charge of the report on the floor of the General Conference, said: "We do not tie the Commission's hands. We do not say to the Commission, 'You cannot do this;' but, 'There is our recommendation, and we leave it with you.'" And with this understanding the majority report was adopted.

Acting under our instructions, and understanding fully the mind of the General Conference, and believing that the General Conference was truly representative of the church at large, we have now completed our work.

1. We have agreed to a Regional Conference for Colored people.

While geographical lines mark our six White Regional Conferences in America, no such lines mark out the boundaries of the Colored Regional Conference. All colored members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America are placed in one Regional Conference. Without doubt this gives due recognition to "race consciousness" and gives opportunity for our colored brethren to develop a larger spirit of independence and initiative. Let it be understood that there will be no mixed congregations and no mixed Annual Conferences in American Methodism. There was a time—shortly following the war between the States—when the Northern brethren made the experiment of mixed schools and mixed congregations and mixed conferences. But that has long ago been abandoned. To-day they have no more thought of it than have we of the South. There is nothing here that looks in the direction of social equality between the races. The best men in the North, as well as in the South, desire nothing of this kind. And the best colored people in America are seeking nothing of the sort. Under the proposed plan the work of the Church in Dallas, Texas, and Charleston, South Carolina, will go on to all outward appearance just as it does now, and no one will know that any change has taken place in the organization of American Methodism—except, let us devoutly hope, that we shall have a deeper interest in the moral and religious welfare of colored people and be more vitally related to them in their church work.

2. We have agreed that there shall be Colored Bishops for colored people.

The language of the Constitution is as follows: "The privileges, powers and duties of a Bishop, elected by or for a Colored or Foreign Regional Conference, shall be limited to the Regional Jurisdiction by or for which he is elected." There are no colored bishops in the Northern branch of the church at the present time, except such as are elected exclusively for Africa. The Negroes want their own bishops and ought to have them. The colored bishops in the reorganized church cannot preside over any Conferences except their own. On the other hand, white bishops may be assigned to hold colored Annual Conferences. And this ought to be allowed. For many years white bishops from the North have been coming South and presiding over colored Conferences. No Southern bishop has had the opportunity of co-operating with the colored people in this official capacity. Who can doubt that it will be a good day in the progress of the colored people when a more intimate relation is established between them and the leaders of our white churches in the South?

3. We have agreed to proportionate representation in the General Conference for the present colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church—that is to say, for those who are now members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but not for those who may come into the church, after the adoption of this Constitution.

Conceivably there are several things that might have been done with the present colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church: (1) They might have been erected into an independent church. But that could have been done only if they had voluntarily withdrawn from the Methodist Episcopal Church. For under the Constitution of the church and under the laws of the land, 300,000 Negroes could no more have been turned out of the church than an equal number of white people. This, therefore, was a legal impossibility. (2) They might have been left in the church, but with no representative in the General Conference. This, also, was a legal impossibility. For, as members of the church, and as members of Colored Annual Conferences, they are entitled to membership in the General Conference. (3) They might have been left in the church; but with reduced representation in the General Conference. This also was a legal impossibility. And besides, if we agreed to any representation at all by what process of reasoning could we stop short of full representation in proportion to present membership? (4) They might have been given representation in the General Conference, in proportion to membership on the same basis with the white membership of the church, without any restrictions or limitations whatsoever. But this did not seem to be best, because of certain contingencies which might arise in the future. The colored membership of the church might double, or quadruple, in a few years. Members from other colored churches might after some years come into the reorganized church in large numbers, so that there might come to be a very large number of colored people in the General Conference. All this had to be kept in view. Not that there is any particular likelihood of a large increase in the colored membership of the church in the near future. For, as a matter of fact, the growth of the colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church has been slower than that of any other element in the membership of that church.

The present colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church will amount to five per cent of the total membership of reorganized Methodism. We have agreed, therefore, that they shall have five per cent of the membership in the General Conference—and no more. That is to say, if the General Conference is composed of 670 members, 30 of these will be Negroes. If the General Conference reaches the limit of 850, 42 will be Negroes. This protects the constitutional rights of those who are now members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. But such colored people as may join the church after reorganization is accomplished, will have no such constitutional rights, but will come in under the limitations and restrictions of this Constitution. This is, of course, a concession on the part of the Commissioners representing the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a concession, it should be added, agreed to by the two colored members sitting on this Commission.

4. And we have not forgotten the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. The following recommendation looks toward protecting their interests: "We recommend that the General Conference make an equitable provision for the financial support of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church by setting apart a designated amount or a fixed percentage of the total annual offerings of the reorganized church for the support of work among colored people."

It is very likely that some will object to this plan for the reorganization of American Methodism, because it allows the present colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church to remain in the reorganized body. They object to belonging to a church that in any way whatsoever has colored people in its membership. If this be the ground of their objection, they will have to go a long way to find a church that suits them. The Southern Presbyterian Church has colored people in its membership. The Protestant Episcopal Church has quite a number of colored people in its membership, entitled to all the privileges of membership; and in the State of Arkansas there is a colored Episcopal bishop. And it should not be overlooked that there are colored people now included in the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Not to refer to our mission in Africa, large numbers of our people in Brazil are colored people and we have a large number of colored members in Cuba. Besides, there are still scattered here and there throughout the country a number of faithful colored people who have refused to attend any other church except the Southern Methodist Church. And in the State of Oklahoma we have quite a number of people with Negro blood in their veins who are members of our church, several of them being local preachers. Since Christianity does not fly any racial flag, and since the Holy Church Universal does not fly any racial flag, there are some of us who would feel considerably embarrassed in belonging to a church if that church should now insist on erecting a barrier that would shut out of its membership any man who believes in Christ.

From the beginning of our history the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has made an honorable record in dealing with colored people. We can now make only passing reference to such men as William Capers, "Founder of the Mission to the Slaves," and Atticus G. Haygood, author of "Our Brother in Black." Special attention, however, is called to the concern our fathers felt for the salvation of the colored people as seen in the legislation enacted by the General Conference meeting in New Orleans in 1866. They adopted the following resolutions:

"When it is judged advisable by the College of Bishops, Annual Conferences of colored preachers may be organized, to be presided over by our bishops.

"When two or more Annual Conferences shall be formed, let our bishops advise and assist them in organizing a separate General Conference jurisdiction for themselves, if they so desire, and the bishops deem it expedient, in accordance with the Doctrines and Discipline of our church, and bearing the same relation to the General Conference as the Annual Conferences bear to each other."

This was the plan which our fathers originally proposed: "The organization of a separate General Conference for colored people bearing the same relation to the General Conference for white people as the Annual Conferences bear to each other." Not the complete separation of the colored membership from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, such as afterward took place in the organization of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. In agreeing to the plan for the reorganization of Methodism proposed in this Constitution, we are not very far removed from something similar to what was in the mind of our fathers in 1866.

The writer of this article knows perfectly well that the relation between white people and colored people in the United States is more strained today than at any time in American history. He does not overlook the horror of recent race riots in different parts of the country. He has been told also that in certain Southern States there is talk of the revival of the Ku Klux Klan to suppress wicked and dangerous Negroes—as if crime could ever be cured by crime. We know also that radical agitators are doing their best to array colored people against white people—and that, to a degree, they are succeding. And frequently now we are hearing it said that in all history no two races, one inferior and the other superior, have ever live together, side by side, in peace. Well, suppose they have not. Who says that it cannot be done in a Christian country? Whether the two races live in peace or not, will depend upon how superior the superior race is. If the superior race shows that it is truly superior in Christian character and Christian life, then in the long run we shall have peace. This is no time in American history for white people to withdraw their sympathy and co-operation from colored people. Present misunderstandings and difficulties between the two races, instead of being an argument against the Unification of American Methodism on the plan proposed, is the strongest possible argument in favor of this plan. There are some of us who have come to feel that we should welcome this opportunity as coming to us in the providence of God. To the present writer it seems that to reject the plan of Unification, because of the provision made therein for tho colored membership of the church, would be to shut the door of opportunity in the face of Providence.

The world has moved very fast in the past few years. Readjustments and realignments are being made everywhere. The General Conference meeting in Atlanta was altogether different in spirit from the General Conference meeting in Oklahoma City. The church to-day is not what it was in 1914, or even in 1918. God has thrust his hand into human affairs. It is too late to move backward now. We must move forward if we move at all. The light shines only on the forward and upward path. One calls to mind the words spoken by Bishop E. E. Hoss, when the paper was adopted at Oklahoma City inviting the Methodist Episcopal Church to begin negotiations looking toward Unification:

"We have moved slowly, very slowly, so slowly: and at times I have been almost in despair of any practical results. But, brethren, I do not desire to despair while Jesus Christ, with all power in heaven and in earth in his hands, is sitting at the right hand of the Majesty on High. I think you are moving on the right lines. We should go on, and after a time Almighty God will put his hand in, and this thing comes to pass. We cannot cure all the ills of the past by rehearsing them. Some things are buried; let them stay buried until the angel of the resurrection comes. I pray God that the day may come somehow and at some time, in which all the forces of Methodism may be organized into such a form as to constitute an organized, disciplined army for the spread of the kingdom of God."

FAITH HEALING AND NATURAL LAWS.

By Rev. E. N. Evans.

It is not my purpose to discuss here the matter of what is commonly called faith cures. Since the days of the Apostles most, if not all, such pretenders have proved to be either miserable frauds, or honest, but misguided, sincere, earnest, but self-deceived men or women. There is no authentic record of any single incident of really miraculous healing of the sick since the days of the immediate disciples of Jesus.

That God can and did heal all manner of sickness and diseases by Jesus Christ and through his immediate disciples, no believer in the Bible can deny. God alone can do real miracles, and He alone can forgive sins. Just what real faith in God may bring to our souls and bodies, is limited only by the gracious will of our Heavenly Father. All power is given unto Jesus Christ, and what is best for us, his faithful followers, he will grant.

"If ye ask anything in my name, I will do it."—John.

In the case of "Brother Isaiah," there are just a few plain, sensible things that ought to be said. First, such matters appeal to our pious superstitions rather than to our intelligent faith.

Second, opinions and beliefs—judgments rendered in the absence of well-attested and authenticated facts—have no real bearing on the case in hand. No wise judge will render his decision till he hears all the testimony. If the facts prove one case of real healing, then theories and arguments are in order.

Third, the prayer of faith is the intelligent expression of our wants with devoted piety and summissive trust in the will of God. It also has the element of obedience. The very act of prayer is void of the spirit of dictating to God the time and manner of his answer. "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done."

Fourth, the miracles of Jesus, and especially those of healing, were not an end within themselves, but a means to an end. Such things were but incidents in the life and works of Christ—they came from his human sympathy and attested his divine nature and mission of compassion. The great work of Jesus was to redeem and save man from sin. All else was incidental and temporary. Those whom he healed, sickened again, and those raised from the dead, died again. Jesus never placed much emphasis on the mere matter of healing the sick or of raising the dead; and he never courted the spectacular or sensational. He often entreated his subjects not to tell it to any one. He nowhere condemned even the poor methods of practice of medicine of his day, nor did he abuse the temple and its priesthood, though these were often corrupt and abused by those who attended them. He never forbade the use of medicines or the due regard for natural law. He commended enterprise, industry and thrift. When tired and worn, he rested and slept; when hungry, he ate. He had power over nature, but he had respect for her laws. He refused to defy the law of gravity by jumping from the pinnacle of the Temple. "Thou shalt not tempt the lord thy God."

Fifth, Jesus also miraculously fed the hungry, and taught us to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread," as he also taught us to pray for the sick. Should we, therefore, pray for the daily bread and not plow the fields? Or pray for the sick and not call for the physician? Would we not the better pray and plow? Pray, and use the remedies God has provided in herb and mineral for our bodies? Which is the greater faith, that which sees God only in the spectacular, or that which finds him in "the firmanent which showeth his handiwork?" Must God in our day do the miracles all over again that we may believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him? Have we not yet learned that the whole material universe is but the manifestation of God? Is our faith no more than a pious superstition? Have we not come yet to a knowledge of God? Is nature one thing and God quite another? Do we dishonor our faith by the use of means which God has given us? Does faith require that a man lose all his senses? "Your Heavenly Father knoweth that you have need of all these things." Is nature lavish in her rich store for all human need? It is but God's provision for our daily wants. Jesus never complained that men had to eat to live, but that men were content to live to eat.

That time and process were used in making the earth is no proof that God did not do the work. What we need is a larger and more intelligent faith.

NOTICE TO PASTORS, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

On Sunday, March 28, 1920, there will be special speakers, such as, Dr. W. W. Pinson, Dr. W. B. Beauchamp, Dr. E. H. Rawlings, Dr. J. J. Stowe, Dr. J. L. Neill, Mr. J. M. Way, Mr. D. H. Hall and Rev. Ben P. Jaco, at Booneville, West Point, Houston, Durant, Greenwood, Grenada, and Water Valley for morning services; and at Corinth, Tupelo, Pontotoc, Holly Springs, Ackerman, Clarksdale, and Sardis for the evening service. All pastors are asked to see the Centenary treasurers and other persons composing the local church cabinet and secure their attendance upon these services at their most convenient place. The speakers will hold a short conference with them at the close of the service at each place.

These services were planned to take the place of group meetings covering a longer time, and at the request of Mr. High and myself. We ask this in fullest sympathy with Brother Felts, my good friend, and every other busy and loyal pastor without whose labors the church would fail.

MRS. J. W. BOSWELL.

Lenora McKay, daughter of Milton and Ann Eliza McKay, was born in Tippah County (now Benton County), Miss., March 3, 1845. She obtained her primary education in the common schools of that day, and when about fifteen years of age she entered a Presbyterian school at Sumpter, South Carolina. But the war came on and she returned home, leaving her education unfinished.

In July, 1863, she professed religion under the ministry of J. W. Boswell, to whom she was married the next year, October 6, 1864. She was reared by a good mother (her father having died while she was a child) who was a Baptist. Naturally she followed her mother into the Baptist Church. But after her marriage to Dr. Boswell, he had the pleasure of taking her into his church at Bethany, on the Jackson Circuit, Memphis Conference.

To this happy union, which lasted fifty-five years and four months, were born eight children, two of whom died in infancy and one, J. W. Boswell, Jr., in the prime of manhood. There survive Sister Boswell, besides the devoted husband, the following-named children: Mrs. Ariella Marlow, of Fort Worth, Texas; Mrs. Charlotte L. Moose, Monterey, California; Mrs. Ebert Sullivan, Nashville, Tenn.; Mr. W. F. Boswell, Decatur, Ala., and Mr. Thos. L. Boswell, Nashville, Tenn., and thirty-four granchildren and great-grandchildren. Only one of her parents' family survives, Mrs. Julia Thompson, of San Antonio, Texas. Her last illness of pneumonia, which lasted nine days, came during a visit to her son, Tom, in Nashville. She died March 24, 1920, and was buried in Nashville, funeral services being conducted by Dr. E. Hightower and Dr. F. S. Parker.

Sister Boswell was an affectionate, faithful wife, a loving, tender, thoughtful mother and grandmother. She had the responsibility in her old age of rearing five of her son John's children. In this capacity the writer knew her. I never knew a mother who was more careful and painstaking and kinder with her own children. She had the profound respect of all who knew her. Modest, refined, cultured, shrinking, yet she wielded a powerful influence for good. She was loyal to her pastor, her church, her God. A good woman has gone on—"A ripe shock gathered into the garner of God."

WM. F. SPRINGER.

CALL TO A GREAT REVIVAL IN THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The following paper was adopted by a meeting of presiding elders, pastors and laymen of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in session at Hattiesburg, Miss., February 17, 1920:

We, as the presiding elders, do not wish to confine our pastors to any set plan; each pastor is to be his own judge as to organization and methods of a revival suited to the several charges in our Conference. If some other day than the 4th of April will suit best for fasting and prayer, we have no objection. We think, however, that our entire Conference by combining that duty with our services on Easter Sunday will accomplish untold good. We are anxious for a revival of pure religion.

We confess with sadness and penitence that our church is not meeting its obligations to the unsaved at the present time. The meager increase in membership in the Methodist churches in America for the last two years is a cause for humiliation, and should provoke in us deep heart-searchings, and bring us to our knees with burdened hearts and in earnest prayer.

Methodism in the Mississippi Conference needs and must have a revival. God gave Methodism to the world, not to transform the doctrine of the church, but to deepen its spiritual living. When it fails in this mission, its glory will depart.

God has never given the world a revival that has not been preceded by travail of soul, nor will He give it to Methodism now without this preparation. Our church must pay the price of a revival; or pay the price of barrenness. We confidently believe that God will visit us with a gracious revival, when the church is prepared for spiritual motherhood.

We believe that this preparation will include the ministry and the laity. In their pulpit work the preachers must send out a clear, intense, evangelistic message, and in their living show much of the spirit of Him who came to seek and save that which is lost. The laymen must keep themselves unspotted from the world, and put themselves where God can speak and act through them.

With a deep conviction of our obligation to the church and to God, and a fearful sense of the results of our recommendations to you, we venture to urge your loyalty to and support of the following suggestions:

1. We believe spiritual preparation to be the first and fundamental task of the church, and to this end we urge a devout and earnest study of God's Word, and a belief in it as the final word for our faith and conduct; importunate, faith-inspiring prayer, personal devotion to all the principles of the kingdom of Christ, and a deep sense of our dependence on the presence, power, and guidance of the Holy Ghost.

2. We recognize the Bishop who has been, or may be, assigned to the Mississippi Conference, as the legal and efficient leader in any revival effort, and in view of his responsibility as the overshepherd of souls we pledge him loyal co-operation; and in view of the grave emergency which faces the church, we urge that he be released from as many other duties as is practicable, that he may concentrate his powers of head and heart on a revival campaign.

3. We believe the presiding elder's district furnishes the most strategic unit for the prosecution of a successful revival crusade, and we urge each presiding elder to assume the leadership of the campaign in his district, and to cease not his efforts until every church has been aroused and enlisted in an earnest evangelistic effort.

We request, where practicable, that pastors and churches be organized for co-operative effort, and that evangelistic teams be formed and placed under the direction of the presiding elder, in order that any church may get assistance when needed.

4. In any work in the local church the pastor is the indispensable man. To him must come large responsibilities and heavy labors. We urge on him to tarry in the council of God until, through vision and consecration, he is qualified to shepherd the flock assigned to him by the Holy Spirit. We respectfully suggest to them that they preach frequently on the doctrines that are fundamental, such as conviction, repentance, the atonement, and the witness of the Spirit. We believe that much emphasis should be put on the church as a divine institution, and the only institution in earth engaged in giving the world the Bible, a knowledge of God, and bringing salvation to sinners.

5. We would urgently request that all agencies and organizations of the local church, such as the Sunday school, the Epworth League, the Woman's Missionary Society, and the official boards, be thoroughly organized and enlisted in the proposed evangelistic campaign.

6. We would suggest that too much emphasis cannot be put on the value of the revival meeting, and urge that suitable preparations be made before the meeting begins, and that sufficient time be given to the meeting to accomplish the needed results. However important this meeting may be, it cannot take the place of continuous personal evangelism, nor the evangelistic Sunday service when conversions are expected. Associated with the Methodist revivals from the beginning, the "experience meetings" have been used by the Holy Ghost to great profit, and we believe His seal will still be given to these services.

7. To prepare each church spiritually for the campaign, we recommend that prayer circles be formed, family altars established, fast-days be observed, and that the membership of the church be called to a fresh consecration of itself to God and the task of saving the lost. We would recommend that Sunday, April 4, be designated as a day of prayer and fasting in every church, and we urge the membership of the church to assemble at their place of worship, and to join in prayer to the end that God will lead Methodism into a holier love, an intenser zeal, and into the inheritance of a redeemed world.

THE COMING DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

By Robert McIlvoy.

A few more weeks and the "open season" for district conferences! Wonder if they will be plain old district conferences or blue-print schools of instruction. There is quite a difference. The district conference was formerly the "common people's" conference—the local preachers, laymen, circuit and station pastors, and all calibers felt at home and free to exercise their privileges of membership. But we don't have time any more. We are a very small part of the show. It is a monopolized, specialized school of instruction. We make reports, approve the minutes, and receive instructions. The sermons are mostly addresses, and the Spirit must take a back seat while the body is dissected and put together again.

Now if our district conferences were made up of a large number of laymen, or if the conference is held for the benefit of the local community and church, the dispensation of wisdom as to "Standard Plan," copyrighted revivals, etc., might be in order. But the pastors are instructed (at least the instructors are diligent) by almost every mail that arrives. We receive an unremitting flow of printed instructions. We have scarcely heard anything else at the Annual and district conferences. Then there have been the group meetings, "set-up" and other heroic methods of injecting information and inspiration into the system of the "less fortunate" brethren.

It honestly occurs to some mossbacks among us that there should be at least a temporary cessation of hostilities long enough for a good "breathing spell." We have no grouch or rebellion, but are just suffering from an overdose of standardization, and want a rest. As has been said, "Them that is going to be instructed is already instructed, and them that ain't, ain't."

This "deponent" loves all of the connectionals, semi- and sub-connectionals, ex-connectionals, disconnectionals, and all. In so far as he is informed, they have all been his friends up to the time of the filing of this article. If any of them get "peeved," he frankly and fully forgives them in advance. He would like to see all of them at district conference, but doesn't care to hear them talk shop altogether. Would like some sure enough preaching—evangelical, soul-refreshing preaching.

Would that the presiding elders would give us some good, plain, old-fashioned district conferences, operated without standard blue prints, board supremacy, or military control! Let's give the Holy Spirit a chance in one more conference, when we may go home with some power in our hearts and not merely some plans in our heads. We have "put on," "put over," "put across," "gone over the top," "delivered the goods," etc., until we would enjoy "hitting the bottom" for a while for a change.

Am only writing for myself, but methinks I hear coming up from many quarters inhabited by the weary and worn a faint but hearty Amen. "So mought it be."

The writer is not so optimistic as to expect every other person to possess the intellectual and spiritual sense such as would enable him to be hospitable toward the sentiment of this deliverance. We bear with them.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

WHAT BECAME OF A LIE.

First somebody told it;
Then the room wouldn't hold it;
So the busy tongues rolled it
  Till it got outside;
When the crowd came across it,
  And it grew long and wide.

From a very small lie, sir,
It grew deep and high, sir,
Till it reached the sky, sir,
  And it frightened the moon;
For she hid her face, sir,
At the dreadful disgrace, sir,
  That happened at noon.

This lie brought forth others,
Dark sisters and brothers,
And fathers and mothers,
  A terrible crew;
And while headlong they hurried,
The people they flurried,
  As lies always do.

And so evil-bodied
This monster lie goaded,
Till at last it exploded
  In smoke and in shame;
While from mud and from mire
The pieces flew higher
And hit the sad liar
And killed his good name.

WHEN BETTY BLUE WAS LOST.

She was the very prettiest doll of all, and the newest, for Maldie had only had her since Christmas, and her golden curls were still fluffy, her lace frills fresh, and her eyes in their proper place.

Because she had blue ribbons round her waist and in her hair, and darling blue slippers, Maidie named her Betty Blue; and Betty Blue became so much one of the family that no one thought of leaving her behind when they went to the mountains in the summer.

She was a great deal of company for Maidie, and there was loud wailing and lamentation when one morning Betty Blue could not be found.

Maldie hunted all over the house and yard in vain. The garden and orchard, the hammock and swing, every spot, likely or unlikely, was searched, without finding a trace of her.' No one could remember anything special about her. Simply, she was not there—not anywhere, apparently.

Maldie cried, but tears could not bring her back. For a whole week she was lost—then, one day, as Maldie was swinging disconsolately in the hammock, missing her little companion, she heard a knock at the gate, and there stood a little mountain girl with something in her arms.

"Please come here," she called, shyly.

Maidie went. The little girl unrolled the newspaper parcel she carried. "Is this yourn?" she asked.

Maidie looked, and gave a scream of delight, for there lay Betty Blue, as sweet and smiling as ever.

"Oh, where did you find her?" she asked the child.

"I—I—just found her," said the little girl, defiantly. "She was layin' on the grass when I come to bring Mis' Graham some eggs. She was just layin' out there; nobody didn't seem to want her. It might a' rained on her—so I thought—maybe—you didn't want her, an' had throwed her away. I hid her for a while, but maw found her an' said I must bring her back. We don't none of us steal," she added, with a mingling of wistfulness and pride in her thin little face.

"Oh, I know! And you've taken such care of her. Do you like dolls?" Maidie asked, seeing, child as she was, the beauty-hunger in the other child's eyes.

"I never had none. I never had nothing' pretty before!" she broke down, sobbing.

"Oh, please, don't cry! You may come and play with her whenever you like," comforted Maldie; but the little girl only shook her head, and ran away, still crying.

Maldie went into the house looking very sober, to show her recovered treasure to her mother. "And, oh, mamma, I hated to take her, the poor little girl was so sorry to lose her! I wonder if we shall ever see her again."

She did see the little girl, a great many times. For Betty Blue proved a sort of magnet to draw her back, and she and Maldie became good friends before the summer ended.

And soon after Maidie and Betty Blue went home, a big package went to the little cabin in the hills, containing a beautiful doll, very much like Betty Blue, with a box of pretty dresses and slippers.

"Next summer we will play with them together," wrote Maidie to the little girl who had never had anything pretty before.—Exchange.

BERT'S THANKFULNESS.

Mother glanced up from her work as Bert came down the stairs two steps at a time with his long-discarded blue overalls on, and father's big hammer in his hand.

"Where is my little carpenter off to?" laughed mother. "We're going to help old Mr. Jones shingle his shed," said the small boy stoutly. "You remember, mother, what he did for us boys last week—Ted and Martin and me? I guess we'd a been drowned if it had not been for his coming along when our boat was pretty nearly full of water. Ted heard him saying he couldn't get any one to help him, and his roof leaks like a sieve. So we're going to show him how thankful we are to him, by helping him out."

"That's right," said mother. "I'm glad to see you boys so thoughtful for your old friends."

That evening, before Bert, with his small sister, Beulah, finished their romp in the nursery, mother called from the piano, "Come, now, children, for your good-night hymn."

"I'm not going to sing to-night, mother; I'm too tired," grumbled Bert, stretching lazily and yawning.

"Me, too," lisped his small sister, imitating her big brother.

Mother turned from the piano. "I remember a little boy who was willing to work hard all this morning to show how thankful he was to some one who rescued him from danger, and now he is not willing to sing his thanks to the One who has cared for him, not only to-day, but every day, and who warms and clothes and feeds him always."

Bert came over beside his mother. "I'm ashamed, mother, I just forgot. If you play 'Jesus, Tender Shepherd,' Beulah and I will sing it with all our might."

And as the two voices blended in the verse,

"All this day thy hand hath led me,
And I thank thee for thy care," mother knew that Bert meant what he said.—Selected.

HOW A HYMN WAS WRITTEN.

On July 23, 1918, the author of that well-known hymn, "He Leadeth Me, Oh, Blessed Thought," the Rev. Joseph H. Gilmore, D.D., died at Rochester, N. Y., where he had been for many years a professor in the University of Rochester. Doctor Gilmore was a Baptist minister, and it was while conducting a Wednesday evening prayer meeting in the First Baptist Church in Philadelphia that the hymn that has been sung for over half a century came into existence.

At that service he took for the lesson the Twenty-Third Psalm, and made some helpful spiritual comments upon it. He emphasized the thought of the leadership of God, and his interpretation of the psalm with that thought as its basis not only made a deep impression upon the people who were at the meeting; but clung to his own mind for some time afterward. Upon returning to the home where he was being entertained, the subject of the meeting was further discussed.

Doctor Gilmore said of the incident: "During the conversation, the blessedness of God's leadership so grew upon me that I took out my pencil, wrote the hymn just as it stands to-day, handing it to my wife, and thought no more about it. She sent it, without my knowledge, to the Watchman and Reflector. Three years later, I went to Rochester to preach for the Second Baptist Church. On entering the chapel I took up a hymn book, thinking, 'I wonder what they sing.' The book opened at 'He Leadeth Me,' and that was the first time I knew my hymn had found a place among the songs of the church."—Unknown.

There can be no safe guidance that is not perpetual. The advantage of a year may be lost in an hour. If we act independently of the Spirit in little things, we shall look for him in vain in great things.—George Bowen.

"GOOD AND FAITHFUL SERVANTS"—A THREE-MINUTE TALK.

Servants are those who minister for another. Good and faithful servants are those who perform their work conscientiously and efficiently. The commendation, "Well done!" is received by those who have been conscientious and efficient—and it is usually given by the master. In the parable of the talents, the Lord used a simple illustration to apply and enforce a powerful spiritual lesson.

Before we can realize our responsibilities as servants, however, we must first realize that we are servants. The word itself does not especially appeal to some of us because we are accustomed to think that it implies the performance of menial tasks; as a matter of fact, it simply means "one who renders service." There is certainly nothing to offend the most sensitive person when we have that conception of the word, especially in this day of emphasis upon "service" as an essential for economic and moral well-being.

Then, too, we are concerned about whose employ we are in. We might very well refuse to serve some masters because of the character they have established, while, at the same time, we might consider it a distinct honor to serve another because of his own high position. In some instances service becomes more than an obligation—it is a privilege.

In the Kingdom of Heaven it is our privilege to be the servants of God—good and faithful servants. He has entrusted us with treasures that belong to him—treasures of money and mind and heart. These things are not ours—they belong to him; how are we using them?

We shall have to give an account of our stewardship to God, whose servants we are. The day of accounting may be postponed, but it will surely come. If we have to hold up empty hands, it will be a sad day. The wicked and unprofitable servant has no right to expect anything but condemnation, even in this world; what a tragedy when he stands before the Righteous Judge! "Good and faithful servant"—"wicked and slothful servant"—we fix our own fate.

THE PASTORS' CONFERENCE OF THE INTERCHURCH WORLD MOVEMENT.

The meeting of the Pastors' Conference of the Interchurch World Movement in New Orleans last week was the occasion of bringing together a good many of the Protestant ministers of Louisiana and Mississippi, as well as several distinguished visitors from abroad. The attendance of white ministers was probably not as great as was expected, though the fact that the Wesley Bible Class Federation was in session at Shreveport at the same time probably had something to do with it; the colored brethren were much in evidence.

There can be no doubt but that the Interchurch Movement has rendered a great service to the church by the survey of religious conditions throughout the world that has been made under its auspices. A vast amount of helpful, suggestive and inspiring information has been brought together in a form that will greatly help the church to understand its mission and promulgate its plans. We think our Board of Missions acted wisely in co-operating in the work of the survey, since it has undertaken work on such an extensive scale.

At the close of the Conference, most of the participating denominations presented resolutions, adopted in their denominational group meetings, endorsing and approving the aims and work of the Interchurch Movement. No such resolutions were proposed in the group meeting of the ministers of the M. E. Church, South, however, and apart from the adoption of the report of the Findings Committee by the delegates voting as individuals, there was no statement as to the attitude of our church toward the movement as a whole. In our judgment, this was wise. That it is a great movement we have not the slightest doubt; but we do not believe that we are under the slightest obligation to commit ourselves to it in advance of the meeting of the General Conference, which alone can officially determine our relationship to it. We do not know that the leaders of the Movement have any greater world-vision than our own church leaders; and it strikes us that we have adopted a program that is sufficiently comprehensive and far-reaching to occupy all our energies, delivered through our own Boards and Commissions, for some years to come. So far as any immediate need is concerned, we believe our own properly constituted authorities are thoroughly capable of making such adjustments with other churches in related forms of work as will be for the best interests of all concerned, without the assistance of an independent organization, no matter how great it may be.

THE WESLEY BIBLE CLASS FEDERATION AT SHREVEPORT.

The meeting of the Louisiana Wesley Bible Class Federation at Shreveport last week, was a great occasion. We had hoped to be able to enjoy the good things announced on the program, but illness in our family prevented our being present. Our regret is all the keener by reason of the following telegram from Rev. Alonzo Early, the Sunday School Field Secretary: "The great Wesley Bible Class Federation was wonderful from start to finish. The attendance was large, coming from every part of the State. The conference work of Dr. W. C. Owen and Mr. M. W. Brabham, of Nashville, was most profitable and inspiring. Read my notes next week." We shall certainly read the report of the gathering with great interest, and we commend it to our readers.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. M. A. Burns, of Potts Camp, Miss., has his forces well organized and at work, and he is expecting this to be a good year.

"I am delighted with my new appointment, and the loyalty and working spirit of my people," writes Rev. A. Joe Beasley, of Laurel, Miss.

Rev. J. F. Nabors, of Kossuth, Miss., writes that he is beginning his third year on his present charge with the most encouraging prospects.

Rev. M. R. Jones, of Rose Hill, Miss., reports a "shower" of influenza in his community—a most disagreeable thing, as we have reason to know.

Rev. W. W. Bruner, of Pleasant Hill, Miss., reports progress on his work this year, with good prospects of greater results with the coming of spring.

Rev. R. L. Ellis, of Caledonia, Miss., reports that the "flu" has interfered greatly with his work thus far, but with its passing he hopes to see renewed activity.

We are glad to learn from a note from Rev. T. B. Winstead, our pastor at Carthage, Miss., that the prospects are good for a great work on that charge this year.

A good report comes to us of the work at Macon, Miss., where Rev. Olin Ray is pastor. Interest in the work of the church is at high tide, and a great revival is in prospect.

Rev. D. F. Anders, of Ida., La., is in love with his work and the good people whom he serves. Already there are manifest tokens of God's blessing upon the plans for the year.

Rev. Jas. V. Bennett, one of the Mississippi Conference evangelists, is assisting Rev. B. E. Meigs in a meeting at Picayune, Miss. The prospects are good for a great revival.

Mrs. D. S. Purvine, a native Mississippian, but for some years a resident of Oklahoma, now living at Henrietta, but soon to move to Okmulgee, writes that she reads the Advocate regularly, as she has done for many years.

Rev. Hilary S. Westbrook, of Montrose, Miss., while in the city attending the Interchurch Conference last week, reported that the outlook on his charge is not only good—it is "great." We rejoice with him in the prospect.

Brother J. H. Havens, of Vancleave, Miss., has been a reader of the Advocate for forty years—another member of the "Old Guard" whose acquaintance we are glad to make. We appreciate greatly his continued interest in the paper.

We learn with very great sorrow that Mrs. J. R. James, wife of our pastor at Mooreville, Miss., passed away on March 10 at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. M. Brady, Corinth, Miss. Our deepest sympathy is extended to the bereaved family.

According to a report from the American Bible Society, the Turks are buying the Bible in large numbers. We reverently express the hope that they will read it earnestly and act toward the Armenians and other Christian peoples according to its teachings.

Sister T. S. Randle, of Yoakum, Texas, desires her friends in Louisiana to know that the operation on her eyes has been postponed six months, and that the doctor holds out hope that her sight will be at least partially restored. We rejoice with her in this good news.

Mrs. J. E. Selfe, wife of our pastor at Epworth Church, this city, was called to Michigan last week on account of the serious illness of her father, for whose recovery little hope was entertained. She is assured of the sympathy of many friends in the days of anxiety.

Brother Hardy W. Rees, of Booneville, Miss., is one of the old-time readers of the Advocate, his subscription having begun about 1880. In renewing his subscription for another year, he takes occasion to speak in the highest terms of his pastor, Rev. J. W. Ward. Plans are being made for a great revival this year.

Rev. W. H. Giles, our pastor at Donaldsonville,

La., is making use of a fine idea in trying to reach helpfully all the people of bis community. He is sending a series of letters to tbem individually, in which he brings to their attention, in a striking way, fundamental religious truth. We think the idea is worth passing along.

The Berean Band Movement is an organization started in London fifteen years ago by Mr. Charles J. G. Hensman, to encourage the babit of memorizing Scripture passages. The Metropolitan Tabernacle of London has a band of 800 members. The Moody Bible Institute, of Chicago, is tbe American representative of the Movement.

A note from Rev. J. R. Jones, presiding elder of the Port Gibson District, Mississippi Conference, informs us that the Advocate campaign has been interfered with thus far on account of bad weather and bad roads, but tbat it will be pusbed, with every prospect that the quota for the district will be exceeded. This is encouraging news.

From an interesting personal note from Rev. J. J. Golden, of El Paso, Texas, we learn that bis health seems to be thoroughly restored, and that his work in East El Paso is making progress. His congregation has recently paid $3700 for a lot upon whicb to build a new church. Brother Golden is another Mississippi man who has "made good" in Texas.

It is with great sorrow that we learn of the death of Sister Sallie Clark Sturdivant, wife of Brother W. C. Sturdivant, at her home in Como, Miss., on March 14. She was a noble Christian woman, a lifelong reader of the Advocate. Brother Sturdivant has been a steward of the Tyro charge for forty years. We extend sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family.

Rev. Elmer C. Gunn, our pastor at Rayne, La., while in attendance at the Interchurch World Movement Conference in this city last week, informed us that plans are rapidly being completed for the building of a $30,000 church plant in the progressive little city of Rayne. It will be thoroughly modern in every respect—a credit to the fine people wbo are supporting it, and to whom it will minister.

Rev. C. C. Wier, pastor of the Algiers Methodist Church, has issued unique invitations to a series of services being held in his church this week. A small folder represents the exterior of a church building; upon being opened, the daily program is shown, giving the hours of service and the names of the speakers. By the way, Brother Weir is one of the most progressive pastors of our acquaintance.

Rev. Paul Rader, the widely known pastor of the famous Moody Tabernacle, Chicago, delivered a series of stirring evangelistic messages in New Orleans this week in connection with the revival campaign being carried on by the Methodist churches of the city. Rev. R. A. Forrest and Rev. W. H. Oldfield were also in the city with Dr. Rader, and both of them rendered helpful service in the campaign.

Mr. Ralph E. Nollner, Assistant Secretary of the Epworth League, is anxious to secure for the General Office the names of all chapter officers immediately following their election. This election should take place at the business meeting in April, and the names and addresses of the officers should be sent to the district secretaries, as well as to the General Office. We trust all chapters will heed this request.

After the Advocate had gone to press last week, we received the following telegram from Rev. P. D. Hardin, Hattiesburg, Miss.: "Joseph Moody, son of Rev. J. C. Ellis, pastor at New Augusta, Miss., died at Detroit, Michigan, at an early hour this morning from injuries received in a railroad accident. Remains shipped to home of parents." This sad news will bring sorrow to many friends, with whom we join in extending sympathy to the bereaved parents.

We very greatly enjoyed meeting so many of the brethren who were in attendance at the Interchurch World Movement Conference, both from Mississippi and Louisiana. A good many of them did us the honor to call at the Advocate office—a courtesy we appreciated, though we are sorry to have been out when some of them called. We had hoped to give the names of those who were in attendance, but we have found it difficult to secure a complete list. Our impression is that there were more Methodist preachers in attendance than of any other denomination.

Dr. Robert E. Speer will deliver the first series of Fondren Lectures at Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas, March 30-April 1. This lectureship was founded last year by Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Fondren, of Houston, Texas, for the purpose of bringing to Southern Methodist University and the friends of missions in the Southwest a lecturer of note who would speak on some of the themes relating to the general spirit of missions. The theme of the lectures this year will be, "The Missionary Advance in the New World." A cordial invitation is extended to the public by the University to attend these lectures.

The Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, of this city, is thoroughly organized for the evangelistic campaign that is now in progress throughout the church. The plan suggested by the Evangelistic Committee is being followed in detail, and the results have been exceedingly gratifying. Forty members were received last Sunday, sixteen of them being brought in as a direct result of the work of the campaign committees among "unidentified" Methodists. Rev. Ellis Smith, the pastor, has demonstrated his ability to organize his forces and inspire the membership of the church, and a great forward movement is under way in this growing congregation.

THANKS TO OUR FRIENDS.

We desire to express our thanks to the following friends who have sent us two or more subscriptions recently: Rev. I. S. Maxey, Haynew, Miss., 6; Rev. G. B. Love, Marietta, Miss., 5; Miss Floy Wright, Horn Lake, Miss., 4; Mrs. L. M. Jones, Heidelberg, Miss., 2; Rev. M. L. White (by Mrs. Leona Wilkerson), DeKalb, Miss., 7; Rev. E. S. SATISFACTION IN THE HIGHEST.

It is better to be restless and unsatisfied than to find rest and satisfaction in anything lower than the highest. But we need not be restless or unsatisfied. There is a rest in expectation, a satisfaction in the assurance that the highest belongs to us, though we have not reached it yet. That rest in expectation we may all have now if we believe in God and know we are His children. Every taste of Him that we have ever had becomes a prophecy of His perfect giving of Himself to us It is as when a pool lies far up in the dry rocks and bears the tide and knows that her refreshment and replenishing are coming. How patient she is! The other pools nearer the shore catch the sea first, and she bears them leaping and laughing, but she waits patiently. She knows the tide will not turn back till it has reached her. And by and by the blessed moment comes. The last ridge of rock is overwashed. The stream pours in—at first a trickling thread sent only at the supreme effort of the largest wave, but by and by the great sea in its fulness. It gives the waiting pool itself, and she is satisfied. So it will certainly be with us if we wait for the Lord, however He delays, and refuse to let ourselves be satisfied with any supply but Him.—Phillips Brooks.

LIVING DANGEROUSLY.

A few years ago in Germany there was a mad philosopher whose entire system can be summed up in the two words of his own aphorism "Live dangerously." We know what was meant in his case—to run any risk, to stifle every scruple, to strain every nerve and gird every muscle in the quest of a brutal self-assertion. We desire no dangerous living of that type. But I protest that for the kingdom of God and the ethics of the New Testament I know of no better watchword than the redeemed and Christianized watchword of Nietzsche. Empty the word of self-assertion and invest it with sacrifice. Strangle its pride and release instead its zeal for God and man, and then to live dangerously is to show that you have heard what is the undoubted call of your Christian Lord in these fearsome days. It will assuredly bring you near the fire, but that is to show that this old world text has a Christian application for each one.—Henry Atkinson.

If from all thy good gifts, O Lord, I may ask but one, let that one be the spirit of kindness.—Dr. Samuel McComb.

Obituaries.

After five months of patient suffering, caused by a broken thigh, God called the sweet spirit of MRS. MARY J. EPPERSON to the home where Jesus has promised a place for all his followers. She was "made perfect through suffering." "became as a little child" and has "entered into the kingdom of heaven." Week after week it seemed the frail body could no longer hold the spark of life, and yet, she was spared to reach, and pass, by five days, her 79th birthday. The love and esteem in which she was held by those who knew her in Washington, La., was manifest through the long months of suffering, and when the death angel claimed her, even the children on the street hushed their voices and walked softly in passing the home where she was resting so swectly among the flowers lavishly sent by sympathizing friends; and when her body was taken to its last resting place in beautiful Cedar Hill cemetery, on the morning of January 27, the whole school, teachers and pupils, followed the sad procession, first to the Methodist Church and then up the hill among the cedars where she is waiting the resurrection morn. She leaves one daughter, Mrs. Robt. Harry, three grandchildren, Miss Mary E. Daniel, Mrs. Chas. E. Gillum, and Paul F. Daniel; also three great-grandchildren. There were more to greet her on the other shore than she left here; her longing for the reunion in heaven has been gratified, and, as she expressed it, "Jesus was there to receive her." For about 63 years she had been a member of the Methodist Church and was buried by her loved pastor, Rev. J. D. Harper, whom she had known for more than forty years.

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep!"

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

MRS. ORA (KNIGHT) ROBINSON was born Sept., 15, 1875, near Shiloh, Rankin County, Miss., where she spent her entire life. She died Feb. 3, 1920, after a few hours' illness. She leaves a devoted husband, four children, father, mother, six brothers, and three sisters, besides a host of near relatives and friends to mourn their loss. She united with Shiloh Methodist Church when about fifteen years old and lived a devoted member till the day of her death. Ora was of a cheerful, hopeful disposition and numbered her friends by her acquaintances. She was so attentive to her family and friends, never happier than when helping others. She will be missed not only at home, but in her church and community. Her place can never be filled. With broken hearts we bow in humble submission to God's will. May the influence of her consecrated life draw the loved ones nearer Christ and the beautiful city where she is waiting and watching to welcome them home.

A TRUE FRIEND.

The passing away of the immortal spirit of little LESLIE HARPER PURCELL, at Crystal Springs, Miss., brought sadness to the entire community round about. She was the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. S. Purcell and her age was six years and nearly two months. Born Jan. 4, 1914, at Rolling Fork, Miss., and the following June dedicated in baptism to God at Montrose, Mississippi, she was a member of the Methodist church and Sunday school practically all of her life. She possessed an unselfish spirit, was lovable and kind to all who knew her, and with the entire family she was a favorite. She became a victim of influenza and that, with other complications, proved to be fatal. On the morning of March 1, the Angel came to kiss her breath away and bore her blessed spirit to that Kingdom where children live forever. For several days anxious hearts and sympathetic friends had watched tenderly over her and nothing was left undone by scientific medical aid to retain her spirit with us. But when our good Dr. Jones, who had proved to be so untiring in his efforts and so anxious that sleep itself had fallen from his eyes, came again and again, and at last spoke so tenderly, we all knew there were depths of meaning in his words, "Your child is very, very sick." Verily, to the eye of faith, nothing is fairer than the death of a child like this. The flower, like a breathing rose, filled heart and home with an exquisite delight; but alas! we are stricken with sore anguish to find the stem broken and the flower gone. But the child's ministry was well done, for the rose does its work in blossom, as does the vine with timely fruitage; and having helped to sanctify and lift heavenward the very hearts that broke at its farewell, it has gone from this troublesome sphere to its glory as an ever-unfolding flower in the blessed garden of God. At the parsonage home the funeral was conducted by Rev. J. T. Leggett, P. E., and a tender message of consolation brought to the sorrowing ones who were called upon to look for the last time at the beautiful smile left on lips that were cold by an angel's kiss. The body was then carried to the Crystal Springs Cemetery and buried with tender hands beneath a bed of flowers to await the resurrection morn.

A WELL-KNOWN INSTITUTION

Probably no institution in America is more widely known than Doctor Pierce's Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y. Altho established many years ago it is to-day a modern sanitarium, having all the latest facilities for the correct diagnosis of diseases and their successful treatment thru medicine or surgery.

It was Dr. Pierce, its founder, who over 50 years ago gave to the world that wonderful stomach tonic and blood purifier, "Golden Medical Discovery," and that famous non-alcoholic medicine for women, "Favorite Prescription."

In his early professional career, Dr. Pierce realized that every family, but especially those who live remote from a physician, should have at hand an instructive book that would teach them something about First Aid, Physiology, Anatomy, Hygiene; how to recognize different diseases, how to care for the sick, what to do in case of accident or sudden sickness, etc., so he published that great book, the "Medical Adviser," an up-to-date edition of which can be procured by sending 50 cents to Doctor Pierce's Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y.

Later, Dr. Pierce added another link to his chain of good works by establishing a bureau of correspondence to which any one can write for medical advice, without any expense whatever, and if necessary, medicines especially prepared in Doctor Pierce's Laboratory will be sent by parcel post or express for use at home, at a reasonable cost. Thus those who have symptoms of disease need not suffer mental agony fearing that they have some serious ailment but can have a diagnosis made free by a physician of high professional standing. Write to Dr. Pierce relating your symptoms if you need medical advice for any chronic disease. All letters regarded as confidential.

FROM HARLESTON, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Our first quarterly conference was held Feb. 20, and our new P. E., Rev. W. M. Sullivan, made a very favorable impression as a preacher and presiding officer.

Things are moving along nicely on the old Americus charge and we expect to make this year a real time of revivals.

And five Sundays in February! I never saw it thus before. After recovering from my surprise and convincing myself it was true, I invited Rev. R. G. Williams, the pastor at Escatawpa, to come up Wednesday, the 25th, and we had a meeting at Tanner's Chapel. Brother Williams preached those sermons that allow no compromise with Satan. The mercury went down Saturday night, but a good crowd gathered Sunday a.m., and as there was no heater in the church we built a big fire outside and had a fine service. We had dinner at the church Saturday and Sunday. How is that for fighting sin and Satan?

We are urging the brethren to help increase the number of subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. By the way (if I am out of order) there was a good old lady on the charge I served last year (Escatawpa) that learned her letters from the New Orleans Advocate about forty years ago.

The people up here surely know how to care for their pastor. We have been supplied thus far with sweet potatoes, pork, country syrup and many other things a preacher enjoys. Brethren, pray for us.

Yours in His service,
VAN R. LANDUM, P. C.

FROM STRONGS, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: This is from Strongs, the place where the parsonage is for Prairie and Strongs charge. A kinsman wrote me, saying, "Where is Strongs?" It may not be on the map, but it is on the earth; almost mid-way between West Point and Aberdeen, on the I. C. R. R., well into the best alfalfa growing region in the State. We are sparsely settled with whites, though thickening up somewhat. We have prospectors in our bounds every week. Since I came here, December, a year ago, many lands have changed hands three times, each owner making from $10 to $100 per acre profit. Quite a number of good people from Kentucky, Tennessee, and other States, are settling amongst us.

Though our church membership is small, we have royal people, as noble in hospitality in their homes, and liberal to the church enterprises as you will find anywhere. They are much kinder to their pastor than he deserves. They have raised his salary $500 since coming here—$200 last year, $300 this. On Centenary subscriptions of $4,152, they have paid more than $2,000. We are all much pleased with our P. E., Brother Dorsey. Above all things, we need a Holy Ghost revival most. We are praying and working for it. D. W. BABB.

Strongs, Miss.

FROM SIDON, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: As I have not made a report of my work to the Advocate, I will now do so. I am now in my third year on the Sidon and Cruger charge. The two previous years have been good. All the financial claims were paid in full, and we went "over the top" in the Centenary drive. There was some increase in membership, but I felt that we needed a deeper work of grace. I secured Brother W. M. McIntosh, one of the general evangelists of our church, to hold a meeting for me at Sidon. We began the fourth Sunday in October, 1919, and continued eleven days. Brother McIntosh preached with great power, and the Spirit was present to save. As a result, fourteen joined the Methodist Church, eleven on profession of faith, and many promised to live better lives. It was a great meeting and it was good to be there. Sister McIntosh was with us also and did efficient and helpful work in the meeting. In token of appreciation of them and their good work they were given $300; and the parsonage was given a nice "pounding" and the pastor a suit of clothes. Brother McIntosh promised then to help me at Cruger. The meeting began the third Sunday in February and continued twelve days. Brother McIntosh seemed to be at his best. Brother R. L. Cooper, of Aberdeen, Miss., conducted the singing, and did it well. The interest was good from the beginning, and there was not a dull service. As a result, eighteen joined the Methodist Church, nine on profession of faith, and quite a number gave their names for membership in the Baptist Church. The town of Cruger was moved as, perhaps, never before. Some said that it was the best meeting they had ever attended, and we all felt that it was a great blessing to be there. Brother McIntosh and Brother Cooper were given $481, the pastor $60, and the Orphans' Home $25.

These are some of the blessings that have come to us and some of the things that have been done. I have a fine, loyal people to serve, thoughtful of their pastor and his family. Several times they have "pounded" the parsonage and at the first quarterly conference of the present year the stewards raised the pastor's salary from twelve to eighteen hundred dollars. I feel that we are growing. The Lord is with us and may He lead us on to victory. Yours fraternally,

J. J. GARNER.

Sidon, Miss.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Mrs. Annette B. Gladney, of Sardis, has been appointed Conference Superintendent of Intermediate-Senior department. Mrs. Jack Condrey, of Tupelo, has accepted the position of District Superintendent, of Intermediate-Senior work of the Aberdeen District. Mrs. J. W. Bounds, of Tupelo, is District Elementary Superintendent of the Aberdeen District.

Look out for the announcement of the conference for elementary workers to be held in Holly Springs early in June. Nothing less than the best of instruction will be given at this meeting of the teachers of our children.

More schools have settled upon the observance of Sunday School Day than last year. We should have at least 60 per cent of our schools study and give this program. Your committee ought to be appointed now to look after this matter. Send me your orders for programs. Ten per cent of the money raised in each district may be used to help finance that district organization.

No man has refused to do something toward increasing the membership of his school. Every preacher I have touched is eager to give his teachers the evangelistic studies furnished by the General Sunday School Board. The interest in evangelizing the people is growing, the spiritual tide is rising; may thousands be brought to a saving knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ in the next few weeks!

The General Sunday School Board has prepared a Decision Covenant Card to be used in helping the pastor keep a correct record of the decisions for Christ, for church membership, and for service. These cards can be secured by writing to Dr. C. D. Bulla, Nashville, Tenn. Write for the number you need—and write to-day.

Several of the class of young people at Potts Camp have stood the examination and earned two units on the first book in the course for leadership. Mrs. Fay Peel deserves the everlasting gratitude of the church for her excellent work. Thus the good work goes on.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

Last Sunday was spent at Mendenhall. The teachers from D'Lo came down and we had an interesting institute in the afternoon. Both schools are undertaking to be 100 per cent, and with their determination and energy they will do this.

We are getting fine replies in regard to the rapid tour of the districts. We will appreciate all the help we can get.

The following is the standing of the districts in teacher-training work. These numbers refer to the diplomas, and not to the singie units of work:

Brookhaven District—8 Incomplete Diplomas given by Whitworth College; Hattiesburg District—2 Incomplete Diplomas given by Broad Street Church; Jackson District—4 Incomplete Diplomas given by Millsaps College; Brandon, Miss.—1 Incomplete Diploma, 1 Gold Seal; Seashore District—None; Port Gibson District, Gloster—1 Incomplete Diploma, Oak Ridge, 2 Incomplete Diplomas, 1 Blue Seal, Washington, 3 Gold Seals, 1 Departmental Certificate; Newton District—Homewood charge, 7 Incomplete Diplomas, 1 Blue Seal, Montrose charge, 6 Incomplete Diplomas, 5 Blue Seals; Meridian District—22 Incomplete Diplomas, all from Meridian College.

This is a complete list of Diplomas granted in the Mississippi Conference. Does it not look pitifully small? Without Millsaps, Montrose, Whitworth College and Meridian College, we would have few indeed. The work at Homewood is under the leadership of Brother White; at Washington, Brother Cain; at Oak Ridge, Brother Wells; at Gloster, Brother Moore; at Broad Street, Miss Leech.

I am presenting this in order to tell you a short story and that story is contained in one sentence: "We are not able to bear the burden and heat of the day."

The following is a report of the Cane Ridge Sunday school for the second quarter: Mrs. W. W. Hopper, Secretary; Officers and Teachers, 6; On Cradle Roll, 14; Home Department, 16; all other departments, 23; Total, 59; Teacher Training Class, 1; Collected for Missions, $2.40; Collected for Supplies, $7.81; Collected for Orphans' Home, $2.11.

From this you can see that this school grades between 75 per cent and 85 per cent. I should like to get a report like this from each school in the Conference.

Don't forget our Conference-wide Elementary Conference is at Jackson, May 4-5. We have an unusually attractive program and it will be well worth your while to take this in.

The program for the Conference for the Elementary Sunday school workers, Capitol Street, May 4-5, has been arranged and will give a splendid opportunity to all workers to get helpful information and assistance. All presiding elders, pastors, superintendents and teachers are urged to attend. Each elementary superintendent will give from her own experience some phase of the work, and Miss Minnie E. Kennedy, of Nashville, Elementary Superintendent, will be present and bring us a message at every session; she will also assist in all discussions and conferences. This is a great opportunity and we should all grasp it. Let it not pass you by.

Mrs. Brame, Conference Elementary Superintendent, will be glad to visit your charge, provided she has an invitation.

Pray for the work and the workers.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

TO RELIEVE CATARRHAL DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES

If you have Catarrhal Deafness or head noises go to your druggist and get 1 ounce of parmint (double strength), and add to it ¼ pint of hot water and a little granulated sugar. Take 1 tablespoonful four times a day.

This will often bring quick relief from the distressing head noises. Clogged nostrils should open, breathing become easy, and the mucus stop dropping into the throat. It is easy to prepare, costs little and is pleasant to take. Anyone who has Catarrhal Deafness or head noises should give this prescription a trial. For sale by all druggists or sent on receipt of price 50c by Chas. A. Smith Drug Co., Atlanta, Ga.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She Mixed Sulphur with it to Restore Color, Gloss, Youthfulness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, you hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.—Adv.

Foley's Honey and Tar
COMPOUND

CLEARS THE THROAT of phlegm and mucus, stops that tickling, opens the air passages for easier breathing and coats the raw, inflamed surfaces with a healing, soothing medicine.

Grateful Father Tells What It Did

W. E. Curry, 130 Up 6th St., Evansville, Ind., writes: "I have a little girl 6 years who has a good deal of trouble with croup. I have used Foley's Honey and Tar Compound, giving it to her according to directions, and obtaining instant relief for her. My wife and I use it whenever bothered with a bad cold or cough, and I will say that it is the best remedy for a bad cold, cough, throat trouble or croup that I ever saw."

Parents who use Foley's Honey and Tar know it is safe and no harm will come even if an overdose should be given by accident. It tastes good and children like it. It won't upset the delicate stomachs of young children, delicate persons or elderly people.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitallty by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Resolutions of respect on the death of Mrs. T. B. White by the Woman's Missionary Auxiliary of Ruston, La.

The spirit of the Missionary Society should be that of sisters working together in love and good fellowship for others; as such, the Ruston women long felt the mother-care of the late beloved Mrs. White. Her sincere devotion to the society, as a whole, and to each individual member, will ever be a blessed memory and a noble inspiration to all who were associated with her. Her loyalty, her cheerful encouragement and her loving interest have been, and will continue to be, a guiding influence in the lives of those who knew her and worked by her side. We suffer an irreparable loss in her departure.

Resolved, That while we realize our great loss, we thank the Heavenly Father for the many years of her counsel, and for the devoted service to the Kingdom of Mrs. White.

Mrs. WALKER RISER.
Mrs. B. F. McCLURE.

Bossier City Busy.

The Bossier City Missionary Society was organized about two years ago with six members; now we have twenty-one active, wide-awake members with a full corps of conscientious officers, ready and willing to do their duty. Just lately we have bought several nice articles of furniture for the new parsonage, and will purchase more later. We are helping to beautify the church also.

We meet every Tuesday, twice for Bible study, once for Mission Study, and one meeting is devoted entirely to business. Our society is moving along nicely in every way. We have accomplished quite a good deal in two years, but we still are planning to do much more. Mrs. J. M. BOYKIN,

PSALMS 46:1.

He's helping me now—this moment,
Tho' I may not see it or hear,
Perhaps by a friend far distant,
Perhaps by a stranger near;
Perhaps by a written message,
Perhaps by the printed word—
In ways that I know and know not,
I have the help of the Lord.

He's keeping me now—this moment,
However I need it most,
Perhaps by a single angel,
Perhaps by a mighty host;
Perhaps by the chain that frets me,
Or the walls that shut me in—
In ways that I know and know not,
He keeps me from harm and sin.

He's guiding me now—this moment,
In pathways easy or hard,
Perhaps by a door wide open,
Perhaps by a door fast barred;
Perhaps by a joy withholden,
Perhaps by a gladness given—
In ways that I know and know not,
He's leading me up to heaven.

He's using me now—this moment,
And whether I go or stand,
Perhaps by a plan accomplished,
Perhaps when he stays my hand;
Perhaps by a word in season,
Perhaps by a silent prayer—
In ways that I think not and know not,
His labor of love I share.

Letters That Inspire Confidence

I wish very much that every reader of this paper could spend sufficient time in my office to read the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country. I have printed several hundreds of them in a bookiet, but I wish you could see the originals, for I would like to have you realize the wonderful results which they report in the relief of dyspepsia, indigestion, persistent headaches, rheumatism, kidney, bladder and liver diseases, uric acid poisoning and other curable conditions due to impure blood.

Before my own health was restored by Shivar Mineral Water and I purchased this Spring, and before I received all these letters from sufferers, I didn't take very much stock in advertisements like this. I therefore cannot blame you if you doubt, but, my friend, I am absolutely convinced that the Shivar Spring is the greatest restorative mineral spring ever discovered, not excepting the famous Spas of Europe. I have shipped this water to thousands of sufferers in all parts of the United States and they almost invariably report either permanent restoration or beneficial results. That is why I make the offer contained in the following letter. Sign it now and mail it.

Shivar Spring,
Box 17L, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:—I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and, if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

Eat Less and Take Salts for Kidneys

Take a Glass of Salts if your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.—Adv.

GEORGE STUART AT WEST POINT, MISS.

Friday, March 5, and Friday night particularly, were a memorable occasion for our church and people at West Point. At my earnest solicitation, George R. Stuart, of our First Church, Birmingham, came over and spoke to the men of our church that afternoon on the necessity of a new church building for our congregation and Sunday school here; and that night he addressed a full house again and raised $33,000 in subscriptions toward the project. As many already know, we have sorely needed a new building here for years, and two or three efforts have been made to get it under way; but the war, first and last, stopped it. Our people have felt, however, that the time was ripe now for the undertaking in spite of the high prices, but somehow or other it was hard to get started at it. But we felt sure that if we could only get him to come over, Dr. Stuart would be the man to give us the start. And he did! He completely captured the people who heard him, and he so enthused them that a number were led to subscribe more than they thought they could when they first went to the service. One man told me that Stuart talked him into giving $1000 more than he felt he was able to give, and others were led to make proportionate increases. This week we will follow up what Dr. Stuart did Friday night with an every-member canvass, and we expect to have a sufficient additional amount subscribed to enable us to start building at an early date and carry it through to completion. We propose to put up a $60,000 or $70,000 building, on a corner lot just across the street from our present property—and a more desirable site could not be secured in West Point.

It will not be out of place, I trust, for me to say a word or two here regarding Geo. R. Stuart. It is being said that he is now, since Dr. Jowett has gone back to England, the most popular preacher in America. Of course it would be hard to prove a statement like this, but it is doubtful if there is any other preacher in the whole land to-day who is drawing Sunday after Sunday, solely by the force of his own personality and simple preaching, such crowds as Stuart is. He has a very large auditorium in Birmingham and steadily for nearly four years he has filled it to overflowing, with the exception of a few very bad Sundays. And I happen to know that he does not depend upon advertising, sensationalism, fine choirs, or any questionable methods for drawing the multitudes. He is one of the biggest-hearted men I ever knew. No man was more beloved in the Holston Conference when he came, among the preachers, and all took a special pride in him. In turn he loves everybody and is ever ready to extend a helping hand. While a pastor in Knoxville, he got Len Broughton there at the First Baptist Church, only a stone's throw from his own church, and did all he could to add to his success there. Similarly, he has got John McNeill, the noted Scotch preacher, to come to one of the leading Presbyterian churches in Birmingham. But best of all, Dr. Stuart is doing something more than merely drawing the crowds to his church; he is working hard for the salvation of sinners and he is having conversions Sunday after Sunday. The last Sunday night in February, that miserably cold night, I had the pleasure of attending his service in Birmingham; and in spite of the decreased attendance because of the weather, he had eight professions of faith at the close of the service. In these days of much church machinery and great stress on organization, it is very refreshing to witness such results as Geo. Stuart is having from the simple preaching of the Gospel.

Reliable Information

All American women know of the great success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in restoring to health women who suffered from ailments peculiar to their sex, yet there are some who are skeptical and do not realize that all that is claimed for it is absolutely true—if they did, our laboratory would not be half large enough to supply the demand, though today it is the largest in the country used for the manufacture of one particular medicine.

The Facts contained in the following two letters should prove of benefit to many women:

Buffalo, N. Y.—"I suffered with organic inflammation and displacement. When lifting I had such pain and bearing down that I was not able to stand up, and it hurt me to walk or go up or down stairs. I was going to a doctor without any results and he said the safest thing would be to have an operation. I met a lady who told me she had three operations and was not well until she took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

I felt relief after taking two bottles of Vegetable Compound and I kept on with it until I was cured. I always use Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills and they are fine. Everything used to turn sour on my stomach and the Liver Pills relieved that."—Mrs. A. ROGERS, 593 Fargo Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

Sacramento, Calif.—"I had organic trouble and had such terrible pain and swelling in the lower part of my side that I could not stand on my feet or even let the bed clothes touch my side. I gave up my work thinking I would not be able to go back for months. My mother advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as it had saved her life at one time, and it put me in a wonderful condition in a couple of weeks, so I can keep on working. I work in a department store and have to stand on my feet all day and I do not have any more pains. I surely recommend your Vegetable Compound to all my friends and you may use these facts as a testimonial."—BERTHA J. PARKER, 3320 M St., Sacramento, Calif.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

TOLERANCE.

Most of us are so set on having our own way that we are likely to forget that other people are similarly constituted. The result frequently is that we lose patience with those who differ from us, assuming that they necessariiy hold erroneous views. As a matter of fact, they may; yet it is altogether possible that we ourselves are in error. Tolerance for the views of others does not at all mean a confession of fault on our part; it is simply a big-hearted, brotherly way of showing that we have regard for people as well as opinions. It is a weak friendship that cannot withstand the shock of divergent views.

HOW TO HOLD A JOB.

The first thing in holding a joh is to get one—like catching a hare before cooking him; that, however, is a rather easy thing to do in these days of a surplus of work and a shortage of workers. The second thing is to do the work that goes along with the job—there are no workless johs. Clocks were made to measure time, not toil; and pay checks are merely a concession to the habit we have formed of eating regularly, living in houses and wearing clothes. One is a convenience and the other a necessity; but they are poor things hy which to regulate our activities. The day's work is never done, no matter what the clock says, and not many successful men get pay for half they do. The clock-watcher and the pay-drawer are not holding their jobs; their jobs are holding them. Work is a thing of the heart and not of the hands. No man ever gets tired of the thing he loves; he may "grow weary in it, but not of it." When our jobs become a part of ourselves, we cannot lose them. The "faithful servant" never tremhles as the end of the year draws nigh.

PHYSICAL VIGOR AS AN ASSET.

"A sound mind in a sound hody," was an expression the ancients used to convey their idea of the perfect man. Assuming that the word "mind" inciudes the spiritual attrihutes, it is possible for us to learn a much-needed lesson from this conception of the long-ago. It is not always a sin to be sick—though it sometimes is—but it is usually a misfortune. The connection hetween the physical and the psychical is not very clear, but it is evident that the relationship is close. While it is certain that the body does not control the mind—the reverse being nearer the truth—it is well estahlished that physical health is an aid to intellectual activity and to spiritual serenity. We suspect that physical vigor is one of the elements that go to make up the indefinable thing we speak of as "personal magnetism;" it may be more than that—an influential factor in the still more mysterious thing we speak of as "personality." At any rate, physical vigor is an asset in life that most of us have altogether too little of. It can frequently be had for the taking, since it is composed chiefly of fresh air and a reasonable amount of physical exercise, and we can have as much of both as we will.

THE PEACE TREATY.

No matter what the American people want, it is self-evident that the Senate is not in favor of the ratification of the Peace Treaty without amendments or reservations that will unequivocally protect the United States against interpretations of the document that might involve the question of national sovereignty. After many months of dehate, the Treaty was finally rejected and returned to the President for such action as he might see fit to take in the premises. What that action will be, has not yet been made clear. The indications at present are that it will become an issue in the approaching presidential election, and that the people themselves will be asked to determine the policy of the nation with reference to it. We believe the people want the Treaty ratified; but we helieve they will uphold their representatives who have insisted upon some kind of reservation that would eliminate any possibility of a misunderstanding as to what the United States really undertakes to do. The view that President Wilson will consider the issue of sufficient importance to justify his standing for a third term does not seem to us to be well founded. It is not likely that the people will overthrow the precedent that was estahlished in the very beginning of the nation's history; and the personal unpopularity of the President is prohably sufficient to make it impossihle for him to be nominated, even if he should desire it. We think there can he no douht hut that he will go down in history as one of our great presidents, but it will take the perspective of history to show how large he has loomed in the life of the country—and of the world.

EASTER.

The Resurrection was not an event, but an epoch. The open sepulchre was not a dark cavern into which men might peer, with wonder in their hearts that the grave had given up its dead, but a bright window through which they might see the glorious light of immortality. It was more than the negation of death; it was the assurance of life. We sometimes think of it as a mystery—but it was a revelation. It was the confirmation of hope by the unassailable testimony of fact. "If a man die, shall he live again?" is no longer a question, but an affirmation. The grave is no longer the vault of lost love, but the wicket gate of triumphant faith. The sorrow of separation is swallowed up in the joy of what is to be. Since Christ rose from the dead, tears have given way to singing, and weeping to worship. As the angelic announcement, "The Lord is risen," falls upon our ears on this Easter Day, our hearts respond with joy unfeigned, "The Lord is risen indeed."

ROMAN CATHOLIC GROWTH.

According to the official figures of the Catholic Directory, made puhlic last week, the total membership of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States and its possessions is 27,650,000, an increase of 186,224 last year. The well-known method of enumeration of the Roman Catholic Church makes it improbable that these figures are too small; the indications, therefore, are that the Catholics have shared with the Protestants a small comparative gain. This view is further borne out hy the fact that the increase in the numher of priests of religious orders is put at 94, making a total at the present time of 21,019. This small net gain would seem to indicate that the shortage of ministers is even more serious with the Cathoiics than with the Protestants.

THE HOUSING PROBLEM.

Efforts are being made in many cities to overcome the serious situation that has arisen through the shortage of houses. In Chicago, according to press reports, it was thought that the prohiem might he solved hy the erection of "ready-built," portable houses that would serve temporarily until permanent huiidings couid he provided. The Carpenters' Union, through its president, has announced, however, that no such program will be permitted. The lahor officials contend that every stroke of work on a house must be done in Chicago, regardless of the urgent need of immediate relief. We cannot conceive of a more dangerous policy on the part of the iabor organizations. To say nothing of the manifest unfairness of their attitude, such determination on their part is likeiy to hring ahout a reaction in puhiic opinion that will result in a loss of ali that labor has gained through many years of effort. Unless a spirit of co-operation can he developed in this country, a willingness on the part of ali groups to consider the welfare of others, a serious situation is ahead of us. The tyranny of iabor is as unhearable as the tyranny of capital; neither one will he endured forever.

A DANGEROUS PROPAGANDA.

We cannot insist too strongly that the present propaganda in favor of a liberal interpretation of the prohibition laws in favor of light wines and beer is exceedingly dangerous.—It assumes, to hegin with, that the Eighteenth Amendment was forced upon an unwilling puhlic—an assumption as false as it is specious. We venture to say that no other amendment to the Constitution was ever so thoroughly discussed or so hitterly opposed; and yet it was ratified hy an overwhelming majority of the sovereign States. We believe in the utmost freedom of speech in the discussion of puhlic questions, and we have not the slightest disposition to deny any man the right to express his opinion on matters of governmental policy; hut it is one thing to oppose the enactment of a proposed law and quite another to advocate the disregard of that law after it has been put upon the statute books. The one is a legitimate exercise of the rights of citizenship; the other is a direct attack upon the validity of constituted authority. The opponents of the enforcement of the prohibition law are sowing seed that may conceivahly produce a harvest of anarchy and revolution. After all, the plea for wine and heer is simply the old plea for the regulation of the liquor traffic; and experience has proved that it is as impossihle to "regulate" that traffic as it is for a leopard to change his spots. Prohibition has already proved its economic and moral value; it would be a tragedy to destroy or weaken it hy non-enforcement.

THE EASTER DAWN.

By Uiysses Grant Foote

The East, expectant, waits the coming day;
Grows broader with the hope and prophecy
Of fuller life and new.
Her rosy cheek supernal power reveals;
A purple robe her form and grace conceals;
And yet with light shot through.
Her bosom glows with breathing life anew;
And pulsing tides of life go coursing through
Her arteries of blue.
In all her flecking scenes of sensive air,
Full flushed with radiance divinely fair
She bids the night adieu.

The city wakes with call from minaret,
And flush of dawn beyond high Olivet!
The vales with dew are wet.
Her streets from gate to gate and wall to wall
Soon fill with her dark children at the call
To rise and toil and fret.
The tented caravans beyond the gate,
Stir with the dawn, then all expectant wait—
They wait! For yet, for yet—
Tense silence broods o'er old Gethsemane.
And wraps the Kedron in its mystery
Of dreams and sad regret.

But yet that dread of death men most endure—
Of Judgement Hall, of Cross, of sepulture—
Shifts with the spreading light
From dawn to morn and morn to zenith high.
The King his throne assumes and shadows fly;
The world is full of Light!
Down in the vale the groan becomes the song
Where chanting hosts triumphant march along
Out of the gloom of night.
They march and sing their Allelula song;
With faces to the East they chant along
And hail their Lord, their Light.

UNIFICATION.

By Bishop Collins Denny,
Member of the Joint Commission on Unification.

The Transmission of the Plan.

The Joint Commission on the Unification of American Episcopal Methodism did not recommend for adoption by the General Conferences the proposed Constitution for the Methodist Church; it simply transmitted it for "consideration and decision." Six of the commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, did not vote to transmit this Constitution, and several others voted to transmit on the express condition that they should enter on the minutes an explanation of their votes. There was a public and general agreement that the vote to transmit was not an indorsement of the plan, and that any member of the Joint Commission should be free to advocate or oppose the plan when it came before the churches for "consideration and decision." Why then should six members of our Commission vote against this mild and cautious resolution?

For himself alone, without involving any of his colleagues, this writer makes answer.

In May, 1911, a meeting was held in Chattanooga of representatives of three Methodisms: the two Episcopal Methodisms and the Methodist Protestant Church. Two significant resolutions were adopted at that meeting, one at the very beginning of our conversations, the other at the close. These resolutions were quite similar, and the second was adopted to "emphasize" the first. It was specifically set forth that the "resolutions were adopted for the purpose of guarding against the misconception by our people or by the public of the significance to be attached to the conclusions reached." The second resolution declared that "in no sense are these suggestions a plan, but merely the result of our explorations in search of a basis of union. It has not been possible to think through even the questions that have come before us."

When the result of the deliberations at Chattanooga was submitted to the General Conference of 1914, with the request for more specific instructions, many, perhaps most of the delegates, inferred that the report was indorsed by the men who had thrown it together, and this in spite of the above-mentioned resolutions which were a part of the report. This report was not approved by Bishop Wilson, who, because of sickness, left Chattanooga on the second day of the meeting, nor by the writer. A member of our Commission, who, at Louisville, voted to transmit the proposed Constitution, said that he had voted for the action taken at Oklahoma because he did not suppose it possible for Bishop Wilson, to whose name he courteously joined the name of this writer, to be a party to the transmission of a paper he did not approve. He further stated that he had never noticed the resolutions referred to above, and further, that he doubted whether other delegates to that General Conference had any knowledge of them. If even men of thought and ability fail to take account of emphasized statements, can the busy man burdened with daily cares be expected to discriminate between "transmit" and "approve," between "submit for consideration" and "recommend for adoption?" One such experience should put a man on his guard. (Minutes of the Joint Federation Commission held at Chattanooga, pages 14, 26, 28.) With that experience in mind this writer could not by his vote to transmit leave it open to multitudes to infer that he approved the proposed Constitution. In a matter so grave, so serious, affecting as it does the very life of our Methodism, he could do no otherwise than to vote against transmission. From the beginning of these negotiations he had been a member of the several Commissions charged with the consideration of these important questions. He continues to believe that what neither Commission would recommend ought not to be transmitted. The Associated Press report sent from Louisville and published the morning after the adjournment of the Joint Commission misled our people and misled some of our church editors.

The Associated Press, careful as in general it is, trustworthy as we so often find it, published, in the words of one of our careful church editors, "that the Joint Commission on Unification had unanimously agreed upon a plan for the unification of the two Methodisms, and had sent the same up to the General Conference for its adoption."

Some Reasons for Opposition.

In assigning some of the reasons for his opposition to the proposed Constitution, the writer well knows that as one of the minority it is his misfortune that nothing will be conceded to personal or official influence. He knows that he will almost certainly be charged with narrowness, prejudice, the persistence of supposed early associations, and especially of unfriendliness to the negro, and the last in spite of long years spent in varied service gladly given on every possible occasion. He must win every inch of ground by the use of the arms of fact and reason, and that at a time when the multitude is too impatient either to undergo the toil and pain of the investigation of facts and the application of reason, or to give serious attention to those who have not lost faith in reason based on facts and principles. He does not need to be told that the action of so respectable and respected a body as the Joint Commission must have great effect. He is not now learning for the first time how strong is the bias in favor of any system which promises to put an end to the work of inquiring, at once and forever, and to give momentary relief from the pain of doubt and the discomfort of distrust. Long years ago he warned his students against the common and fatal fallacy due to "the bias of impatient impulse," using from year to year these words: "To examine and re-examine, to reason and reflect, to hesitate, and to decide with caution, to be always open to evidence, and to acknowledge that, after all, we are liable to error; all this is, on many accounts, unacceptable to the human mind, both to its diffidence and to its pride, to its indolence, its dread of anxious cares, and to its love of self-satisfied and confident repose." (Bacon's Essays, Whatley's edition, p.142.)

Southern Commission Yields Its Base.

It was not reasonably to be expected that any man, nor either Commission, would begin these negotiations with crystallized convictions. As light shone forth in pregnant suggestions, the careful, the thoughtful, the wise commissioner was expected to receive and develop the issue. Neither was it to be expected that there would be a landslide, as one of our commissioners expressed it, with the admission of his colleagues that the description was accurate, that the mountain would tumble into the valley and change the whole face of the country. At Oklahoma City, in 1914, our General Conference unanimously "recommended" "that the colored membership of the various Methodist bodies be formed into an independent organization holding fraternal relations with the reorganized and united church." (Journal, 1914, page 264.) At the Savannah meeting of the Commission, after lengthy discussion, on the suggestion of our Northern brethren, our Commission by a large majority agreed to a Negro Associate Regional Conference with ten delegates in the General Conference, this Associate Regional Conference to be open to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, but should the last named church decline to unite with the negroes of the church, the contributions of our church in the territory now predominantly occupied by us, instead of being taken for the work of the Freedmen's Aid Society, were to be permitted to go to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. At the St. Louis meeting a committee of eight reported in favor of twenty-six negro delegates in the General Conference. By a small majority our Commission at first agreed to this, and then concluded to return to the Savannah recommendation. The Northern Commission withdrew its offer made at Savannah, and asked for a negro "representation in the General Conference in proportion to their full membership," but "not to exceed 5 per cent of the entire membership of the General Conference."

At that point the Joint Commission adjourned. The General Conference at Atlanta, with all the facts before it, "reaffirmed the action of the General Conference of 1914, and declared our readiness to continue negotiations on the basis approved by that action." (Journal 1918, page 197.) At Louisville it was agreed to "submit for consideration and decision" a Constitution giving to the Negro Regional Conference a membership in the General Conference "of not less than thirty nor more than forty-two," provided that such membership "shall not exceed 5 per cent of the total membership of the General Conference." No more was yieded because there was no more to ask. Thus by short though swift steps the desired goal of negro proportional representation was reached, reached by the continual yielding of our Commission. From a "colored membership of the various Methodist bodies formed into an independent organization holding fraternal relations with the reorganized and united church" to an incorporated colored membership with proportional representation in the General Conference is a long way to travel, as it is a giving way of basic factors.

Some Reasons Assigned for Acceptance of Historic Position of the North.

Many reasons for this yielding of our position have been given. First, it is claimed that it is the proper attitude of a Christian to give this recognition to our negro brethren. If this be true, it should immediately and forever settle the question. Whatever the cost of historic position, to reverence for the wisdom of our fathers, to preferences in social, state and church relations, to desire for racial purity, to natural inclination for governmental guidance by those to whom Almighty God has given by age-long and unbroken development the greater experience and intelligence, those who propose to follow our Lord must unconditionally and immediately surrender to whatever Christianity demands.

Such a surrender must, of course, be called for on grounds of certainty discoverable and discovered by clear, consistent, unconfused thought which lays open and applies universal and necessary truth. We are not called upon to consider whether a color line drawn at any point through the sphere of human relations be kind and just and Christian. The sole question now before us is where an admittedly necessary color line shall be drawn. This Constitution draws a broad and indelible color line. It is dyed alternately black and white. On what reasonable, moral, Christian ground can it be claimed that our negro brethren are to be constitutionally shut out of all other white conferences, quarterly, district, annual, regional, and on that identical ground are to be admitted to the General Conference, and to be admissible on their option to the church conference? The Regional Conferences in the United States are by caption set off from our colored brethren and by specification are geographically divided. The colored membership, without the slightest regard to these geographical divisions, but embracing them all, spreads from sea to sea. Our Northern brethren, in providing for their negro membership, accustomed for many long years to this disregard of geography, to this clearly marked color line, did not so much as intimate a desire that the negro Annual Conferences should be included in the Regional Jurisdiction in which geographically they fall. The logical principle of division applied consistently to the white membership, that principle being a combination of geography and numbers, or of geography determined by numbers, is discarded when it comes to the negro membership. Color, color alone, determines that seventh Regional Conference, and geographical lines are simply swept aside. This writer disclaims any power to read the thoughts of other men, but in common with his fellows he can look on their actions.

In this particular constitutional provision the action is that the negro is excluded from membership in every white conference in the United States for which provision is made with the solitary exception of the General Conference, and, if the negro should claim the right, of the church conference. The Joint Commission of fifty members gave fifty votes for these exclusions. In this action in the third article of the Constitution, and as some claim in the two preceding articles, were these fifty men guilty of unkind, unjust, un-Christian dealing with their colored brethren? How can it be made plain to one who is truly willng to be taught that it ls a manifestation of Christianity to exclude the negro from all other conferences, while Christianity demands that he shall be included in the General Conference?

Every student of constitutional history knows that surplusage in the written instrument is a hindrance, not a help. In this proposed Constitution Article III, Section 2 (b) and (c) are identical, with the exception of the captions, the use of "said" in (b) and of "any of these" in (c), of a comma in (b) and a semi-colon in (c). Of the brother who had as much to do with drafting this instrument as any other member of the Joint Commission (perhaps his was the shaping hand) I asked the reason for this unusual if not unique feature. Without hesitating a second he answered that members in foreign countries would not like to be referred to in the section of the Constitution that described the Negro Regional Conference. The same reduplication and for the same reason is found in Article V., Section 1, (b) and (c). No State Constitution in the South, no provision, legislative or municipal, for separate accommodation of the races, paints more deeply and draws more tightly the belt that marks the color line. "My brother and I," in this Constitution, are we connected or simply conjoined, or are we really disjoined?

The color line in this Constitution is broader, but we need not now follow it further.

2. It is alleged that it was not legally possible for our Northern brethren to agree to any other provision for their colored membership than for proportional representation in the General Conference, and that to decline to yield to the legal necessity was to prevent unification. Aside from the fact that the Commission was not appointed to effect unification at any price, or to waive a statement that may be distasteful to some of my brethren (and it is my purpose not to use even one displeasing word), at such a price as this, it must not be forgotten that the man on the Commission occupying the highest judicial position proposed a plan which he denominated: "A Methodist proclamation of emancipation, a veritable Magna Charta." In an extended argument he concluded that no right of property would be affected, that "the church can by a Constitutional amendment withdraw from them (the negroes) their right to sit and vote in the General Conference," that the plan he proposed was "consistent with the Constitutions of the States and with the Constitution of the United States, and is a proclamation of absolute freedom for the colored race." (Savannah report, pages 354, 355, 356.) True, at least one other lawyer on the Commission denied the soundness of these views; but where the judges differed, there was a broad way for the Joint Commission to pass through. The fact is that another plan of unification was proposed as legal, and that our Commission did not press its acceptance.

3. A few members of the Commission referred to the fact that at any time from Cuba, from Brazil, from Africa our church might have some negro delegates in its General Conference. At the time no answer was made to this supposed argument, because no answer was needed.

There would be no negro problem in this country if only visiting negroes were concerned, nor would there be a problem if the number living among us were a few hundred or a few thousand. The presence of many millions, most of whom reside in the South, makes the problem; nor does the presence among those millions of a number of thoroughly educated and a larger number of undoubtedly truly moral and Christian men and women really change the problem. It is the enormous mass and its ignorance and character with which we have to deal, not with the foreign visitor, nor with a small number of our own home folk.

The supposed necessity for the proposed Constitutional provision does not exist, nor does that provision offer a rational solution of the difficulty.

A Lost Opportunity.

Needed and efficient service to 12,000,000 home-born and home-loving fellow citizens offered to a proposed united American Methodism the most golden opportunity with which any church ever stood face to face. And they have for us the admitted claim of preferred creditors to highest service. Without the slightest purpose to cast a stone at those whose ships gave the ancestors of the negro free passage paid by the sale of the cargo, or at those whose homes and fields furnished the unremunerated sphere of their toil, it must be admitted that the responsibility for their presence among us falls alike on England and America, and in America on the North no less than on the South. Their presence among us and their need make an appeal that must be felt and acknowledged by every heart that can be touched by tenderness, by every soul open to sympathy.

What use does this Constitution make of that opportunity? Twelve million voices like the sound of many waters, none the less audible because unconsciously uttered, called so pleadingly to the old ship of Zion: "You are opposite the port, anchor Methodists, anchor." A million and a half Methodists are among that multitude, our own included. On board that ship stood 303,000 negro Northern Methodists, yet not a hand touched the anchor chains, nor reached for the halyards. Past the port sailed the ship, dropping but a feeble "recommendation" for "an equitable provision for financial support." In season and out of season this Southern voice called for recognition of that mass of 12,000,000, and the sole response was the echo of his own voice.

One in Forty, and That One Not Helped.

There can be no doubt of the sincerity of the majority of the Commission to care for the colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church. No question of sincerity is raised, or can be raised; but sincerity is no test of truth. Does this Constitution provide for the welfare of the negro? Of the 12,000,000 negroes in the country, about 1,500,000 of them in independent self-governing Methodist churches, this Constitution covers only the 303,000 negro members in the Methodist Episcopal Church. It is interested in one, only one, out of forty negroes; for the remaining thirty-nine of the forty it does nothing, literally nothing. The recommendation with which the Constitution closes goes no further than to suggest "an equitable provision for the financial support of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church by setting apart a designated amount * * * for work among colored people."

This is but a recommendation, whose force is feeble, whose result will possibly be formal. But what is done for this one of the forty? He is placed on the heart of the church and at the same time shut off from his fellow negroes. His status is fixed, and no success he may meet can increase the trouble-making privilege for which he has so strenuously contended, as no failure can diminish it. There he stands, fixed in the General Conference, never less than thirty, never more than forty-two. With generous provision for all his financial needs, with the incentive to enthusiastic work abated, if not destroyed, with no room to develop independence of character, no opportunity to cultivate race consciousness, no call to make his color a badge of honor, no beckoning of a pure ambition to largest service among his needy fellows, he is placed where he cannot grow; he can only slowly dwindle, but never reach the vanishing point. He can, however, harm the church of which he is an organic part. His position is not best for his white brothers; it is not best for him. He makes no nexus even with the other Methodists of his race.

Fifty years ago the Methodist Episcopal Church began its work among the negroes. That church intended to be kind to him and was abundantly generous. The negro would have been less than human had he rejected this kindness or refused the alms-laden hand held out to him. What has been the result of fifty years of intended kindness and lavish generosity?

Let me quote the words uttered four years ago by one of our commissioners, now an enthusiastic advocate of this Constitution: "While the older memories—ante-bellum contentions, the hate of slavery, the bitterness of war, the antagonisms of reconstruction—have lost much of their vividness, or else lie here and there pocketed like stagnant pools only to be ruffled now and then by vagrant gusts of moldy wind out of the past, the immediate constructive achievements of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the uplift of the negro are vitally a part of its present thought and attitude. * * * We become acutely conscious that somehow the color line has cut its dividing way into the church of Christ, that branch of it that said with the emphasis of its history that there should be none. * * * The American negro * * * has shown an amazing power of adaptation and has moved forward to an astonishing degree. But this power of adaptation and this progress are far from meaning * * * that even in the church of Christ he is not still as one sitting by the beautiful gate of the temple stretching forth begging hands. * * * The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, set to themselves their own colored membership, organized them, and ordained their first bishops, and the friendliness that has existed since, the multiplied opportunities for co-operation without friction and without the occasion of arousing possible antagonisms, have convinced the church that what they did was really for the best interests of both churches and both races."

Success, though a common measure, is not always the best measure. Use this measure on the negro work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with all the wealth and prestige of that church given to that work, and then on the independent negro Methodist churches pinched by poverty, and read the results.

So far as this Constitution is concerned it will promote irritation in the church and beyond without benefit to the negro in its midst. He keeps the crutch he needs to discard if he is ever to come to personal and collective independence. At the same time he is given a position in the church that will inevitably rouse the suspicion and awaken the animosity of the people of the South. The civilization of that section of our country, the most numerous undiluted Anglo-Saxon population in the world, has been maintained only by racial laws, constitutional, legislative, and municipal. Give it whatever name you please, racial instinct, blind conviction, a dead past, wise and statesmanlike prevision and provision, there is no more fundamental fact to be found in our being than that if the South is to maintain its civilization, racial separation is a necessity. The South believes now, as it has ever believed, that intermarriage of the races must be interdicted, that separate schools must be maintained, that separate accommodations must be provided. There is no such fact as a dead past. "Every man is an omnibus in which all his ancestors ride," though some may occupy an uncomfortably crowded seat or be gasping for lack of their accustomed air. History, sad, calamitous, tragic history, has written its psychology in the people of the South, and an attempted change in any factor of the multitudinously complex question of the relation of the races touches that psychology at its most sensitive point. This Constitution proposes proportional representation of the Northern negro membership in the supreme law-making body of the church. Does any one doubt the inevitable result that would follow if this were proposed in the State? The principles underlying the constitutions of churches and those on which constitutions of States rest may at some points be diverse, but in legislation they are identical.

In the South no position has been more carefully, continuously or persistently guarded than the racial control of its legislation. Can the church without probability of disaster to its work introduce at this point a contradictory principle? It is baseless and unsubstantial imagination to expect the State to accept this principle. It is folly to attempt to reconcile these contradictories. Surely we must (momentarily at least) have forgotten that basic truth so solemnly stated over the signature of every Southern delegate in 1844: "The legislation of the church in conflict with that of the State, church policy attempting to control public opinion and social order, must generate an amount of hostility to the church impossible to overcome, and slowly but certainly to diminish both the means and the hope of usefulness and extension on the part of the church." To try to break the force of this principle by saying the times are different is not only illogical, it is inept. The inability to square the circle is independent of time and space.

True this is a day when some men scorn to put their feet in the racks of their forefathers, to snatch a phrase from Burke. True this is a day wherein many lack profound reverence for the wisdom of our fathers who have left us the inheritance of so happy a Constitution and so flourishing a church, and what is a thousand times more valuable, the treasury of the maxims and principles which founded the one and obtained the other, again to dip my cup into the lake of Burke's wisdom. True the desire to gain a goal may for the time blind men's eyes to patent facts, may seem to shrink to littleness the wisdom and stature of the very forefathers who built the home now our heritage; but sober second thought must surely effect a change. Methodism in the South is too dear, too great, too important, its outlook is too full of the prospect of glorious service to be risked, if not to be thrown away, even for the delusive phantom of a Protestant world church.

Rocks Ahead.

By this Constitution the members sustain the same relation to the church. No one joins the local congregation, though there he has his church home, he joins the church. It is his privilege to take his certificate of membership from one community to another, from one congregation to another, just as has been the law and custom from the beginning. It will be possible, it will be legal for the negro members in good standing, singly or in groups, to present their church certificates to any pastor of any congregation, and the pastor who declines to receive it will be guilty of maladministration and will be open to its penalties; worse, he will be false to his vows. It will be said, indeed, it has been said already, that no negro will attempt to connect himself with a white congregation. Who can promise that, and what is the guarantee of his promise? Facts are often stubborn, intractable. There are 1,600 negro members of otherwise white Methodist churches in New England, and 2,000 such members in the New York East Conference. This fact was given in the argument of one of the negro members of the Joint Commission during the discussion of proportional representation. The law of the proposed Methodist Church permits any member in good standing to transfer his membership, and properly protects him in the exercise of this right. The law of the State forbids any one of either race to ride in a coach provided for travelers of the other race. Do we have no instances of breaches of this State law? Shall we have no instances of compliance with the church law? If men act without law, against law, who says they will not act within law, in compliance with law? If he says it, on what sure ground does he make his assertion?

A SUPERANNUATE EVANGELIZING.

By Rev. T. W. Adams.

It is not easy to break the habits of a lifetime. So when Rev. J. V. Bennett, our Conference evangelist, told me that he was to begin a revival meeting at Williamsburg on the 29th day of February, it stirred me, and I accepted his invitation to go with him. I did not expect to preach; I am too old and worn-out for that. I thought I might do some good by looking after the odds and ends of the meeting. It occurred to me that Bennett's theology might need censoring. Anyway, I love Bennett, and need more religion myself; so I went with him. I am glad I did so. The occasion was helpful to me.

We landed at Bassfield, where we detrained, at 6:28 p.m., Saturday. This point is twelve miles from Williamsburg. Brother R. T. Pickett and his son, Robert, met and conveyed us safe and sound, in his Ford car, to his hospitable parsonage home. It was a decidedly uncertain, spicy and interesting drive. It took us three hours to make the twelve-mile trip. It is no wonder that it took three hours to make this trip; the wonder is that we made it at all. My! the mud and the water! It rained, and it rained. If it had not been that Pickett was a master of the Ford car, we would never have made it. He knows everything about the car, from the crank to the exhaust pipe. He made the thing go at his will. He pulled off some marvelous stunts in that drive. Darkness, rain, mud, gullies, stumps and ruts—nothing bothered Pickett. I wondered if he couldn't make it climb a tree. He told the car to go, and it went. He almost spilled Bennett and me out in the mud once or twice. I greatly admired his skill. If I could handle a car like Pickett, I would most certainly buy one.

The Ford behaved finely, except once. About six or seven miles from Williamsburg it took a notion to stop, and stop it did. No coaxing would it heed. For pure, downright stubbornness, the Ford is the limit. If it doesn't see fit to go, it just won't go. You may pet it and coax it, but right there it stays in profound complacency of mind. If you fuss and fume, it pays no attention to you. It just holds its own, and stays right there. Pickett and Robert got out in the mud and water and pushed, trying to make the thing go. Bennett got out and helped to push, but to no avail whatever. They told me not to get out, that I was too old and worn-out to do such things; so I wrapped my raincoat about me, and watched proceedings with a good deal of anxiety. Finally Pickett concluded that the machinery was screwed up too tight. He unscrewed the taps, and loosened up things. This was what was needed. The car made the home-stretch without a bobble. When we reached the parsonage, supper and a good cup of coffee made us forget all of our troubles.

I stayed two days, enjoying Bennett's excellent sermons, and the gracious hospitality of Brother and Sister Bennett. The fellowship of the saints refreshed me greatly. It is certainly fine to be a superannuate. I am enjoying every day of it. If I had only known it was so good, I might have been tempted to superannuate sooner.

Jim Bennett is the finest evangelist I know. He is sound to the core in his spirit and preaching. It did me good to be with him. But he is some talker. My! how he does talk! The bad weather shut us up in the house a good part of the time, and Bennett talked, and I listened. Finally I quoted the following doggerel:

"A smart old owl lived in an oak.
The more he saw the less he spoke;
The less he spoke the more he heard—
Why don't you do like that old bird?"

I believe it did Bennett some good. If not, I am afraid his is a hopeless case. Bennett talked when we were awake, but I talked when we were asleep. That is what Bennett said. He said I discussed at some length some questions of church law. It may be true; I can't say. We had been reading and discussing Bishop Moore's article in the Nashville Advocate on "Bishops Not General Superintendents of the Church." I may have been analyzing that in my sleep. Henry, if I were as strong a man as Dr. R. A. Meek, and could write as well, I would expose the fallacy of that article. I see it clearly but I don't know how to make others see it. I am still busy writing insurance.

Brookhaven, Miss.

THE SOUTHERN METHODIST LEAGUE.

On Friday, March 12, there assembled at the Chisca Hotel, at Memphis, a company of earnest and representative Methodist ministers and laymen from Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana, about one hundred having been invited, to consider the menace to the Southern Methodist Church and to the South involved in the plan of Unification that has been transmitted to the General Conferences of the Northern and Southern bodies.

The brethren organized themselves into a convention by the election of the Hon. Herbert Holmes, of Senatobia, Miss., as Chairman, and Rev. E. Nash Broyles, of Clarksdale, Miss., as Secretary.

Judge J. H. McGowan, of Water Valley, Miss., a member of the Joint Commission on Unification, delivered an impressive address, giving an account of the proceedings of the Commission and the effect of the plan it transmitted, should it be adopted by the two churches.

Rev. E. Nash Broyles made a spirited address, analyzing the plan with the aid of maps and carefully prepared statistics.

The convention effected a permanent organization under the constitution which it adopted, by the election of the following officers: Dr. R. A. Meek, Sardis, Miss., President; Rev. L. D. Hamilton, Covington, Tenn., Vice President; Rev. E. Nash Broyles, Clarksdale, Miss., Secretary; Mr. J. D. Turley, a banker of Coldwater, Miss., Treasurer; these with the following brethren forming the Executive Committee: Hon. Herbert Holmes, a leading lawyer of Senatobia, Miss., Rev. James H. Felts, Columbus, Miss., Hon. J. D. Magruder, a leading lawyer and planter of Tunica, Miss., Dr. L. L. Minor, a planter of Memphis, Tenn., and Mr. Paul Renshaw, an advertising expert of Memphis, Tenn.

Under the constitution of the Southern Methodist League, "The executive committee is instructed to take such steps as the means at its disposal may warrant to disseminate information among Southern Methodists, with a view to giving them a clear conception of the disintegrating influences now threatening to destroy our church, and arousing them to a proper appreciation of the gravity of the situation."

The Memphis organization is Chapter 1 of the Southern Methodist League, and it invites Southern Methodists throughout the Connection to organize similar Chapters at central points to be affiliated with it, sharing fully in the direction and management, the only condition of membership being that those joining must be members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, above 16 years of age, and they must fully subscribe to the avowed purposes of the League.

Among other actions taken, the Memphis League adopted the following resolutions:

"Whereas, the majority of the Joint Commission on Unification of American Methodism has at last, after years of negotiations, transmitted, without indorsement, to the General Conference for consideration, a plan of unification; and

Whereas, this plan violates the instructions of our own legislative body and imperils the most sacred interests of our church and of the South; therefore, be it resolved:

First—That the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is neither a national nor an international body, nor does it aspire to be either the one or the other. Its mission is to promote the true interests of the real Kingdom of God in our own land, among its own people, and to evangelize the heathen of other lands—a mission to which it has devoted itself whole-heartedly, and in the performance of which it has little to be ashamed of; and it challenges comparison with any other true branch of the Kingdom of God.

Second—We deplore the surrender of our church and the interests of the South by a majority of the Southern commissioners; and we hereby express our determined opposition to the plan of unification which has been evolved, especially admitting the negro to the church, which is certainly calculated to lead to a divided South.

Third—We respectfully call upon our loyal bishops who are opposed to the proposed merger, to take the lead in the movement which we are launching for the preservation of our beloved church and Southern civilization.

Fourth—We earnestly solicit the co-operation of all members and friends of our church in this movement for its preservation from ruin; and we suggest that branches of this League be organized at central points throughout the Connection, to be affiliated with this organization. No church in the land is feeling the effects of the high-running destructive tides more than ours, and it is our conviction that all who love it and desire its preservation should rally to its support and supplicate the Heavenly Father in its behalf. Its history has been glorious, and we cannot bring ourselves to believe that the day of its usefulness has passed, or that the time of its extinction is near at hand."

The headquarters of the Southern Methodist League are Memphis, Tenn., and any communications concerning its organization and work will be cheerfully and promptly responded to.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Why all this hue and cry about and against the churches? Any one who has made even a cursory study of church history, must realize how utterly impracticable it was, even in the centuries immediately succeeding the apostolic age, to unite the church, either in polity or doctrine. In these tumultous days, with its larger freedom of thought and purpose, one great centralized or representative government, whether civil or ecclesiastical, is impossible. Dreams of idealized communities, in church and State, sooner or later find their plans end in ignominous failure. We cannot have one great church in the world, so long as men think differently and reach different conclusions even on the fundamental principles of our holy religion.

Again, this cry of the various churches getting in one another's way is greatly exaggerated. As a pastor, I have never served a charge, when there were not enough Methodists and their constituency, to keep me busy, and some more. Every preacher I meet nowadays is busy and has little time for idealistic dreams and projects. Our own church has quite a job on hand in these latter days, to bring the saints together in our household, and some are writing and talking about the Methodists in the Northland—men and women most of them leading decent, God-fearing lives—as though they were the same as the worse elements of the Union army and the carpetbaggers who confessedly did us no little damage. But that generation is mostly dead—dead but not forgotten, though they should be. War measures are always cruel, unjust and inhuman, but it is unfair and unjust to judge good, enlightened American citizens and Methodists by what their fathers did in war. Possibly some things our own soldiers did, might be well forgotten. Of course we were wronged, but the best way to right a wrong is to make reparation; and this can best be done by getting together.

Man is a born struggler. He contends with tremendous forces within and without. The possession of the Good must ever mean the mastery of the Evil. But we are assured that weapons of righteous warfare are not carnal, yet mighty. Militant figures of speech used by St. Paul and other New Testament writers can never justify the carnage and cruelty of war. Now what does universal military training mean, if it does not mean preparation for war? Else why waste the time—the golden days of youth—to no purpose. A campaign of real gospel preaching, with a fervor and earnestness witnessed and owned by the Holy Spirit, will do more to make the nations forget war, than all the military training ever planned. Make men ready for a thing and they will do it. The militaristic spirit too often ignores moral values. Citizenship is oftentimes forgotten in the camp or barracks. I sometimes wonder why we should be scared into becoming a nation of soldiers because Germany's unholy ambition in this line of things upset the world for a time. Every boy knows what a chip on his shoulder meant, and was confident when he hoisted this belligerent token, some other boy just as brave and ready as he would knock it off. Yet it was always the fellow under the chip who started the scrap. The American citizen, North or South, has always acquitted himself bravely, as a soldier, in every war, without any, or very little, so-called military training. Let us not have it at this later date in our history. We are abundantly able to take care of our country and all committed to her, in the future as we have done in the past.

The wealth of earth, its useful minerals, may lie hidden in its depths, but the beauty of earth is on its surface. Here the harvester gathers the grain and the gardener reaps the fruits of honest toil. Carpeted with grasses, enameled with flowers, adorned with shining ranks of forests and orchards, the old earth spins onward like some mighty jewel, iridescent in sunshine, while over all in tender care bends the great God who fashioned its splendor, and guides its course. Strength, life, health and joy are in the soil and can be had for the digging. The world began in a garden and some of the pristine gladness of life yet lingers among its beds of growing vegetation. The garden has many lessons of thought, economy, and patience for him who spends the spare hours in its making. Learn to grow a garden, and you will grow with it in many ways.

IN FAVOR OF UNIFICATION.

Dear Brother Carley: May I reply briefly to Brother J. A. Lewis' article, "Opposed to Unification," appearing in your issue of February 19? I will preface my answer by saying, that I have the profoundest respect and deepest love for the old veterans: those of the "Stars and Bars," those of the "Stars and Stripes," and those of the Cross of Christ. I should not willingly wound one of them; and it is always with the greatest reluctance that I enter the lists against them in any matter.

Brother Lewis offers four reasons for opposing unification—not one of which is less than half a century in the rear of present issues and interests. Not one of the offenses named was committed by the present generation. Why should we demand apologies of this generation? One generation has no right to rule another—in church or State. One generation has no right to bequeath its quarrels and misunderstandings to another. Neither should one generation be expected to apologize for the offenses of another. "Let the dead past bury its dead."

But, as a matter of fact, has not more been done towards full reconciliation than any amount of apologizing could do? Has not the M. E. Church sent us its fraternal greetings for several decades? and have we not accepted and reciprocated them? Have not the two churches drawn closer together, and worked together in many things? To love is better than burnt-offerings. To help is better than to apologize.

Let me offer four reasons for favoring Unification. I could easily make it four times four.

1. The sons of the men who fought in the Civil War—and their grandsons—have trained together and fought together, in the camps and on the battle-fields of two great wars since then. Our country to-day is united. Patriotism knows no North or South. Loyalty is not bounded by a Mason and Dixon's Line. Can a disunited Methodism meet the needs and cope with the problems of a united America? American Methodism must throw a unified church into the colossal task of the day, or yield her place of spiritual leadership to a wiser, if not a more spiritual, church.

2. Conservation of resources and strength is of the first importance in every field to-day. Our people must not waste their energies upon things useless. Our churches must not waste men and money in hurtful rivalries, or senseless duplication of effort. In a ministry of twenty-five years, I have spent four years—two in California and two in Arkansas—in cities where there were Northern and Southern churches. Those have been the most barren and the most exasperating years of my Christian life. Brother Lewis may lament the house of worship near his home, that the Presbyterian Church is having to rent out. But Methodism would be far richer materially and spiritually, if some scores of her churches were rented, sold or burned—in communities where we have set up "altar against altar" in a most unchristian way.

3. Our day is the day of Christianity's opportunity. A world undergoing reconstruction is a field ripe for evangelization. The church must carry out an adequate educational policy, and an adequate missionary policy. Neither branch of the divided church has resources in men and money, adequate to the demands. The elimination of unnecessary buildings, unnecessary publications, and unnecessary agents and agencies of every kind, will render available vast resources for the times and places of real need. We will no longer need to send our differences across the sea. Preachers will not need to waste valuable time explaining why there is a Southern Methodist Church in Illinois or Montana, or a Northern Church in Texas.

4. I steadfastly believe that a vast majority of the rank and file of our people, preachers and laity, North and South, sincerely desire unification. Assuredly this is true of the younger, the more virile and aggressive, men of the church. And if, substituting Christian catholicity for provincial prejudice, all would take their eyes off the past and look earnestly at the future, the desire for speedy unification would be all but unanimous.

TO ALL PASTORS IN NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Brethren: I like to talk and write to you. Our church has arranged our work so that we are all obligated to do it. So here I come, writing about Centenary matters, and if you will write me by next mail I will feel good. What I want to say is:

1. The duty of each presiding elder is to organize the district cabinet and direct all Centenary work himself in this way.

2. The pastor's duty is to organize the church cabinet and through it direct all Centenary work in each church.

3. Then the presiding elder and pastor, through these organized cabinets are to see to these items: (a) Have each church select a Mission Special, equal in amount to the annual amount paid on the Centenary. That is, each church select this special where its Centenary money shall be applied. (b) Have teams to help the Centenary Treasurer to collect all subscriptions. (c) To put on the Stewardship Campaign in every church the last week in March. (d) To make a thorough family altar canvass. All necessary literature for any of these will be furnished you upon request.

In your letter to me to-morrow, please tell me: (1) Whether you have organized and are working the cabinet. (2) Have your Centenary pledges for 1919 and 1920 been collected? (3) Has each church taken a special? (4) Will you make the Stewardship and Family Altar canvass? (5) What literature do you need?

Write me at once all about the Centenary work on your charge.

HAS OUR METHODISM A MISSION STILL?

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

That saintly man and incomparable preacher, Bishop Enoch Mather Marvin, published a few years before he died a powerful article in the Southern Review, asserting and defending the mission of our Methodism.

He planted himself upon the broad foundation of indisputable principle set forth in the following paragraph:

"No church has a right to be, unless it stands for something. It must embody and conserve some truth, some principle, some great matter of Christian interest, that no other church does, or it has no just title to existence. It must be charged with some portion of God's work that no one else is at hand to do, and that no one else can be trusted with, or its presence among the churches is an intrusion and an impertinence. But if it have in hand some great work that no one else can be trusted with, then its existence is not only justified, but imperative. To alienate its existence is to betray its trust. Its members can not disorganize it without incurring guilt. God holds them to account for the work he has given them to do, and they can not destroy the body which is the instrument provided by the Head of the church for doing it."

In the course of his able and eloquent article, he showed clearly and conclusively from the history of our Methodism and the manifest blessing of God upon it, that it was not an impertinent intruder among the churches, but that a vital and important "dispensation of the gospel was committed" unto it. He gloried in its spiritual mission and rejoiced for its high destiny, declaring in conclusion that our church had "a destiny that she can not alienate. She must stand in her lot to the end of the days."

Was Bishop Marvin correct in his contention concerning the mission of our Methodism?

Is not the hand of God manifest in all its great history? Is there anything in the present to indicate that God's purpose concerning our Methodism has been abandoned or his favor withdrawn? Has the mission of our Methodism been forfeited or finished?

On the contrary, all the facts of the present momentous hour in the history of the world show that its mission has been neither forfeited nor finished.

At the last Ecumenical Methodist Conference, held in Toronto, Canada, October, 1911, the total increase of members in all the bodies of world-wide Methodism for the decade 1900 to 1910, as reported to that body, was 1,109,331, of which increase 401,145, or more than one-third, was in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The figures then compiled, and the facts developed since, unite in showing that ours is the most prosperous body of Methodists in the world. Our church has reached, and is reaching, a larger proportion of the people among whom it has worked than any other Methodism is reaching and saving the people whom it seeks to serve.

Our Methodism has not only prospered; it has been kept pure from many evil things which have touched and tainted other bodies.

A few years ago a leading minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) and a brother of one of the bishops of that church, in a published appeal to the ministers and members of our church, said: "We most earnestly appeal for your co-operation because you are so orthodox. You are known to be nearer primitive Methodism than any other branch of the family."

While we would not put forward such a claim for ourselves, we can not overlook the fact that our church has been preserved by Providence against many of the pernicious influences and dreadful perils which have beset others. It has been most fortunate in that it has lived and labored in an atmosphere of fervent faith and aggressive evangelism. Hereby its type of evangelical Christianity has been fixed, and in the promotion of that type it has flourished.

Now, when the human race has witnessed the folly of rationalism and the futility of ritualism, our Methodism is called as never before to stand fast in the evangelical faith which has made it great under the blessing of the God of our fathers. In a day when all sorts of unverified theories concerning matters social and religious are frantically proclaimed as final philosophies, and when untried and impracticable schemes are devised and abandoned daily, it behooves our great evangelical church to stand steady and serene, and bear its full part in calling back to Christ a distracted and perturbed world.

Certainly there is nothing in the present situation, with all its weighty obligations and vast opportunities, to indicate that the mission of our Methodism has been forfeited or finished. If in the past it ever had a mission, it has in the present none the less. If our fathers were guided by God in the work they undertook, they have left to us an enlarged mission and increased responsibilities. Other men have labored, and we have entered into their labors. We may not ignore what they did, nor fail to preserve and promote the good cause which saintly hands have bequeathed to us.

When in one year our people were able and willing to subscribe to the cause of missions $53,000,000, they showed themselves disposed to carry on the great work of our church, and capable of doing so.

At the close of the war between the States our church had no more than 429,233 members, and they were poor and broken-hearted. Our largest churches in cities like New Orleans, Nashville, and St. Louis, had been wrenched most wrongfully from the hands of their rightful owners, and used for their hurt. But our people did not despair. With the courage of faith and the hopefulness of love, they rose up and restored the places made waste by war.

How different is the case of our church at the close of the great war in Europe! Its membership is over 2,200,000; its wealth is great enough to do its work, and help also needy peoples and desolated lands across the sea.

Under such conditions, I for one, am unwilling to consent to any proceedings that savor of a petition in bankruptcy, voluntary or involuntary, for our great church.

It has no need to ask any supervising holding-company to take charge of its assets and direct its affairs.

Our church is abundantly able to take care of its own business and fulfill its own mission.

Into no corporation of creedlessness least of all is it called to enter. Who will proclaim the doctrines of the witness of the Spirit and Christian perfection, if Methodism should be subjected to the methods of mergers in which no credal basis is possible except such generalities as provoke no discussion for the simple reason that they are matters of general consent or common indifference?

To me our Methodism is very dear. At its altars my sainted father was converted. Through its ministrations I was led to Christ. It has baptized my children and buried my dead. In the fellowship of the mighty spirits who have filled it with honor and goodness, I have found unutterable and immeasurable blessings. To its service I have given forty and five years of toil and travel. Now, as I begin to approach the end, it is about all the inheritance I have, or wish to have. Let no man seek to take it from me, and give me instead of my precious possession, a few shares of stock in an ecclesiastical syndicate of uncertain value and doubtful stability.

If our Methodism has still a mission, let us rally with renewed enthusiasm to its fulfillment. If it has no longer a mission, God forgive our fathers, pity our people, and have mercy on our children!

But it has a mission, and while we went forward with its work, undistracted by outside schemes and undivided among ourselves, its annual increase of members was large and steady, and its spirit was buoyant and aggressive. It is a notable fact that with the debates and divisions which have absorbed so much attention in recent years, revivals have been fewer, growth has been less rapid, and spiritual life has been less fervent and aggressive.

Let us get back to our work. Let us repent of our sins, forsake our worldliness, return to the God of our fathers, and enter into the blessedness of a church-wide revival that will promote evangelical Christianity throughout our own country and all the world.

A SELF-DENYING SAINT

The rectory of St. James, Picadilly, was vacant. It was in Bishop Blomfield's gift. He offered it to Mr. Harvey, who accepted it. When he had accepted it he took himself to task. "I asked myself," this was the way he told me the story, "whether I was the right or fit man for the place. 'Richard Harvey,' I said to myself, 'Richard Harvey, if the Lord Jesus Christ were patron, would he make you rector of St. James, Picadilly?' And I was bound to answer 'He would not.' So I told Bishop Blomfield that I could not go; but I said, 'If you want the right man for it send John Jackson, the Vicar of Muswell Hill.' " John Jackson was offered the rectory and accepted it. There he became known to the world of influence, and he became successively Bishop of Lincoln and Bishop of London. Are there many of the spirit of Richard Harvey? His was that rare spirit which did not seek for high things, but worked with diligence in matters useful but obscure. He would tramp for miles to gather promised contributions for the S. P. G. He would efface himself, and was always ready to put forward men of fitness and ability.

Bishop Moorhouse was at one time his curate. He valued him and his preaching highly. He met the Vicar of Islington, Daniel Wilson, and he said, "Well, I've got a curate!" "Keep him in his place." said Daniel Wilson; "keep him in his place." "I will," said Canon Harvey. "I'll keep him in the pulpit and myself in the reading-desk."

Such a man was free from the small envies which so often darken other minds. His soul was set upon good and upon the spreading of good in the world.

He welcomed generously and warmly, any one who seemed gifted with the capacity of helping forward its cause.—William Boyd Carpenter.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.

Find me a consistent Christian, and from that man they will learn to admire and love the Christ. "There was no difference between him and the Book," it was said of a Chinese Christian who died a year or two ago, and whose life had commended the gospel of God, the Savior. "I have seen Christ in you," said a poor dying fellow to a Christian worker in the London slums. But can they say it of us? Do they see no difference between us and the Book? Do they see Christ in us? Are we, shall I say, good photographs of our blessed Lord? From our lives would men learn to love our Master? The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance. Those are, shall I say, the separate features that go to make up a good photograph of the Master. Go through the catalogue, and interrogate yourself concerning every article in it. Love! Are you affectionate, loving, self-sacrificing? Joy! Are you bright, and happy and sunny? Peace! Do you lead a quiet and peaceful life in all godliness and gravity? Long suffering! Are you patient, in the shop, in the home, with those under your authority? Kindness, goodness, meekness, faithfulness, temperance! Do you possess these things? Wherever the Spirit of Christ is, there these things are.—J. D. Jones.

God has many interests to consider, many conflicting forces to deal with, and many issues to provide for. Therefore, different men may have different views, and yet all be in the right. Many purposes may be aimed at in redemption beyond what we can see, and thus many processes which to us look meaningless, find their end. The water is not taken over the millwheel simply that it may find its nearest course to the river, nor is the Christian led over a broken path because that is the nearest way to heaven.—W. F. Adeney.

KETTLE TALK.

"I don't feel well" the kettle sighed.
The pot responded, "Eh?"
"Then doubtless that's the reason, ma'am,
You do not sing to-day.
But what's amiss?" The kettle sobbed,
"Why, sir, you're surely blind,
Or you'd have noticed that the cook
Is shockingly unkind.
I watched her make a cake just now—
I felt inclined to scream—
The cruel creature took a fork
And soundly whipped the cream!
How can you wonder that my nerves
Have rather given way?
Although I'm at the boiling point,
I cannot sing to-day."

MARGARET'S EASTER SACRIFICE.

By Mrs. George S. Brown.

There had been a series of revival meetings going on in the town where Margaret Muller lived, and she was among the young converts who had united with the church. Her young heart was aglow with love for her Savior and she longed to do great things for Him. She felt that no sacrifice would be too great and that she would be equal to anything demanded of her. She at once began to look around for some "big thing" to do.

When she was older, she meant to go to foreign fields as a missionary, or take up slum work in a big city, or, perhaps, be a deaconess; but just now what was there for a little girl to do? She could not wait until she was grown to be a worker in the vineyard, for had not the preacher that very day said the fields were white and laborers were wanted?

She could not leave school or home and take up any kind of work, and yet the verse, "Why stand ye here all the day idle," kept ringing in her ears. True, she could try to influence some of her friends, but most of them had joined the church with her and then that did not seem very much to do.

She wanted to accomplish wonders all at once and she puckered her brows and thought deeply as she walked home that evening.

The next day was the Sabbath and the Sunday school lesson was about the little maid who told Naaman where to go to be healed of his leprosy. Margaret had never thought that little girl had done anything worth mentioning, but this lesson emphasized the fact that "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver," and her teacher talked a great deal that day of the little things of life. She told her class that it was the little things, after all, that make up life—that a kind word, an encouraging look, a sunshiny smile had often done more than a great army of soldiers. Little self-denials, little crosses borne patiently, little acts of thoughtfulness all mount up and win for us at last a big reward, she added.

That lesson opened Margaret's eyes and made her heart bound with pleasure, "For, after all," she pondered, "I won't have to wait, but can find something to do every day." And she did, for Margaret was thoroughly in earnest; so at home and at school she was constantly endeavoring to live up to her convictions, forgetting sometimes, as even the grown folks do, but beginning with renewed earnestness after each failure.

Several weeks later, the enthusiasm of the meeting had begun to wane, as is so often the case, and, sad to say, some of the seed that had been sown had been rooted up because it had no depth of earth, and some had been devoured by worldly temptations. A number of the girls were out in the woods cutting vines and plants to decorate the church for Easter. After a while the conversation turned on "dress" and each girl was telling what she was going to wear Easter. "Oh, girls," chimed in Margaret, "My hat came home last night and it's a dream. The flowers are silk and so natural-looking you'd want to pluck them. It's awfully becoming, too, and just harmonizes beautifully with my silk dress that Aunt Madge sent me."

"Won't she look stunning," chorused the girls, and Lucy Tate added with a fond upward glance, "Margaret always looks sweet in anything she puts on." "Thank you, dear old Luce, but how about you, my demure little maiden? What will you have on your pretty brown curls?" Lucy did not answer for a moment, and when she did there was a suspicious moisture in her eyes. "Girls, I hardly think I'll be at church to-morrow. I guess I'll stay at home and mind the baby so mother can go to church."

"Now isn't that like Lucy, to be so sweet and unselfish," said one of the crowd, "But, my dear, have you forgotten that you have not been absent a single Sunday for a year and are sure to be prize winner, and this one time will undo it all? Can't you go home right after Sunday school?" With that Lucy put her head down and sobbed outright. "Oh, girls, please don't give me undue credit; it isn't any self-denial at all—instead I am a horrid, deceitful girl, and I may as well tell you I was not going to stay on Mamma's account at all. I was ashamed to give my real reason, but I must tell you it is all because I have no new Easter outfit. You know there are so many of us and Easter comes too early for simple white dresses this year, so we did not get new ones, and Sister, being the oldest, has a new hat, but the rest of us have to wait, and when I looked at my old shabby brown felt with the stumpy wing, I just thought I'd rather lose the prize than to sit in class with bright, new hats all around, but I should not be thinking of such things and on Easter Sunday, too. I shall go now just to punish myself."

All the girls felt sorry for Lucy; and when they remembered what a struggle it was for her widowed mother to provide for her little brood, they longed to help in some way, but felt powerless, as the Tates were too proud to accept charity.

That night Margaret could not banish Lucy from her thoughts, and when she put her new hat and dress on the chair to be ready for the morning, they had lost half their charm, for she seemed to see Lucy's shabby winter suit instead. She wondered how she could help her little friend and she prayed long and earnestly about it. She shed some tears, too, as she lay there in bed, but it all came to her—the real meaning of a sacrifice and what her teacher had said about little things. She could not give Lucy a new hat and suit, but if she wore her old ones, the contrast would not be so great, Lucy would not feel as conspicuous—and—yes—she would do it. She had not expected a little thing like that would take so much reasoning and arguing—and even tears.

"If I can't make a little sacrifice, how can I ever do anything great," she thought, and so next morning she told her mother she had decided to wear her winter clothes. In answer to the surprised look, she told her about Lucy. Mrs. Muller was touched and pleased by the child's kind, thoughtful act of unselfishness, and she felt very proud of her little daughter when she trudged bravely out in the sunshine leaving all her finery behind.

All the class looked up in wonderment as Margaret entered in her blue suit and dark hat, and raised wondering eyes, but she quietly sat beside Lucy, who took in at a glance what Margaret had done, and reaching over, gave her hand a loving squeeze. "That is nothing," whispered Margaret, "I couldn't have half put my mind on the services if I'd been all dressed up new, Lucy,' and it's a good lesson to my vanity."

After church Lucy walked out with Margaret and said, "I'm one of the few girls you know, Margaret, who did not join the church during the meetings, because I've never been quite able to get the rebellious feeling out of my heart about being poor, but it's all gone now and I am going to be a Christian just like you, for I believe in your kind of religion."

And Margaret felt fully repaid for her Easter sacrifice.

WHY JOIN THE CHURCH—A THREE-MINUTE TALK.

Membership in the church is both an obligation and a privilege. The church is a divinely instituted organization to which God has committed the specific work of hastening the coming of the Kingdom on earth. The Kingdom of God on earth represents an ideal society in which the will of God is done by men here as it is done by angels in Heaven. It is an ideal that is possible of atainment, too, even if we do sometimes think and speak of it as a far-off event. What can be done for one life, can be done for many; and what can be done for many, can be done for all—provided the same influences are brought to bear upon the lives of all.

Membership in the church becomes an obligation to all those who are in sympathy with the ideals of the Kingdom of God, and who are determined to make those ideals the goal of their own lives. We would not presume to say that only members of the church will be saved; but we dare affirm that it is only in the most unusual cases that anything like a plausible excuse can be offered by those who are professedly disciples of Christ for not identifying themselves with the body of Christian people. It is hard to make the world believe that we really are interested in the success of a cause with which we are not willing to become publicly identified. Especially is this true in regard to great moral and religious movements. The sympathy of a "well-wisher" is not to be despised; but it is the efforts of those who are willing to bear "the heat and burden of the day" that actually bring things to pass. "In union there is strength"—in the cause of Christ just as in other movements.

We do not often enough, perhaps, think of the privilege of being associated with Christian men and women in the membership of the church. We have a good deal to say, it may be, about the "hypocrites in the church," and the inconsistencies of some who have assumed the obligations of membership, being prone to forget that, at most, they are in a small minority; what we ought to keep in mind is the fact that, as a rule, the best men and women in every community, the most earnest and devoted followers of Christ of our acquaintance, are working together in peace and harmony for the accomplishment of the very things that are stirring our own hearts. It is, indeed, a rare privilege to be joined with them in the definite effort to realize the ideals, the attainment of which will make this a "new earth." Some organizations are exclusive in their membership—we could not join them if we would—but the church of Christ offers its inspiring fellowship to all who accept its Lord.

We do not speak of the cordial sympathy and unselfish helpfulness that come to us from our association with the people of God—but we need these things, and we can find them nowhere else in such full measure. Those who remain out of the church are missing much that helps to make men happy.

FIRST THINGS FIRST.

We suppose as a matter of fact that no right-thinking person is ever disposed to subordinate the essential to the incidental. There may sometimes be sincere differences of opinion as to what constitutes the essential and the incidental, but certainly there can never be any insistence upon giving the lesser a place above the larger.

It may be true, however, that we sometimes unconsciously devote most of our energies to dealing with effects rather than with causes, simply because effects lie openly before our eyes, and causes are hidden away where they can be found only after diligent search. What we first see, we may consider first in importance; and what our hands first lay hold of, we may think to be our first task. Assuming that such may be the case, it can never be amiss for us to pause a moment to reflect upon what we are really called to do in any given situation.

Recent investigations have revealed the fact that 58,000,000 of the 110,000,000 people in the United States are not identified with any church. In other words, more than half the population of this country is not sufficiently impressed with the value of Christianity to think it worth while to become officially related to its organized forms. The picture is not as dark as it might seem at first glance, for certainly many of these 58,000,000 are not beyond the influence of the church in their thinking and manner of life; even so, the prospect is disquieting enough. Assuming that these unrelated millions are an effect rather than a cause, what is the explanation? Why is it that a majority of the people in this enlightened land are not members of any branch of the Christian church?

We are not presumptuous enough to imagine that we know the answer to this question, but as we have thought of the situation we have tried to discover some hint of the real reason. May it not be in the possibility that the church, as it has multiplied in numbers and in forms of activity, has lost somewhat its conception of Christianity as a religion of spiritual power and substituted the conception of the church as the formal expression of a system of ethics? We do not charge that this is the case—but we wonder. The ever-present danger of any vital movement is that it will gradually resolve itself into a mere organization; and sometimes the organization is mistaken for the thing for which it stands.

We are convinced that no mere organization can ever enlist the hearty sympathy and support of the 58,000,000 people in the United States who are not members of the church. It seems to us, therefore, that we need to lay renewed emphasis—supreme emphasis—upon the gospel of Jesus Christ as the power of God unto salvation. We may not need less of mechanics, but we certainly do need more of dynamics.

"SHOP TALK."

Date of Publication.

The Advocate is dated on Thursday of each week. This, of course, does not mean that the material is selected, the type set, the forms made up, the press-work done, and the paper mailed out on that day. We should not think to speak of this were it not for the fact that we frequently receive requests to "get this in this week's Advocate, please," when, as a matter of fact, the paper is already in the mails.

It may be of interest to our readers to know that the Advocate is printed in two sections—the "first half" and the "second half," as we speak of them in the office. The first half"—pages 2, 3, 6, 7, 10, 11, 14, 15—is "made up" on Friday and Saturday, and the "second half" is "made up" on Monday and Tuesday. The "first half" goes to press early Monday morning, and the "second half" goes to press on Tuesday. As the "second half" comes from the press, the whole paper is put through the folding machine and mailing begins. By Thursday night or Friday morning, it ought to be in the hands of all its readers.

As a rule, material for the next issue is put in the hands of the typesetter beginning on Tuesday of the week preceding the week of publication. For example, a good part of the material for this issue of the paper, which is dated April 1, was being put in type on Wednesday, March 24, and all of it that appears in the "first half"—pages 2, 3, 6, 7, 10, 11, 14, 15—was "set up" by Friday, March 26. In addition, a good deal of the "second half" had already been "set up" at that time. Of course it is possible to get important notices in at the last minute—if they are important enough to justify our "tearing up" the forms; once in awhile we even "stop the press" to put in something that we think our readers ought to have at the earliest possible moment, but this involves a delay that we are not often willing to make.

We always try to comply with the request to "get this in as soon as possible." Probably some of our contributors think we take our time about it; but we have enough material on hand for several issues of the paper and we have to consider each article with reference to the whole. We are always glad to have a good supply of articles on hand—we wish that more of our ministers and laymen would write for the Advocate—but we have to exercise a certain degree of liberty as to the time of publication.

Obituaries.

A long-standing rule of the Advocate—and a necessary one—is to the effect that obituaries in excess of 200 words must be paid for at the rate of one cent a word for all over the 200. Unless payment for the excess accompanies the obituary, or provision is made for its payment, we are forced to the trouble of condensing to the specified limit. We reserve the right to reject all obituaries in the form of verse. Poetry is a highly technical form of writing—and few they be that have mastered it.

Business Matters.

Just as a matter of information, we desire to state that the business affairs of the paper are in the hands of the very efficient Business Manager, Brother Chas. O. Chalmers. Naturally, therefore, all business communications should be addressed to him, and checks and money orders should be made payable to him in his official capacity. No special inconvenience is caused by the fact that this suggestion is not always followed by our correspondents, since the proper distribution of the mail is made here in the office; the Editor is charged only with editorial responsibility.

Renewals.

The weakest point, perhaps, in the circulation department is in the fact that every year we are compelled to remove from our files the names of many subscribers who have become delinquent—not intentionally, but through neglect. We revise our mailing list every three months, and simply as a business proposition we have to drop those who are in arrears for that length of time. We spend a good deal of money for postage and stationery in sending out statements to those who are behind in their accounts, and we make every effort to secure their renewals; but, in spite of all we can do, our leakage at this point is large. At the present price of newsprint, it means something to send the paper for three months beyond the date to which the subscription is paid—and then have to discontinue it because the renewal is not forthcoming. It is the experience of the business management that THE CASH VALUE OF A RENEWAL IS GREATER THAN THAT OF A NEW SUBSCRIPTION. We need all the new subscriptions we can get—but we need the renewals even more.

Why Not 15,000?

We are more thoroughly convinced than ever that it is possible to increase largely the present circulation of the Advocate. We are already beyond the 10,000-mark—counting the subscriptions received on the "Every Family" proposition—but that ought to be only a beginning for the 162,000 Methodists in Louisiana and Mississippi. Listen: If every pastor in our three Conferences could see his way clear to bring the matter before his people in a clear-cut, definite way, either personally or through some efficient man or woman in his congregation, directing attention to the securing of renewals as well as new subscriptions, we have not the slightest doubt but that we would go far beyond even the 15,000-mark by June 1. Is it worth trying?

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES

Rev. M. W. Porter, of Avera, Miss., writes that everything is moving along nicely on his charge.

Rev. C. E. Fike has received twenty members into the church at De Ridder, La., since Conference.

Rev. L. E. Crooks and family, of Greensburg, La., have been victims of the "flu" recently, but they are now able to be up and at work.

"Preacher and everybody else in a good humor," is the good word that comes from Rev. A. J. Henry, of the Corinth circuit, Corinth, Miss.

Mrs. C. C. Wier, wife of our popular and efficient pastor at Algiers, is greatly improved in health after an illness of several weeks' duration.

The Fifteenth National Conference on Child Labor will be held in New Orleans on April 14, in connection with the National Conference of Social Work.

Although bad weather has interfered with church work, Rev. A. L. Harper, of Ringgold, La., reports that there has been gratifying progress on his charge.

Brother J. L. Porter, of Gulfport, Miss., has been a reader of the Advocate since boyhood, and a subscriber for forty-three years. He says he still enjoys it.

Rev. P. H. Howse writes that everything is moving along nicely at Prentiss, Miss., the charge to which he was appointed at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference.

Rev. T. G. Adair has been changed from the Silver Springs circuit to the Mantachie circuit, in the Corinth District, North Mississippi Conference. His post office address is Ratliff, Miss.

Rev. A. L. Davenport, of Ackerman, Miss., is planning to make this a good year in his ministry, and the outlook is promising. Dr. J. J. Stowe was announced to be with him last Sunday.

The date of the North Mississippi Efficiency Conference has been changed to June 15-18. A splendid program is being arranged for this profitable annual gathering at Grenada, Miss.

Rev. J. S. Rutledge, of Denham Springs, La., reports that his work is moving along well. The pastor's salary has been liberally increased this year to meet the increased cost of living.

We regret to learn that Rev. J. O. Bennett, our efficient pastor at Colfax, La., has had a four week's tussle with the "flu;" we are glad to know, however, that he is now able to be up and at work.

Rev. V. C. Curtis, presiding elder of the Greenville District, North Mississippi Conference, has announced that Bishop Jno. C. Kilgo has promised to preside over the district conference at Rosedale, April 21-23.

Rev. C. B. Powell, of Indian Bayou, La., reports that some constructive work is being done on his charge. In spite of bad weather, good progress has been made, and one new church has been built since Conference.

The pastor, Rev. E. M. Shaw, has received fifteen members into the church at Houston, Miss., since January 1. On March 15, he married a fine Methodist couple—Mr. Cleve Doss and Miss Elizabeth Westbrook.

Rev. Guy Ray is serving his third year at Mashulaville, Miss. Plans are being made for the revival work of the year, and material improvements are in prospect—repairs on the parsonage and the building of a new church.

Mrs. W. K. Burt, formerly of Winona, Miss., was married to Mr. J. G. Moore, of the Soldiers' Home, Beauvoir, Miss., recently, the marriage taking place at the First Methodist Church, Gulfport, Rev. W. L. Linfield officiating.

Rev. R. G. Lord of Coffeeville, Miss., writes appreciately of the many kindnesses he has received at the hands of the good people whom he serves. He is in his second year on the charge and is delighted with the prospects of success.

The Louisiana State School Convention will meet in New Orleans, April 13-15. Prominent Sunday school workers will be in attendance and a most helpful meeting is promised. Entertainment of delegates will be on the Harvard plan.

Dr. Theodore Copeland has recently been engaged in holding a successful revival meeting at Bowie, Texas. Hon. William Jennings Bryan nas given Dr. Copeland a letter of commendation in connection with his work as an evangelist.

Mrs. Claude P. Jones, wife of our pastor at Fayette, Miss., is in the Baptist Hospital at Jackson, Miss., where she underwent a surgical operation last week. We are sure the many friends of Brother and Sister Jones will offer prayer for her speedy recovery.

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of Cockrum, Miss., is serving his third year on that charge, and he is hoping to make it the best of the three. He speaks very highly of the sermons of his presiding elder, Dr. R. A. Meek, on the occasion of his recent quarterly conference.

Mrs. V. M. Millsaps, of Harriston, Miss., an old-time reader of the Advocate, in renewing her subscription for another year, speaks of the recent quarterly conference and the splendid preaching of Rev. J. R. Jones, the new presiding elder of the Port Gibson District.

Rev. W. A. Hart, a superannuate member of the West Texas Conference, now living at Jonesboro, La., requests us to say that he will be glad to assist in some meetings in Louisiana during the spring and summer. Brother Hart was once a member of the Louisiana Conference.

Work will soon begin on the new church at Main Street, Water Valley, Miss. Rev. D. H. Crowson, the pastor, is enthusiastic over the loyalty and consecration of the good people whom he serves. He is especially gratified with the work of the Sunday school and the Epworth League.

Rev. R. T. Ware will be the host of the Shreveport District Conference at Mooringsport, La., this year. He will be able to make a good report for his charge. Twenty-two members have been received into the church since Conference. The Sunday school enrollment is twice the church enrollment.

Our church at Houston, Miss., has lost four of its prominent members by death within the last few months—Mrs. V. P. Harrill, Mrs. J. M. Massey, Dr. Morgan Sheil Evans, and Mrs. I. M. Haynes. We sympathize with the sorrowing families and the church which has lost such faithful workers.

Brother G. W. Christian, of Grayson, La., who has been reading the Advocate for fifty years or longer, writes that he greatly enjoys the reports of the revival meetings. We are sure this is the case with a great many of our readers, and for this reason we are anxious to have as many of the reports as possible.

We have been requested to call attention to an error in the announcement of the time of the Sunday School Institute for the Meridian District as it appears in the quarterly conference announcements of the Meridian District; the Institute will be held at Quitman, May 26-27, beginning with the evening service of the 26th.

Brother E. F. Arnold, of Bellefontaine, Miss., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, takes occasion to express himself vigorously in opposition to unification. The approaching session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church will be watched with great interest with reference to its action on this question.

Rev. A. W. Turner, of Shreveport, La., State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, honored the Advocate office with a call while in the city last week. He is thoroughly informed concerning the plans of the anti-prohibitionists—and he has some plans of his own. We do not know a better equipped man for the position he holds.

Rev. W. E. Akin, of the Olive Branch charge, Louisiana Conference, has these definite aims in view as he labors among his people this year: both parents active Christian, and a family altar, the Bible, the Hymnal, the Discipline, and Advocate in every home. It does not take a prophet to predict that he will have a "good year."

The first quarterly conference of the Grand Cane charge, Louisiana Conference, showed that there has been gratifying progress in all departments of work this year. The pastor's salary was increased $300. Rev. S. J. Davies, the pastor, was assisted in a good meeting last week by Rev. Leland Clegg, junior preacher at First Church, Shreveport.

Mrs. Albert Roberts, of Olive Branch, La., is a friend of whom the Advocate is justly proud. The paper was read to her before she had learned to read for herself, and she was taught the letters of the alphabet from its pages. She attributes much of her love of good literature and of her interest in missions to its influence. Of course she continues to read it with interest.

Just before going to press, we received the sad news from Rev. J. A. Goad, of Noxapater, Miss., that Mrs. B. F. Curtis, mother of Rev. V. C. Curtis, presiding elder of the Greenville District, passed away on the morning of March 28, after a long illness. She was a noble Christian woman, a lifelong Methodist. Our deepest sympathy is extended to her sorrowing loved ones.

Rev. J. R. Countiss, president of Grenada College, Grenada, Miss., was a visitor to New Orleans last week for the purpose of securing some equipment for the new building. We greatly enjoyed his call at the Advocate office. It is a tribute to his efficient management of the college that its capacity is already taxed, in spite of largely increased facilities. He is a successful college president.

Mrs. G. B. Dewees, of Pocahontas, Miss., a most loyal member of the Methodist church at that place, honored the Advocate office with a call during a visit to the city last week. The editor recalls with great pleasure the privilege he enjoyed some years ago of assisting Rev. H. P. Lewis in a meeting in that delightful little town, and the gracious hospitality he received in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dewees.

The Mississippi State Sunday School Association will convene in Gulfport on April 6. A splendid program has been announced. Among the prominent Sunday school workers who are to be present, we notice the names of Prof. E. O. Excell, Prof. Alvin W. Roper, Rev. E. W. Halpenny, Miss Susie M. Juden, Rev. W. A. Brown, Mr. E. O. Sellers, and Mr. Van Carter. Entertainment will be furnished on the Harvard plan—bed and breakfast.

With the passing of WM. R. JEFFERSON we have lost one of our greatest Christian characters. It did one good to hear him tell of his conversion and the battle that followed; but by holding tightly to the hand that stills every tempest and conquers every foe, he reached the good age of 84 years, "knowing in whom he had trusted," and without a fear he met his last enemy which proved to be his coronation day. He was born in Wilkinson County, Mississippi, November 23, 1836, and died in Marshall County, Mississippi, February 29, 1920. He taught in the public schools in Texas, where he instilled into the lives of his students the principles of Christianity, thereby continuing to bless succeeding generations. He was a member of the Methodist Church, who believed in and practiced her teachings for half a century.

God bless the memory of such a man,
Who stood through the fiercest storm,
And counted the world as sinking sand,
Was determined to do no wrong.

His pastor, H. H. WALLACE.

Another friend has passed across the River. To youth, all is bright, and friends are many. The years roll by; the number "over there" steadily increases. Brother L. I. COCKE was possessed of most of the Christian virtues—purity, gentleness, meekness, mercy, charity, helpfulness, love. In his daily work, like his Master, he went about doing good.

The quarterly conference of the Capitol Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Jackson, Miss., pays this tribute to his memory: He loved God and gave continued expression of that love in profession, testimony, and Christian service to the State, the Church, and to humanity.

Surely a princess in Israel fell when, on October 9, 1919, death claimed MRS. MARTHA M. BUNCH (nee Shannon), who lived at Millville, Madison County, Miss.

"Aunt Martha," as she was affectionately called by everybody who knew her, died as she had lived—a devoted Christian. She had grown old and frail in years and body, but was young and fresh in spirit and Christian graces. This saintly woman had seen the snows of many winters, having been a sojourner here since Dec. 6, 1841. She joined the Methodist Church in 1856, thereby giving almost her entire life and influences to God, to the church and to the building of the Kingdom.

She was married on Dec. 18, 1866, to Mr. Thomas Bunch, who preceded her several years ago.

Her body was laid to rest in Sulphur Springs Cemetery to await the resurrection morning.

RESOLUTIONS.

Adopted at a memorial service held in the Methodist Church at Monticello, Miss., on Sunday, March 7, 1920.

"MRS. LILLIAN COGSWELL BOONE was the friend of all classes. Endowed by nature with extraordinary intellectual powers, naturally she was looked to for counsel and leadership in all matters affecting the general interest; and she gave ungrudgingly of her time and talents.

"She was the special friend of the poor, the afflicted, and of all who had special need of any service she could render. And in her ministrations to the unfortunate ones she was not content to merely contribute of her means, but often gave the better service of cheerful and sympathetic personal contact; and by means of her unusually optimistic personality often she 'brightened the corners' that otherwise might have remained dismal and dreary.

"In her church relations and home life she closely approached the ideal, being a most worthy example of constancy and loyalty. She was always unpretentious, esteeming herself to be among the lowliest of the servants of God and workers for the common good.

"Therefore be it resolved by us, her sorrowing friends, that these lines be adopted as the expression—feeble though it be—of the esteem in which Mrs. Boone was held in this, the community where she lived, and that a copy hereof be sent to her bereaved family and that a copy be also sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication."

Comb Sage Tea in Hair to Darken It

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Keep Her Locks Dark, Glossy, Beautiful.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through hair taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive. —Adv.

RESOLUTION.

Whereas God, in his wisdom and providence, has seen fit to call from labor to reward our friend and sister, Mrs. J. A. Bell, Sr., who, under all circumstances, maintained a character untarnished and a reputation above reproach, therefore be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society, of Shuqualak, Miss., feel that we have sustained a great loss; yet we rejoice in the fact that our loss is her eternal gain.

2. That the life of this faithful member, loving wife, devoted mother, affectionate daughter, may ever be a daily inspiration to her loved ones and the members of our Society.

3. That we extend to the family, who will miss her tender care, our heartfelt sympathy and pray God's richest blessings upon them in this sad hour.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication and a copy of the same sent to the family.

Signed by: Mrs. Jno. G. Bell, Mrs. W. C. Futvoye, Mrs. D. H. Steele, Mrs. C. W. Baley, for the Society.

IN LOVING MEMORY.

My sister, DELIA HIVELY, was born in Drew County, Arkansas, November 9, 1871, and died suddenly at her home in San Luis Obispo, California, January 26, 1920. She was the seventh child of a family of nine children, born to Peter C. and Columbia Hivciey. After the death of my father in 1874, my mother moved her family to her native State and settled near Crystal Springs, Miss., in the "Bethesda" vicinity. It was there, in a neighborhood of God-serving people, where the moral and religious atmosphere was pure and wholesome, and in a home that was a home of prayer, that the deceased received her early training. She accepted Christ as her Savior and joined the Methodist Church at Bethesda early in life and ever remained faithful to her vows. After qualifying herself as teacher, she taught only one session in the public schools of Franklin County, Mississippi, and then she went to the State Hospital at Natchez, where she took a training course as a nurse, receiving her diploma in July, 1903. After spending more than a year in Mississippi, going where her services were in demand, she then went West. After spending some months in Arizona and Oregon, she finally settled in San Luis Obispo, California. Because of her devotion to her chosen work, she soon built such a reputation as a nurse that her services were in demand far and near. In January, 1914, the California State Board of Health conferred upon her the degree or title of Registered Nurse. She was of a brave and heroic spirit, and her faithfulness and perseverance brought its reward, not only in this world, but also in the eternal world, for I know that she has entered into the rest that is prepared for the people of God. The funeral services were held in San Luis Obispo, California, Wednesday, January 27, and on the following morning her remains were interred in Salinas, California, in the burial ground of a kinsman. Her little home was a model of method, system and neatness. She loved righteousness and hated evildoing. A little over a year prior to her death she had an attack of influenza, from which she never fully recovered, not being of a stout physique and responding to many calls when she should have been taking needed rest. On Sunday morning, January 25, she attended services at her church, as was her custom, but she did not attend the evening service. About 9 o'clock that evening she talked with some of her friends over the telephone—the last time her voice was heard—for it was discovered the next morning that she had passed away, while asleep during the night, apparently without a struggle. How very unexpected the sudden news! How severe the shock when I was awakened at midnight many miles away, to hear the sad words—"Your sister is dead." It seems strange that she, whose brave heart and willing hand had comforted and ministered to so many, in their last hours in this world, should die suddenly, alone and so far away from loved ones. But it was God's way. His will, not ours, be done. They thought her to be asleep, but her sleep was that sleep "from which none ever wake to weep." Her home had become the guest chamber of heavenly visitors, who conveyed her obedient spirit to the God who gave it.

Besides the writer, four sisters, many relatives, and a host of friends mourn her departure. Farewell, dear sister, we shall meet again, where sickness and sorrow and parting shall be no more. GEO. W. HIVELY.

AN INTIMATE APPEAL TO THE UNSAVED.

By Charles D. Bulla,
Corresponding Secretary General Sunday School Board.

The Son of Man came to seek and to save sinners. It was a long distance from throne to manger. Will you close your hearts against him? You are not your own, for you were bought with a price.

You sit in judgment upon the world's Redeemer. What will you do with Jesus? You must do something with him. You cannot remain neutral. Do not crucify the Son of God afresh.

Near Stephen, the station on the Canadian-Pacific Railroad, at the summit of the Rocky Mountains, there is a rustic arch with the inscription, "The Great Divide." A sparkling stream flows beneath the arch and separates into two tiny rivulets, which flow on farther and farther apart, one finally emptying into the Pacific Ocean and the other into the Atlantic Ocean.

Dear unsaved friends, you are at the parting of the ways. Your destiny trembles in the balance. The Holy Spirit and the church appeal to you to become followers of the Man of Galilee.

A GOOD BOOK RECOMMENDED.

These are days when God's children want to know Him, and His Word, better. Having been a student of God's Word for years, and realizing how hard it is to make any real progress in any kind of study without some rule or guide, I am herein calling attention to a Bible study that will greatly help any who desire a better working knowledge of the Bible. The book referred to is: YOUR STUDY BIBLE, by John Weaver Weddell. The book can be had of the Sunday School Times for $1.

ESCAPED AN OPERATION

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Many Such Cases.

Cairo, Ill.—"Sometime ago I got so bad with female trouble that I thought I would have to be operated on. I had a bad displacement. My right side would pain me and I was so nervous I could not hold a glass of water. Many times I would have to stop my work and sit down or I would fall on the floor in a faint. I consulted several doctors and every one told me the same but I kept fighting to keep from having the operation. I had read so many times of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it helped my sister so I began taking it. I have never felt better than I have since then and I keep house and am able to do all my work. The Vegetable Compound is certainly one grand medicine." —Mrs. J. R. MATTHEWS, 3311 Sycamore Street, Cairo, Ill.

Of course there are many serious cases that only a surgical operation will relieve. We freely acknowledge this, but the above letter, and many others like it, amply prove that many operations are recommended when medicine in many cases is all that is needed.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Sunday School Day can be used to bring in new members and it can be and ought to be an evangelistic service. It is possible to make it a vain show, a mere dress parade. It is owing to the spirit of the person who has charge.

Rev. W. C. Owen, of Nashville, Superintendent of Young People-Adult Department, has agreed to give five days to help hold institutes in the Greenville District from April 6 to 11. Notices of places and dates will be sent out in a few days. With hearty co-operation from our Sunday school people the Greenville District can be put into the Third Rank Standard this year. Help, men, help.

Let North Mississippi send one hundred teachers to Lake Junaluska from July 7 to 21 to the Training School for leaders. A church cannot make a wiser investment of money than to give one or more worthy teachers this opportunity for study.

What better topic than evangelism can be found to be taught at the prayer meeting hour? Nearly every preacher visited during the year has agreed to put on the membership campaign and to give his people the evangelistic studies. Surely, good results must come from such faithful work.

Yes, by all means preach the gospel in power, teach it in the fullness of the Spirit, witness for the Savior out of an overflowing heart, go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in, compel them with a love that knows no bounds. While we tinker with the church machinery, the world laughs and rushes out into darkness. This is a time that tries men's souls; let us stick to the main thing.

Mrs. Vic Hoyle, the teacher of a large Bible class in the Tupelo school, ordered one hundred of the evangelistic studies for her class. Every teacher is called to be an evangelist—every teacher should teach evangelism by precept and example. The evangelistic impulse is born in the redeemed soul, but that impulse must be nurtured and practiced or else it will go out and leave the soul in darkness.

There are twenty-six million young people and children of Protestant homes in the United States that receive no definite religious instruction. Those who are so fortunate as to receive such instruction get only about twenty-four hours a year. The children of Jews receive three hundred and thirty hours, Roman Catholic children two hundred hours a year. Do we really believe in religious education? Then do we practice what we preach? How many of these unchurched people are you due to teach? Can you teach them before you reach them?

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

Last Sunday was spent at Monticello. I feel sure that under the leadership of the superintendent, this school is going to make fine progress toward the Standard of Efficiency. They will have to reorganize the whole Elementary Department. This they agreed to do and get the necessary literature for it. Brother Baggett, the pastor, starts well. He has had many things to interfere with the work.

Wednesday night was spent at Quitman. This Sunday school is in a flourishing condition. They need many things and are going to make an effort to get them. This church is in better shape than it has been in some time. The pastor and his people just suit each other. There are many happy features about this work. They are planning for a revival and have many things of forward movement in their plans.

The Conference-Wide Elementary Conference will be at Capitol Street, Jackson, Miss., May 4-5. Plan to come. Don't let anything interfere with your being present.

Pray for the work and the workers.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

1920 WESLEY BIBLE CLASS FEDERATION IS HISTORY.

On Tuesday, March 16, delegates from all parts of Louisiana were on their way to the State-wide Methodist Sunday School meeting to be held at Shreveport. The great Methodist churches of that city were ready for their guests. Noel Memorial Church, where our sessions were held, was organized to care for every detail that might arise. The excellent committee of reception, with Mr. Fred Russ as chairman, took charge of all delegates on arrival. Delegates were made to feel they were among friends. The Entertainment Committee, with its efficient chairman, Judge W. G. Banks, was always present to provide for the guests.

At the opening session the Federation was moving with the power of God's Spirit. We used some substitute speakers for those who were absent, but God made up for the lack of preparation on the part of the substitutes.

The address on the first night was given by Rev. C. A. Battle, and his message was instructive and inspiring. He told us that Methodists had inherited through our noble leader, John Wesley, a world vision of the highest type of Christianity.

The departmental conferences were under the direction of two of our church leaders in departments of Sunday schools. Mr. M. W. Brabham was greeted with enthusiasm by delegates who took his work. He gave lectures and conducted round-table discussions in the Intermediate-Senior work. Rev. W. C. Owen was popular with the Young People and Adult Departments. He conducted his conferences on the same plan as Mr. Brabham. The delegates will have full heads and big note-books to draw upon when they return to their schools. The addresses given by Mr. Brabham and Dr. Owen were practical and forceful. The whole federation was a school combined with popular addresses on religious education.

We regretted the absence of Miss Minnie E. Kennedy, who was detained on account of sickness. One of the conferences for the Elementary Department was conducted by Miss Margaret Murphy, of West Monroe, who is Elementary Superintendent for the Monroe District.

The address of Dr. W. R. Bourne, President of Centenary College, was most pleasing and instructive. He had perfect control of his audience, as he is a strong platform man. Dr. S. E. Hagar, of our missions in Japan, who was one of the Interchurch World Movement speakers in New Orleans, brought us a double message which warmed all our hearts. He spoke of the Interchurch World Movement and its work, closing with the work of the church in Japan. We are grateful to the Interchurch World Movement for the privilege of having Dr. Hagar with us.

Our district recognition service was more than we expected. We made very little effort to have delegates from districts, but worked on the Conference as a whole. The Federation was at high tide all the time. We had 260 registered delegates from all over the State. At recognition service, a discussion was made on the subject of charging $1.00 as registration fee from every delegate. This was a popular move and some one suggested that we give $1 now as a free-will offering, since we were not charging a registration fee this time, and $109 in cash was placed in the plate on the chancel rail of the church. This action was certainly a guarantee that the delegates welcome an opportunity to pay a registration fee.

An opportunity was given to classes, Sunday schools and individuals to pledge a definite amount to be used by the Sunday School Board. This was easily and quickly accomplished, and the amount pledged was $600, the same to be paid at the earliest convenience of the subscriber. All paying their subscription will make plain to the Treasurer, C. V. Breithaupt, that it is the Federation pledge.

Black-Draught As A Preventive

When You Begin Feeling Bad With Feverishness, Headache, Cold, or Constipation, Give Your Liver a Tonic—Take Black-Draught.

Candler, N. C.—"I don't believe there is a better medicine made than Black-Draught; I have used it and my mother's folks used it for colds, feverishness, headache and deranged liver." This statement recently was made by Mr. C. B. Trull, a well-known farmer on Route 3, this place.

"I have, before now, begun feeling dull, a headache would come on, and I would feel all full of cold, and take a few doses of Black-Draught and get all right," adds Mr. Trull.

"Last year my brother had measles, flu and pneumonia. They wired us; I went to Camp Jackson to look him up. Down there different ones were using preventatives. I stayed with him. The only thing I used was Black-Draught. It kept my system cleansed and I kept well and strong."

By keeping your liver and stomach in good order, you stand in little danger of catching serious ills that occasionally spread through town and country.

Get a package of Black-Draught and have it ready for the first symptom of a disordered liver.

WHAT MANY ESPECIALLY NEED.

In these days of strain, and stress, anxiety and worry, many people become pale, nervous, dyspeptic, in a word, all run-down. Their condition calls especially for Iron—but iron in a form in which it is pleasant to take, agreeable to the stomach, easily assimilated and nonconstipating. Iron is combined in this form with nux, celery, pepsin and other tonics and digestive in Peptiron, a real iron tonic, which is accomplishing a great deal in restoring health and strength, vitality, vigor and vim.
Iron is indispensable to the perfect nutrition of the body. Peptiron supplies it in therapeutic doses, and in a remarkably short time seems to make a new and perfectly working system out of an old and broken-down one, enriching the blood, giving good color to the lips, cheeks and ears, and brightening the eyes. Peptiron is a product of the C. I. Hood Co., and is sold by all druggists.—Adv.

WESLEY BIBLE CLASS FEDERATION.

Rev. W. W. Drake was a great host. With his usual diligence and happy way he made everybody feel that it was a pleasure for him to serve as host for the great Federation. The Methodists of the city co-operated with Noel Memorial in entertaining.

C. O. Beauchamp, the President of the Federation, gave himself unstintedly to his work and carried on the program with skill.

Lunch was served by the ladies of the church at noon each day. This was very much appreciated, as it gave us a social time between the busy sessions.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Judge W. G. Banks, Shreveport; Sec'y-Treasurer, O. H. Cline, Baton Rouge; Executive Committee—Alexandria District, A. R. Hyde, Long Leaf; Baton Rouge, O. H. Cline; Monroe, C. E. Beard, Lake Providence; Ruston, E. L. Walker, Jonesboro; New Orleans, J. G. Snelling; Lake Charles, A. M. Mayo; Houma, A. J. Hebert, Houma; Shreveport, C. O. Beauchamp.

This was the fourth Wesley Bible Class Federation for the Louisiana Conference and they have all been in the northern part of the State; but after hearing the speech of Brother A. M. Mayo, of Lake Charles, inviting us to meet with them at Lake Charles in March 1921, it was the unanimous vote that we accept their invitation. Hurrah for Lake Charles in 1921!

A glorious meeting has just closed and its blessings will continue in every soul and its inspiration will go to every part of the State.

NOTES.

We are proud to announce to you that through the generous gift of one of our laymen, we are soon to have a Conference Elementary Superintendent. I hope she will soon join with me in making the rounds of our schools. Thank God for generous-hearted laymen!

From the 27th of May to the 8th of June we are to have eight District Sunday School Institutes. These Institutes will be real schools of methods, and are to be honored by the presence of Miss Minnie E. Kennedy, Superintendent of the Elementary Department for the M. E. Church, South, and Mr. E. R. Stanford, the Intermediate-Senior Superintendent of the M. E. Church, South. I hope to have our new Elementary Superintendent with us in these Institutes. Dates for these Institutes have been accepted by the presiding elders of the districts, and as soon as places are accepted, full notice of the meetings will be published.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

REMITTING EPWORTH LEAGUE MISSIONARY (CENTENARY) MONEY.

It is necessary that Epworth Leaguers and pastors have clearly in mind the definite plan by which the Centenary is collecting its funds. The Africa Special is the Missionary Special of the Epworth League and since its plan of work is the same as before the Centenary Movement, its method of collection and remittance is the same in each Conference.

Briefly stating the method: each Chapter treasurer collects all funds and monthly remits them to the Conference Epworth League Treasurer, using the standard remittance blanks which are furnished free by the Central Office on application. The Conference League Treasurer remits monthly to the General Treasurer, Col. John E. Edgerton. At no time must Epworth League Missionary (Centenary) money be given to the Local or Conference Centenary Treasurer, nor to the Conference Teller. See that it goes through the proper channels.

From the information I have, only two Conferences have attempted anything irregular in remitting. Note what has come to light as a result. Because of the impossibility of keeping any oversight of the funds thus handled irregularly, we could only check up the year's reports. There was a discrepancy of about two-thirds of the amount claimed to have been reported from the Conference. After a long search and correspondence it was found that the money had been remitted, but because of its irregular source it was being directed to other uses than those for which it was subscribed.

This would not have happened if the funds were remitted and collected according to the Standard Plan. The Centenary Commission has recognized the Conference Epworth League Treasurer as the proper one to handle the League's funds. We cannot have any oversight over the funds when they are handled otherwise, nor guarantee their application as directed. This we do not believe is fair to those making their contributions.

Other plans might be as good or better, but this is the one that has been adopted. Will you not therefore lend your assistance in helping us make the work as easy and effective as possible—by following the Standard Plan?

I feel sure that you will be interested in seeing that your Epworth League Conference the coming year follows the Standard Plan.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Report of Corresponding Secretary, For Year Ending December 31, 1919.

"The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

We have just closed the most momentous year of our history as an organization; and at no previous time have we entered on a more promising year's work than the present. Last year our forces were seriously hindered, and in some cases entirely disrupted, by war conditions, the epidemic of influenza, and many other unfavorable circumstances. To-day, our hearts are grateful to God for a bright outlook on the future, and for the removal of many obstacles to the forward progress of His work in our hands.

Last year was peculiarly significant in the realization of hopes and answers to prayers for the cessation of untoward world-wide conditions; and now if we but take up bravely the work laid out for us, and as individual members of the greatest organization for women, conscientiously do each her own part, God will more abundantly than ever bless our humble efforts.

Many wonderful things revealed in the past few years impress us with the fact that it is a wonderful thing to be an American woman in these crucial days; and now, as never before does it mean so much to be, better still, a Methodist American woman.

Many things have happened in the past year, in which Methodism has had a large share, which give us cause to rejoice. Through the achievements of our own Centenary Movement, God has led us out into a broader, higher place, where we see as never before the needs of His people in other lands. Our women are coming more and more to realize that the Missionary Society is their own priceless heritage, whose opportunities for service we enjoy because of those rich lives poured into it in years gone by; and they are beginning more and more to take up the responsibility imposed by this great opportunity.

Regarding the specific work of the past year in this Conference, we are able to speak encouragingly of every phase. The 15 per cent increase urged by last Council in the matter of organizations, membership, and funds has in many cases been realized or surpassed.

In spite of the fact that one district has been without a secretary the whole year, two new, thriving societies have been organized within its bounds, at Lyman and Picayune, Seashore District. Another wide-awake district, the Meridian, has nine new organizations to report. The others, while not having as many new auxiliaries to show for their work still report a healthy increase of interests and intelligent handling of the work.

The large number of auxiliaries observing the Week of Prayer, "Wesley House Day," and "Harvest Day" with fine results was indeed gratifying. Many doubled and some trebled their previous offerings.

It was with some trepidation, but much faith, that your president and corresponding secretary at Council raised the pledge $2500 over last time, making it this year $7500, the greatest increase, I believe, that had ever been made. It is with joy that we announce it "paid in full."

The scholarship for Miss Willie G. Hall, of Walnut Grove, whose papers had been unanimously accepted by the Candidates Committee, was apportioned among the seven districts at the mid-year executive meeting: this has been well taken care of, thanks to the good work of the district secretaries.

If the whole splendid rank and file of women in Southern Methodism but realized fully the opportunities for service in this branch of church work, as do the 10 per cent of them constituting our membership, how beautifully the whole wonderful machine would move forward, and how marked would be the results! As our Home Base Secretary said, "Our organization must be enlarged and strengthened. It is a beautiful machine, but not large enough nor sufficient enough for the output demanded this year. We must have a '1920 model,' as they say of automobiles."

It seems we shall never reach that plane of efficiency when to stress the importance of prompt reporting from each office is unnecessary. If each auxiliary officer did but realize how much depends upon her report, how much more intelligently the Conference officers could keep the Council officers in touch with the work as a whole! May the importance of the task, and the greatness of its needs compel each one of us to exclaim, "I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is yet day, for the night cometh when no man can work."

Following are some statistics showing the general condition of our work for 1919, largely approximate for the reason just mentioned; but gratifying as a whole:

Number of adult auxiliaries, 160; number of new adult auxiliaries, 20.

Number of members, 3575; number of new members, 225.

Number of Young People's societies, 34; number of new Young People's societies, 5; number of members, 375; number of new members, 85.

Number of Junior Divisions, 41; number of Junior members, 450.

Number of Baby Divisions, 15; number of new members, 2.

Number of subscribers to Missionary Voice, 915; number of subscribers to Young Christian Worker, 115; auxiliaries presenting stewardship, 150; auxiliaries observing "Week of Prayer," 125; scholarship, 1; amount sent Conference Treasurer, $13,890.

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. H. L. McCLESKEY,

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Minden Mothers and Maldens Work.

Sunday, February 29, the evening service at the Minden Methodist Church was conducted by the Woman's Missionary Society and was the occasion of the installation of officers with a pleasing and instructive program following. Mrs. Obe Lowe presided, reading the Bible lesson and calling upon others who had prepared for the evening program. Rev. K. W. Dodson offered prayer, and songs were sung. A solo by Mrs. J. L. Jewel was much enjoyed. Mrs. J. W. Brown read an interesting paper on Home Missions, Mrs. W. H. Hortman on Foreign Mission, their origin and development. Miss Jacqueline Taylor, President of the Young People's Society, told just what work that enthusiastic branch of the auxiliary was doing. The adult, young people and junior branches of the Society were represented and proved that the Missionary Society, under the direction of the able president and supervision of the beloved pastor, Rev. K. W. Dodson, is doing most excellent work. The plan that lies out before the auxiliary for this year is especially promising and it is believed that 1920 will be the very best year in the existence of the Missionary Society.

Drugs Excite Your Kidneys, Use Salts

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers, Drink Lots of Water.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.—Adv.

THE FAMILY ALTAR.

By Rev. Wm. I. White.

No preacher needs to take a religious census to determine unmistakably the fact that there are few "family altars" in comparison with the great number of Christian families. From the fact that a given numbor of families in any community, whose members are within the pale of the church, have few family altars, we cannot logically reason that it is true everywhere. What is often true of a part is not always true of the whole. But any Christian worker who spends more or less time with people, who desires and seeks to know their joys that he may rejoice with them, who desires to know their sorrows that he, too, may share in them, and who questions Christian people as to their form of family worship, will be convinced that the inferred truth above is a correct statement of a fact. And this is more readily realized when it is remembered that "people are people," and that what is good for some is good for all, and what is applicable to a few is often applicable to many.

This is a problem in connection with the church. But the church is an institution of God. It is then the people of the Kingdom, Christian people, who are comfronted with the seriousness of this fading form of family worship. The world is not interested in that which represses evil and vice and develops a high standard of Christian life and living.

What touches the home-life, touches church-life; and what touches church-life, touches the life of man and the nation; and what touches the life of man touches the vital interest of Him who is deeply and divinely concerned in man's salvation.

Civilization itself, rising higher and higher and spreading wider and wider till it reaches from State to State, from nation to nation, finds its real source in the germ-life of Christian homes; and it finds its power of propagation not in law and order, more than in the culture and moral training of the young life in the Christian home.

The more value attached to home and home-life among the young, the more alarming is any situation which shows a decrease in family worship. Prayer is a means of grace.

But the question may be, "Who is responsible?" The world quickly answers, "The church is responsible." Oh, no! That is because the world doesn't care for either the fact, or the responsibility of the fact in the case. The church is an institution of God, ordained as a means of grace by which the world may be brought to Christ; that is, to a knowledge of the power of God as revealed through His Son.

Certainly Christianity is not responsible for everything that goes wrong in the lives of those who profess to be new creatures with the religion of Christ in them, and "all undone" without this religion.

Even those who would say "the church has failed," say that Christianity has not failed. Of course Christianity has not failed. It never will fail. It can not fail because it is of God. It contains all the good of other religions, and more good still. It is the only religion that answers the cry of the heart and conscience for atonement for sin. It is the only religion that reveals the perfect Fatherhood of God.

So then, if family worship as a means of grace is indispensable in the home; if it is a fact that the family altars are few in comparison with the Christian families, why, then, the question, "Who is responsible?" may not only be asked, but answered.

It has already been said that neither the church nor Christianity is responsible, which is true. There are three great, ultimate realities in the Kingdom of God: the world, God, and self, or man. God is the source of all that is good. The world cares not for the things of God. Therefore, the responsibility rests upon self. "Man won't do what it is his privilege to do," says Mr. Wesley.

For the woman who is weary dreary and sad

A woman on her feet all day very often has backache, dizzy feelings at times, and pains here or there. If she will listen to what her neighbors say, and to the women who have had the experience, she will go to the nearest drug store and obtain a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This is just the womanly tonic she needs periodically, and many are the women who express themselves as deeply indebted to Dr. Pierce for this wonderful discovery. It is an herbal nerve tonic which strengthens the weak woman and overcomes many of those diseases which cause backache, headache, dizzy feelings, sometimes fainting spells, and those distressing pains and bearing down feelings. Read what this woman says:

Jackson, Miss.—"I was weak, nervous and run-down in health in my early married life and seemed to have inward trouble. I took several bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and found it to be just the tonic my system required. The 'Prescription' gave me renewed health and strength and I take pleasure in recommending it."—MRS. E. A. HOLLIDAY, 946 Central St.

LAXATIVE for Aged People

THE BANE of old age is constipation. The bowels become weak and unable to perform their functions without aid. For this purpose only the mildest and gentlest laxative should be used. The use of harsh cathartics aggravates the trouble and makes the constipation worse. Chamberlain's Tablets are a favorite with people of middle age and older on account of their gentle action.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL AND LIFE SERVICE.

On January 22, 1920, representatives of the Board of Education, Epworth League Board, Board of Missions, and the General Sunday school Board met and after full discussion appointed a committee to work out a plan for joint Life Service presentation to our young people. It was agreed to cooperate with the Life Service Commission of the Centenary until the close of its special campaign, making it the clearing-house for all enlistment cards that may come in. It was further provided by resolution that the General Secretaries of the several Boards concerned should be a committee to work out plans for permanent co-operation, with due regard for the Educational Commission in its approaching campaign to begin in May.

Life Work Decision.

For use in personal interviews with those who have already made a declaration for Christ and felt the call to definite Christian service, a joint card was prepared upon which these might indicate a preference. Some fields of service are suggested as follows:

The ministry, foreign missions, home missions—all of which are well known and concerning which the Board of Education and the Board of Missions will gladly furnish full information.

Religious Education, which implies:

I. FULL-TIME salaried service, as Conference field secretaries, department superintendents, directors of teacher training, special workers, directors of religious education in local churches, special workers for local community Sunday school unions, and professors of religious education in colleges and universities.

II. PART-TIME Service, salaried or unsalaried, for those who do not feel called to full salaried service, as Conference field secretaries and department superintendents, where impossible to employ full time workers, district and sub-district officers and department superintendents, unpaid directors of religious education in the local church, officers and teachers of the Sunday school, special teachers for Standard Training Schools, positions in local church work.

The Sunday School's Responsibility.

Since the church has committed to the Sunday school the work of religious education of its entire constituency for the whole range of life, there is a clearly defined field for the promotion of life service in the Sunday school. In any presentation of life service, it is clearly understood (from the Sunday school standpoint, at least) that the presentation be regarded from two distinct approaches: first, the educational, which requires that the young life of the church shall be given definite help and guidance in a decision for life service; and, second, that the definite need for Christian workers in certain specific fields, such as the ministry, missionary work, social service, and religious education, should be presented to all our young people.

Presenting the Claims.

It is also recognized that if our young people are to choose wisely, they should have presented to them not only the NEED of workers for all fields, but also the FIELDS OF SERVICE in a thorough and impartial manner. This is now being done in the Intermediate and Senior Graded Lessons as part of the educational work of the Sunday school. In addition to this, plans are now being perfected by which our Seniors from 15 to 17 and Young People from 18 to 23, shall be brought face to face with these facts through literature and organized campaigns, in classes and departments of local Sunday schools, in camps, in training schools, and in preparatory schools, junior and standard colleges, and in universities, so that they may be wisely helped to make the right decision. Although every department of Christian work will be presented, we clearly recognize the right of every Board to present its particular work, while we lay special emphasis upon the field of religious education as has been outlined above.

Training For Service.

Several of our universities and colleges have established chairs of religious education where regular courses can be given throughout the year and also in special summer sessions. The General Sunday School Board, through the Department of Teacher-training, has established Lake Junaluska and Dallas Standard Training Schools for Leaders and a number of Conference and City Standard Training Schools, in order to give short courses on definite Sunday school work to those who are anxious to receive this training. It is also offering by correspondence or through local training classes splendid courses in all departments of Sunday school work.

The Departments Responsible.

Because that period of life when training should be given and life choices made comes within the ages included in the Senior Department, 15-17, and the Young People's Department, 18-23, the outlining and conducting of a well-rounded program of life service is lodged in these two departments; the superintendents are endeavoring so to correlate their work that the most effective results may be obtained. They earnestly desire that all our young people shall have these facts of both full-time and part-time service presented to them, and are ready to advise with all who are interested.

Address Rev. W. C. Owen, Superintendent Department of Young People's and Adult Work, or Rev. E. R. Stanford, Superintendent Department of Intermediate-Senior Work, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tennessee.

FROM LULA, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: The second quarterly conference for Lula and Dundee was held last Sunday. The charge is in an excellent condition and the people are enthusiastic over the work in hand. Nineteen have been received by letter and one on profession of faith. More interest is being taken in the Sunday schools, and congregations are good, if not large, considering the weather we have had, and roads which are all but impassable. The salaries are paid to date, more than the second quota on Centenary is paid, and about half of benevolences. We expect to begin work on a new parsonage at an early date; all plans are mature and all members a unit on the subject. The Woman's Missionary Society at Lula has added some furniture to the parsonage, and the Aid society at Dundee has recently bought a dining room set complete. Both of these societies are doing splendid work. I think special mention should be made of a most beautiful incident which took place at the meeting of the Aid society which met at Mrs. J. W. Lake's home in Maud this week. There were eighteen ladies present. When the call was made for new members to join, two little girls, Margaret Irene Lake and Jeane Moore Johnson, both of them five years old, applied for membership and were duly elected. It was a beautiful and touching sight.

The manifest spirit of co-operation of the membership, the fraternal spirit among all the churches here and the uniform courtesy to and consideration for the pastor and his family make this a delightful charge. Our greatest need now is a gracious revival, and it's coming.

S. A. BROWN, P. C.

SOME OTHERS.

Dear Brother Carley: The Oxanna Methodist Church, in Anniston, Ala., of which I am pastor, has a modest part in the "Bob Jones meeting" which is now on here at the Lyric Theater.

The meeting originated with Dr. Keener Mathews, pastor of the First Methodist Church. Later on, the Parker Memorial Baptist Church joined with the First Methodist in supporting the meeting, and finally all the churches of the city, several in number, were formally invited to take stock in the big revival effort.

This invitation was accepted by well-nigh every church, so that the congregations are immense, and the indications encouraging for far-reaching results, and benefits, more or less to the entire people, and to every church.

Bob Jones possesses national distinction as a revivalist, and he "turned down 200 calls," he said, to make good on his agreement here, of some months' standing with the First Methodist Church.

A PROFITABLE OCCUPATION.

While we are passing through the pressure of the present day, we should be planning for the best way. Sometimes a little help gives us a good throw forward.

It is unquestionably true, that too many of our people are engaged at public work—all of whom are compelled to buy their table supply, and at the present price of groceries their salary is not sufficient to give them a wholesomely supplied table. I well remember that during the Civil War and the reconstruction days following the same, the table of nearly every home in the South was well supplied with hog and hominy. This was the result of farm life. We had more farmers then than we have now.

While the husbands, and the sons who were old enough for war service, battled for our side of the question, the faithful wives and daughters were playing their part with the little boys on the farm. We enjoyed the work we did, for shortly after the old ox-bell rang for dinner, we were seated around a table well supplied with cornbread, milk and butter, Irish potatoes and other vegetables.

We had but one boss, and we reverenced him. God blessed our labors, and our living was plentiful. Let us renew our service to God, and return to farm life—the happiest, and most profitable of all occupations.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

A GOSPEL OF POWER.

We need to remember always that the gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. If it have not saving power, we are indulging in vain beliefs and holding out false hopes. Men are in the death-like grip of sin, and their violent struggles to deliver themselves by their own power are altogether fruitless—they know it in their own hearts. A beautiful system of ethics, or a sweet philosophy of life may be all right for the man who has never realized that the penalty of sin is death—that is, he may be content to strive leisurely for the attainment of a high moral standard; but when he is in the "gall of bitterness and the bonds of iniquity," he wants some access of power that will deliver him "from the body of this death." It were mockery to point the drowning man to the glory of a lofty mountain peak, or the charm of a glowing sunset—throw him a rope by means of which he may be saved from a watery grave! Thank God for a power that can actually save the worst sinner in the world!

NO TIME TO LOSE.

There is plenty of time to use, but none to lose. "I didn't have time," is one of the poorest excuses in the world for failure to accomplish an assigned task. All the great discoveries, all the great achievements, all the great contributions to human welfare have been made by men and women who had no more time than we have. There are twenty-four hours in every day, and no individual has a monopoly of them. We live neither in the future nor the past—but in the now; we can use or waste only what we have. What are we doing NOW? We may lose time by regretting our failures yesterday, or by dreaming of what we shall do to-morrow; we can save it by doing something to-day. There are too many urgent calls upon our energies for us to throw away the only medium through which we can do our duty—time.

A MAN'S JOB.

We shall not undertake to prove that the work of the ministry is a man's job; if anybody doubts it, let him try it. We have it in mind simply to call attention to one phase of the minister's work that emphasizes the peculiarly difficult and delicate tasks that confront him every day. So far as our experience and observation go, the laboring men of this country are not attending church. A few of them are, of course, but the great majority of them never do. Does the church want them? Has it anything to offer them? Is it trying to get them? Why is it not succeeding? We unreservedly answer "yes" to the first three questions; we cannot answer the fourth one. We can suggest and imagine and theorize—but we cannot give a clear-cut, definite answer to this perplexing question. Laboring men are not essentially different from any other men; there are more of them in every community than any other class. Can they be reached by the church? Certainly—but it is a man's job to do it.

A FACT, NOT A THEORY.

We may as well assume that woman suffrage is an accomplished fact. The Susan B. Anthony Amendment, giving the ballot to women, has been ratified by thirty-five of the necessary thirty-six States, and while the advocates of the Amendment are having unusual difficulty in securing ratification by the thirty-sixth State, there can be no reasonable doubt but that it will be accomplished. A great many people of this country have conscientiously opposed the conferring of the privileges of the franchise upon women, upon grounds that, to say the least, were entitled to respectful consideration. But the verdict has gone against them, and we are now face to face with a fact, not a theory. The women will soon have the right to vote upon exactly the same terms with men, and we may assume that a fair proportion of them will take advantage of their opportunities. It is estimated that the adoption of the Amendment will add at least 26,000,000 possible votes in the general elections—a number sufficiently large to affect materially the result of any campaign. It is unreasonable to suppose that these votes will all be cast one way—the women have a way of doing their own thinking, and they will vote in accordance with their views of the questions at issue. We cannot believe, either, that the right to vote will have any appreciable effect in lowering the high standards of modesty and morality that have always characterized the women of this country, or that the home life of the nation will suffer as a result of the exercise of political privileges. What we are concerned about, and what we should give diligent attention to, is that our women shall be so trained in the responsible duties of citizenship that they will take seriously the exercise of the new power that is already practically in their hands. Our own feeling is that a new purifying influence has been brought into public life that will mean much for the moral welfare of the people. There are infinitely more good women than there are bad women; and the influence of good women will do much toward eliminating many of the evils of present-day politics.

A GOOD SIGN.

Without undertaking to say that the verdict was in keeping with the facts in the case, though we have no reason to doubt that it was, we look upon the recent conviction of a prominent and wealthy man on the ground that he had bought his way into the United States Senate, as a good sign in our political life. If any injustice was done in this particular case, it will doubtless be corrected in the appellate court; but the fact that the maximum penalty was imposed will serve as a warning to all unscrupulous politicians that their efforts to debauch the electorate are a dangerous way to win office. The legitimate expenses of a political campaign are, of course, large; but we look with suspicion upon any cause that depends too largely upon "paying its way" to gain favor. A man who would steal an election is not very well qualified to guard the liberties of his constituents.

CONSCIENCE.

A recent news item was to the effect that some anonymous sender enclosed $2000 in a registered letter to the widow of a man whom he had defrauded of that amount many years ago. Some people, of course, will say that the guilty one had acted under the impulse of a morbid fear; maybe he did, but we prefer to call it conscience. An aroused conscience allows no peace until restitution is made. It makes life miserable until right has been done, or its own voice has been stifled by obdurate persistence in evil. It can do infinitely more than cause a thief to restore the few paltry dollars he has stolen; it can send the burdened soul to God in heart-broken penitence and eager faith.

THE COMMERCIAL VALUE OF CHEERFULNESS.

We read not long ago of a girl who lost her position in an office because she always had the "blues," and the efficiency of the whole office force was lessened by the effect of her lugubrious countenance; we know of a bank cashier who was asked to hand in his resignation because of his surly manner in dealing with the customers of the bank; we talked with a man the other day who declared he would never set foot again in a certain store because a clerk had answered a civil question in a most churlish way. Cheerfulness is really a business asset. It is worth much, too, in the church.

HIGH PRICES.

We read the other day a press dispatch to the effect that the plumbing contractors in a Southern city had been forced to suspend operations because their skilled employees had refused to work for less than $12 a day. They had been receiving $10 a day, but they claimed that such wages were inadequate to meet the present high cost of living. We have no means of knowing what margin of profit the contractors themselves demand in executing their contracts—presumably it is liberal enough, and the workmen may have just grounds for feeling that they were not getting a fair share of the product of their labor. It is evident that the "vicious circle" of high prices has not yet been broken. Just as the "ultimate consumer" is the victim in any case, so he will have to become his own deliverer. It seems a pity to have to advocate a non-buying policy on the part of the people, but there is apparently no other way to restore the economic equilibrium. The usual explanation that high prices are due to the fact that demand is greater than supply, may be economically correct; but when we remember that, in economics, "demand" simply means "desire for a thing, coupled with the ability to pay the price," it is easy to see that "need" and "demand" are far apart. We buy a great many things that we do not need, simply because we want them and have the money to pay whatever they cost. If the nation, for a period of six months, would buy only what it "needs," instead of what it "wants," production would catch up with consumption and prices would inevitably fall to lower levels. Present prices are too high for some of us to buy even what we "need."

THE FATHER'S CARE.

The tender Father's loving heart
Does not forget the pain and smart
Which his obedient children bear
As pilgrims oft beset with care.

He notes the passing of the years,
And in his book records our tears;
He who observes the sparrow's fall
Can understand our frailties—all.

Through him, all sorrow flees away,
Then joy and gladness come to stay;
And no good gift will he withhold
From those who keep within the fold.

UNIFICATION.

By Bishop Collins Denny,
Member of the Joint Commission on Unification.

II.

In the former article it was shown that two General Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, recommended "that the colored membership of the various Methodist bodies be formed into an independent organization, holding fraternal relations with the reorganized and united church" (Journal, 1918, pages, 197, 419), yet that our Commission by a large majority had transmitted a plan for "consideration and decision" which accepted in full the position of the M. E. Church, giving the colored membership proportional representation in the General Conference and the legal right to membership in the white church conferences.

In this article it will be shown that one General Conference of the M. E. Church recommended "that the General Conference be made the supreme legislative, executive, and judicial body of the church under constitutional provisions and restrictions" (Journal, General Conference, M. E. Church, South, 1918, page 420), and that our Commission also yielded this essential point.

Why a Restricted General Conference Was Organized.

The law under which the General Conference of 1808 assembled was as follows: "The General Conference shall be composed of all the preachers who shall have traveled four years from the time that they were received on trial by an Annual Conference and are in full connection at the time of holding the Conference." (Discipline, 1805, page 15.) Only those preachers attended who could be spared from their work for the time necessary to make the journey. General Conferences prior to 1812 had supreme, uncontrolled, unrestricted power to make any changes they thought best in the doctrine or government of the church. The General Conference of 1808, possessing this supreme power, provided for delegated General Conferences acting under a constitution. The fountain of power was in the preachers who were members of the Annual Conferences, and the Constitution of the church protected the preachers from any act by the General Conference in contravention of the Constitution.

This check on the General Conference was necessary, because, to quote the words of one of the greatest and most influential men in the church, himself a member of the General Conference of 1808, and of the others through 1844 and beyond: "Each General Conference felt itself at full liberty, not being prohibited by any standing laws, to make whatever alterations it might see fit, or to introduce any new doctrine or item in the Discipline which either fancy, inclination, discretion, or indiscretion might dictate. Under this state of things, knowing the rage of men for novelty, and witnessing the destructive changes which have frequently laid waste churches by removing ancient landmarks and so modifying doctrines and usages as to suit the temper of the times or to gratify either a corrupt taste or a perverse disposition, many had felt uneasy apprehensions for the safety and unity of the church and the stability of its doctrines, moral discipline, and the frame of its government; and none were more solicitous upon this subject than Bishop Asbury, who had labored so long with an assiduity equaled by few, if indeed any, and suffered so much for the propagation and establishing of these important points. He therefore greatly desired, before he should be called hence, to see them fixed upon a permanent foundation." (See Bang's "History M. E. Church," Vol. II, pages 233, 234.)

The human nature of 1808 and prior is the human nature of 1920 and subsequent. Men continue to act from "fancy, inclination, discretion, or indiscretion." There continues to be a rage for novelty. It is not within the purpose or power of the writer to determine the motives that led these able and respected brethren to transmit this plan of unification. He is convinced that they believed they were doing for Methodism "the best they could do under the circumstances." For himself he believes the plan contains "destructive changes;" he believes it may "lay waste" the church in the South. By those who know the church the "removal of ancient landmarks" is too plain to be overlooked. "The temper of the times" may be, indeed is alleged to be, in favor of these radical changes in the government of the church we have known and loved and to which with gladness we gave our lives; but these changes are proposed against all the wisdom and experience of those who by God's help made the church and left it to us.

Possible Overthrow of Methodist Doctrine.

The plan even proposes to make it possible for the General Conferences, without consulting the Annual Conferences, to change the doctrines of the church, doctrines distinctive of Methodism, doctrines whose proclamation brought denunciation, abuse, and calumny on our fathers, yet drew the multitudes into the church, doctrines which by the favor of God and through his power finding the sinner weighed down with apprehended woe and under the low black roof of the dreaded wrath of God replaced that roof with the vault of the highest heaven and filled his soul with the peace that passeth understanding. Such a statement demands inexpugnable proof, and such proof will be given.

The Proof.

While this proposed Constitution prohibits the General Conference from altering the Articles of Religion or establishing any new standards or rules of doctrine contrary to our present existing and established standards of doctrine, it is universally known and admitted that the Articles of Religion do not contain the doctrine distinctive of Methodism. Those Articles contain some of the doctrines common to all branches of Protestantism —Calvinist, Arminian, Lutheran, and Huguenot. Some of them belong to Christianity in its widest meaning.

The Standards of Doctrine, in words protected by this Constitution, have never been authoritatively defined; and the Joint Commission, though asked to define them so that the church could take authoritative action, declined to do more than to leave them as a phrase without content. At the same time that Commission, in this Constitution, gives to the General Conference, without action by the Annual Conferences, "authority * * * to alter and change * * * the ritual of the church." Our Commission by direct vote refused to insert before "ritual" the words "non-doctrinal parts."

Without a dissenting vote, our College of Bishops reported to the General Conference of 1914 that "Ritual is doctrine, and this has been the view from the earliest ages of the church. The Nicene Creed was built around the form used by the church of Caesarea. * * * The latter form (the ritual for the administration of the Lord's Supper) sets forth the confession of sin, which sin provokes God's wrath and indignation, of the cry for forgiveness and the promise that on hearty repentance and true faith it will be granted, of the one atonement as the full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world, of the coming again of our Lord, and of the ascription of praise to the Lord God of hosts. The very essence of the gospel is here in the very words that for centuries the church of God has used." The opinion of the bishops in no sense binds the church. It is the result, not of a statement made on the spur of the moment, but, in the case of some of the bishops, the settled opinion reached after years of study and thought, Alpheus W. Wilson at the head of them.

If in our day anything occurred that could create astonishment, here is a really astonishing event. A body of fifty chosen Methodists—editors, secretaries, college presidents and professors, judges, lawyers, bankers, pastors, presiding elders, men of business, and bishops—turns down a motion to protect the doctrine enshrined in our ritual and hands over these precious doctrines to an uncontrolled General Conference. In the bond which the church is asked to sign this is specifically written. The Annual Conferences are asked and expected to give up all voice in the control of the ritual.

Not since the Diet of Augsburg met on that June day in 1530 has Protestantism known a more critical day than the day in which we live. Doctrine, even that relating to the nature of the person of our Lord and the atonement offered by him, is decried, yea, denounced. Many with an ignorance that is pitiable and an assurance that is blind act as if it were possible to believe without believing anything, as if the more definite the object of the faith, the more invalid and valueless the faith. Religious vagueness has become a virtue, and the nearer the approach to a vacuum, the greater is the plenum of truth!

To tell one who doubts not the salvation of his soul is wrapped up in the truth he believes and lives that he must trust the General Conference, that the body of the church found in the Annual Conferences should not have a voice in the decision of the ritual, the very heart of our doctrine, is to tell him almost to abandon hope, because a wearied General Conference again and again has been thoughtless or careless, has even been stampeded. On the other hand, let time be given for a thoughtful consideration by the members of the Annual Conferences for discussion and deliberation in these separate bodies. Let this multitude of counsellors be consulted and the danger is reduced to a minimum. In addition to the fact that it is the privilege of the rank and file to be consulted, a sacred privilege which must in reason be admitted, it will not do to say that numbers of these preachers are not sufficiently informed to exercise the Protestant right to the protection of personal judgment, since they are personally accountable for the truth they believe and preach; for unless experience be a cheat and fact a liar, a soundly converted heart makes a wonderfully clear head, and most of our preachers are soundly converted. History, despised history, the appeal to which now spreads over some minds a transparent veil of amusement as cover for underlying scorn, the history of the church in any age, in all ages, testifies to that fact. Since 1882 by the requisite constitutional majority the General Conference has on six occasions sent its recommendations to the Annual Conferences, and but one of those recommendations has been adopted. Shall the church now deny to the preachers and laymen in Annual Conference assembled any voice in the determination of the official creed of the church?

Our Universities Taken Out of Our Ownership and Control.

Among the thirteen specified powers, in addition to "full legislative power over all matters distinctively connectional," this Constitution gives to the General Conference the power "to control and direct all connectional educational enterprises of the church." The provision for regional control "of educational institutions of the church" is specifically confined to those institutions "within its own territory which are not otherwise legally provided for," and as specifically excepts "those which are owned, controlled, and supervised by some other organic agency of the church." In the Northern church it is said that their Freedmen's Aid Society, a General Conference agency, owns and controls the educational property used for their colored membership. Be this as it may, all their white schools, colleges, universities, and seminaries will be left to local or to regional ownership and control, while our universities, Emory University and Southern Methodist University, which are under our General Conference, an "organic agency of the church" other than the Regional Conference, will by this proposed Constitution be turned over to the General Conference, a body in which our people are in a woeful minority.

Regional Conferences But Temporary.

By this Constitution the concurrent vote of two successive General Conferences can take away territory from any regional jurisdiction, without its consent, and after three quadrennium the boundaries of a regional jurisdiction can be changed without the consent of the jurisdiction. That is, after eight years territory may be taken away from any regional jurisdiction, and after twelve years its boundaries may be changed. Some of the Commissioners stated that this was to provide for an expected early abolition of Regional Conferences. If there were no thought or purpose of abolition, why this provision? Yet the Regional Conference is proclaimed as a great concession to the South and by some advocates of this plan is regarded as the very center of the system. Twelve years is a short life for what is said to be the most important and the most attractive feature of this Constitution.

The General Conference an Autocracy.

The trend of the world toward democracy has become a tidal wave. Autocracy, despotism, tyranny is not confined to governments under the control of a single ruler or of a few men. Any supreme uncontrolled authority is anti-republican, is an autocracy. This Constitution provides for a General Conference supreme in its legislative powers, supreme in its executive powers, and so all-inclusive as to be practically free from judicial control. In addition, once adopted, the Annual Conferences will be without legislative, executive, or final judicial voice. They will not need to be consulted. No man familiar with our last seven General Conferences needs to be told that a General Conference is impatient of control, indeed resents constitutional limitations of any kind. Certainly from 1866 and for years beyond our General Conference seems to have had the purpose to solve any doubt of its power by referring legislation to the Annual Conferences, yet again and again it acted without authority, as may be seen on pages 483 and following of the Journal of 1914 in a report of the College of Bishops to that General Conference. Of the many questions referred since 1866 to the Annual Conferences, the writer recalls but three that have become law. Under the proposed Constitution there could be no question of the legal warrant of the General Conference to take final and binding action. The thirteenth specification of powers following the general grant says "to govern any and all other matters of a connectional character."

If there be on earth any body so supreme and all-controlling as this proposed General Conference, the writer is ignorant of it. No State legislature has even an approach to such supreme powers, nor has Congress, nor has the House of Commons. It is not too much to say to any one familiar with constitutional law and history that this Constitution leads to revolution, or to disaster, or to both. Nothing is easier than to be an alarmist, except to be blind to manifest danger. Opposition to this plan of unification drew from an adherent of it the not very charitable charge of opposition to unification on any terms. Men accustomed to caution, to weighing probabilities, to bringing proposed solutions to the acid test of history, to the application of recognized maxims and eternal principles are seldom understood by those who are so intent on the accomplishment of a desired end that they lose sight of the means wisely adapted to the attainment of that end. Examination of this Constitution gives ample reason for six opposing votes, as well as for its transmission without a word of recommendation, and for the general and public understanding that transmission should not be interpreted as an agreement to support it.

No Efficient Executive.

Every government, especially a church government whose only power is moral suasion, needs an efficient executive. Our Methodist Protestant brethren do not in any particular differ from us in doctrine. Moreover, some of the ablest, most efficient preachers and laymen in Methodism joined that movement. What accounts for their small success? Their government. They have never had an efficient executive. Their Constitution makes no provision for such an office. They have the same needed boards for administrative work as ourselves, with practically the same necessary powers which have been given to our boards.

This proposed Constitution provides for no efficient executive. The rising opposition to an episcopacy in the church, an opposition as strongly and constantly manifested in the Joint Commission as it is in the church at large, pointed to the propriety of abolishing the episcopacy, of exercising this vestigial fragment of our Methodist anatomy. When public confidence is withdrawn from an office or from a man, when opposition grows to the proportions of a hurricane, wisdom demands a change, perhaps a radical change. In that Commission at least one voice that uttered no word in defense of episcopacy, not even asking for the continuance of the name (not being enamored of names, "those shadows of dreams"), one who was ready then and is ready now to vote for any substitute that would reasonably promise a functioning executive, one voice did plead for this essential in any efficient State or church government. The Commission left in the Constitution the word bishop stripped of all its content (vox et praeterea nihil) and made no provision of any kind for a real executive. The Commission was so consumed with the purpose to make the General Conference supreme, all-controlling, independent of everything else in the church that they trampled all before them, macadamizing the stones in the structure built more than a hundred years ago—remodeled and repaired to meet new conditions—throwing away the history and experience of the church, and flying in the face of every accepted maxim and principle of constitutional law. It may not have been in our minds, doubtless was not, but in reality, for the admiration of the thoughtless and of ourselves, we carved on the front of that wonderful supreme General Conference a line from Pope: "More wise, more learned, more just, more everything."

In this Constitution the executive is a bubble on the wave of a restless though all-controlling General Conference. It is the sheerest folly to make the General Conference, a body meeting but a few weeks once in four years, the executive.

Analogies need to be carefully watched. Their seeming light often proves to be darkness; their primrose path often ends in a smothering swamp. Where properly used, however, they give us that probability which Butler tells us is "the very guide of life." Give a frank answer to the question, pertinent in this connection, What would happen to Mr. Wilson, probably this very day, if the Constitution of the United States contained the words found in this Constitution, Congress shall have authority "to define and fix the privileges, powers, and duties of the" presidency? What would have happened to John Tyler and to others?

My friends will pardon me when I recall what they know fully as well as I, that near the close of Washington's second administration his military and political character was attacked, even his qualities as a man, and "with the most persevering effrontery an impeachment was publicly suggested." In the House of Representatives a motion was made to strike from a report a statement that "the confidence of his fellow citizens in the chief magistrate remained undiminished" and was, after reference to an enlarged committee, "so modified as to be free from exception." (Chief Justice Marshall.) Even the Virginia House of Delegates, at the close of Washington's presidency, by a vote of 74 to 69, refused to ascribe to Washington "wisdom in the cabinet, valor in the field, and purest patriotism in both." If even a Washington with his great, unselfish, and patriotic services to his country continued through more than forty years and given without stint, in an office fenced by the strong walls of the Constitution, for doing a great and needed act was exposed to the wilting blast of popular prejudice and passion, what must that executive anticipate who is protected alone by the possible good will of a supreme, uncontrolled General Conference? This blazing "sun of our system," combined with the "vehement east wind" of easily and constantly aroused passion, will smite the worm-bitten gourd which is the only shadow provided for an executive stripped naked of its functions.

Look at this Constitution and see whether a man after being given the poor compliment of a bare title is not left naked to any enemies his fidelity may have aroused, to have the face of his reputation more marred than is possible in the case of any other official, his character left without guard, his innocence without shield. The Constitution provided is contrary to the unbroken order of human events.

A Hamlinized General Conference.

The majority of the General Conference of 1844 was determined to accomplish an object. Even their indirect method was without authority of law. Men with power may take a law if one suited to their purpose can be found. Times without number power has acted without even the color of law. Power blinds, and then hungry desire feeds on fallacy and is as satisfied with it as reason is with cogent logic, and groundless assertion sufficiently persistent is greedily accepted as fact more true than holy writ.

L. L. Hamline was a brilliant speaker, and his audience was too intent on the accomplishment of its purpose to be halted by law or fact. His phosphorescent light was to that majority as the unclouded shining of the summer sun. Methodist literature contains no equal to that speech in disregard of facts, denial of unbroken history, and specious fallacy. His reward was the episcopacy. His auditors believed because they wished to believe. The word "plan" in the third restrictive rule must have occupied the blind spot in his field of vision, for that crucial word is not once on his lips, yet its presence in the law negates all he said.

An apology is offered for giving excerpts from a speech known to every reader of Methodist history. "This Conference adjunct (but rarely) with the Annual Conferences is supreme. Its supremacy is universal. It has legislative, judicial, and executive supremacy. * * * The restrictions are few and simple. They embrace our Articles of Religion, the ratio of representation, the perpetuity of episcopacy, and the general superintendency, the general rules, trial by committee and appeal, and the avails of the Book Concern. Beyond these slender restrictions its legislation is legitimate and conclusive. * * * But has it also executive functions, and are these supreme and all-controlling? So I affirm. * * * The General Conference is the fountain of all official executive authority. It is the Croton River of that system of executive ministrations which flow in healthful streams throughout our Zion. * * * Will it he disclaimed that the Conference is this fountain? Can you advise me where else than here executive authority takes its rise? Whence do you gather these life-preserving waters? It seems to me, sir, that, like God in Eden, who planted but did not till the garden, resigning that delightful task to man, so our Constitution says to this General Conference: Under such and such restrictions you are commissioned with 'full powers to make rules and regulations for' cultivating the fields of Methodism. Full powers for what? For two things. First, to make rules. That is legislation, sir, as it stands related to other powers of the Conference. But is this all it can do? No. It has full powers also to make regulations for the government of the church. What is a regulation? To appoint a preacher to a field of labor is a regulation. To remove him to another field is a regulation. To elect and empower a bishop to do this is a regulation. To recall the bishop to his former station is a regulation. * * * All that this Conference can confer it can withhold. And whatever it can confer and withhold it can resume at will, unless a constitutional restriction forbids it. * * * What is there in the Constitution to distinguish the three departments of our governmental authority or to bestow one and withhold another? The grant to us is in mass. * * * The streams of these administrative acts took their rise here, and, like running waters to the ocean, they return hither to their source. How unlike those of the President to the American Congress, with which I have heard them compared, are the relations of the episcopacy to this Conference! The Constitution of the United States gives Congress its powers and the President his. Each exists independent of the other. The term, the duties, the privileges of the President are all fixed by Constitutional provision. The presidency as an office and the incumbency of it are plainly designated. Our church Constitution recognizes the episcopacy as an abstraction and leaves this body to work it into a concrete form in any hundred or more ways we may be able to invent. * * * The General Conference under certain restrictions is the depository of all power—legislative, judicial, and executive— * * * the Conference has power from the grant of the Constitution (which is a catholic grant, embracing all beyond a few enumerated restrictions). * * * The General Conference, like the orb of day, rises to shed light on the surrounding scene. It is first shaped or fashioned and then, like Adam by his Maker, is endowed with dominion and made imperial in its relations, and, saving the slight reservations of the Constitution, it is all-controlling in its influence. Let it never be lost sight of that the General Conference is the 'sun of our system.'"

This Constitution does not lose sight of Hamline's views. That speech is the negative of which this Constitution is the printed photograph. What Hamline mistakenly claimed was already there is now with elaboration written in a Constitution we are asked to adopt. Some of our men are telling us they are amazed at the concession granted to our church! If to have our church Hamlinized be a concession, it has been given us in good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over.

Joshua Soule, who wrote the Constitution of the church, said in his address to the General Conference delivered a few days after Hamline spoke: "I have heard for the first time, either on the floor of this Conference, in an Annual Conference, or through the whole of the private membership of the church, this doctrine advanced. This is the first time I ever heard it."

We have had since 1808 a fairly well-balanced and most efficient government. We are asked to establish an all-controlling General Conference "endowed with dominion and made imperial in its relations," an autocracy. Shall we do it? Will the Annual Conferences consent to give up all their rights, except the right to be governed, if indeed that be a right?

WINNING SOULS FOR CHRIST.

By Charles D. Bulla,
Corresponding Secretary General Sunday School Board.

Revivals have had an important place in the development of the Christian church. God has set his seal upon the revival as a chosen means for the extension of his kingdom. Life ebbs and flows. This is true in the spiritual realm as in the natural. In times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord a deep spiritual interest pervades the community; Christians are edified; children commit themselves to the Lord Jesus; backsliders are reclaimed, and sinners are converted.

This is a crucial hour in the life of mankind. It is a time when the people of God should unite in the prayer of the prophet of the olden time: "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years; in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy."

Christian Education.

In the true sense the church does not make Christians; Christians make the church. And yet, as the chief agency in the building of the kingdom of God, it is the business of the church to teach religion. The Great Commission reads: "Make disciples of all the nations, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you."

The first concern of the church is Christian education—not education alone, and not evangelism only, but evangelism through education. The highest type of evangelism is based on the teaching of Scriptural truth. Paul gave eleven chapters of the letter to the Romans to teachings concerning the righteousness of God, justification by faith, the witness of the Spirit, and the restoration of Israel. Then follows his exhortation to holy living based on the "mercies of God" as set forth in the great doctrines of Christianity. "No exhortation to a good life that does not put behind it some truth as deep as eternity can seize and hold the conscience," said Phillips Brooks.

Personal Evangelism.

In the supremely important program of evangelism we should recognize the place of individual work for individuals during revival seasons and in the usual life of the church. We should also have eyes to see the opportunities for personal evangelism in the Sunday school class and in the home. Face-to-face and heart-to-heart interviews with individuals are the most successful way of winning men for Christ.

Charles Haddon Spurgeon said: "If the kingdom is ever to come to our Lord—and come it will—it never will come through a few ministers, missionaries, and evangelists preaching the gospel. It must come through every one of you preaching it—in the shop, when walking abroad, and by the fireside."

Every Christian should become an evangelist. The Gospel's record nineteen private interviews of Jesus with individuals. The disciple is not above his teacher. The first chapter of John is a chapter of eurekas. The herald, pointing to Jesus, said: "Behold the Lamb of God!" John and Andrew followed Jesus; Andrew brought his brother, Simon Peter, to Jesus; Jesus found Philip; Philip found his neighbor, Nathaniel. This method of winning one at a time has been successful from the beginning of Christendom to our own day.

Soul-Winners Must Have a Passion for the Salvation of Men.

Jesus Christ was very God, but he did not count being on equality with God a thing to be clung to. The whole world was in the grip of the evil one. In lawlessness men were going down the inclined plane of sin to the sunless abode of the doomed. The Son of God emptied himself in the incarnation and gave himself for us, the just for the unjust, to redeem us. Read the parables of the lost coin, the lost sheep, and the lost son; go to Gethsemane and Golgotha and know something of the passion Jesus had for the salvation of the world. Not in the same degree, but in a real sense, all soul-winners have shared this deep feeling which masters the mind and prompts action.

In a fervent outburst of love Paul said: "I could wish that I myself were anathema from Christ for my brethren's sake." He knew that the time would come when the Jews would turn to Christ. But this did not keep those who were rejecting the gospel from condemnation.

John Wesley said: "Give me one hundred men who fear nothing but God, who hate nothing but sin, and who are determined to know nothing among men but Jesus Christ and him crucified, and I will set the world on fire." God gave him such men, and fires are burning on the altars of Methodism the world around.

The president of a great college, when told that he had only a half hour to live, said: "Is that so? Then take me out of my bed and place me upon my knees and let me spend that time calling upon God for the salvation of the world."

Soul-Winners Must Be Consistent Christians.

Peter and John were before the Sanhedrin to give an explanation of the healing of the impotent man at the door of the temple. Seeing the man that was healed standing with Peter and John, the rulers could say nothing against it. A converted man is the best argument in support of Christianity. Without a religious experience we cannot preach or teach or witness with certitude and authority. One should be able to say with Paul: "I know whom I have believed." The truth must pass over the life as well as over the lips.

During his first visit to England these words gripped Mr. Moody: "The world has yet to see what God will do with and for and through and in and by the man who is fully and wholly consecrated to him." "I will try my utmost to be that man," said Mr. Moody. This marked a new era in the life of the great evangelist.

If all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity would consecrate themselves to him and devote themselves to his work, love would be heightened into passion, and multitudes would be won for the kingdom of God.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

When the clever people of Mansfield gave us a fund to build a home that we might live among them, Sister Steel said, "How will we ever furnish it?" I replied, as though it were an easy matter, "O, don't worry about that. We'll manage it somehow." She said, "Do you know what furniture costs?" Well, now to tell the truth, I knew no more about it than I know about what the old man in the moon has for breakfast. But it was not long until the angels began to bring the things we need. Oh, no, I don't mean angels that have wings, and wear white, shining robes, and play on harps. One of the first to arrive was old Knickerbocker, of Wichita Falls, Texas. Now wouldn't he be a sight in angelic costume! But his liberal check made a soft place in "Bide-a-wee Cottage." Then here came our friend Copeland, Theodore, of Dallas, always doing things to make other folks happy. The dear fellow, in addition to his check, wanted to send me a book-case; but I was then living at "Camp Idiewild," and had no place to put it. Then an angel I never saw, a good brother Allen, from Mississippi, sent his check for $50, in appreciation of a certain scribbler's contributions to the church papers. Then from away over in "Old Ferginny," that princely man, Dr. Francis H. Smith, Emeritus Professor of Science in the University of Virginia, sends his check, just received, for $50, to help furnish the little home, in memory of his wife, one of Virginia's noble matrons. And so of many others. If this keeps up, and it will, Sister Steel's cozy "Bide-a-wee Cottage," now going up, will be furnished as softly as an oriole's nest; and every article in it, the unsolicited offering of love, will show that one "Superannuate" is not a "Forgotten Man," but has not spent fifty-three years in the ministry for naught.

I was once a guest in the home of Dr. Peloubet, the author of the well-known "Notes on the Sunday School Lesson," in his home near Boston, Mass. It was a cozy, vine-covered, rambling cottage. I was graciously received by Mrs. Peloubet, who was an invalid in a rolling chair, and enjoyed a delightful evening in that refined and charming New England home. When we went to supper, I was allowed the privilege of rolling her chair into the dining room. She said this was a special honor allowed to me as a Southerner, for Dr. Peloubet always claimed the privilege himself. Indeed his tender and gallant attentions to his little invalid wife were very beautiful. I noticed that the walls in the hall, and in the parlor, and in the dining room, were decorated with articles from all parts of the world, sent to the author of the "Notes" by his friends. When I alluded to it, the gracious little woman said: "Yes; everything here reminds me of how my husband is beloved, and how useful his life has been, and it greatly enhances the happiness of our home." So many things in Sister Steel's cozy home will remind us of the love of our friends, and it will greatly enhance its happiness.

By the way, I think the special honor conferred on me in that New England home was largely because I am a sure enough Southerner, and not one of these modern, half-and-half, milk-and-cider, wishy-washy, unification half-breeds. Folks like the Peloubets like genuine things. They are big enough to allow other people to hold their views. At any rate, everybody knows they never can get my vote to make "Honest Abe" Lincoln a saint. He'll have to be content with being a great patriot; and so was Jefferson Davis; and I've no use for the rancid patriotism that denies this honor to either of these great men.

The book is out, and costs $1.10; the dollar goes to the printer and the ten cents to the mail man, and I don't get in until late in the game, if at all. But I am very happy; the cottage is going up; I am over the "flu," thanks to Sister Steel, who reveled in bossing me, and making me keep my arms under the cover; and Bishop Denny has hit Unification on the head a blow like one from the hammer of Thor! Amen. Praise God from whom all blessings flow.

THE OLD OXFORD CIRCUIT.

By Rev. Jno. W. Boswell, D.D.

Dear Brother Carley: After reading Brother Papasan's note concerning Toccopola charge, in the Advocate of March 18, its size, viz.: "Twenty miles north and south, and twelve miles east and west," I turned to what I called my "memorandum" of Oxford circuit in 1861, which then included Toccopola, though we had no church right at the place. What members we had there and round about were enrolled at Sardis.

At that time the Oxford circuit embraced the whole of Lafayette County except Taylor's and Springdale, a good big part of Pontotoc County, and extended down to and took in a corner of Calhoun County. In this territory we had eighteen churches, and four other regular preaching appointments. Two of these appointments were to the negroes: one at Pegues' and the other at Mrs. Bowles' plantation. Beginning on the west side, the lines of the circuit were about as follows, as I remember: Andrew Chapel, twelve miles west of Oxford, through Oxford, south to Church Grove, and Hopewell or Mutton Ham, thence to Liberty, better known as "Smut," and on to Toccopola or Sardis, thence to Sarepta, thence northeast to Chapel Hill (Old Grub Toe, where Uncle Tommie Lamar and his tribe held membership). This church was several miles south of Rockyford on Tallahatchie River, and in the neighborhood of Old Hickory Flat camp ground. From Grub Toe by way of Warren's and Union we struck a line west to Mount Vernon, now called Abbeville, ten miles north of Oxford, thence southwest to Andrew Chapel, the point of beginning. The town of Oxford was then, as now, a station, and had been for many years.

To make the rounds, going from point to point, zigzagging as we had to do, and sometimes taking the back track, we traveled considerably more than one hundred miles. I note one instance of back-tracking: from Hopewell, seven or eight miles south of Oxford, back to Oxford and on to Midway (passing Mt. Zion) ten miles east, then back to Oxford to get to Liberty, twelve or fifteen miles southeast. Only those who have gone over the route know what trouble we had going back and forth through You-ca-no (Yockney) bottom in wet weather. It was the worst piece of road I ever traveled except across Hellcreek bottom between New Albany and Pontotoc, and a "slash" I once crossed in Arkansas.

I traveled the Old Oxford circuit a whole year. The work was hard and it kept two of us busy. Brother James Perry was preacher-in-charge, with all the responsibility. I was only assistant. The people as a rule were poor except around Andrew Chapel, but they were as free-hearted as ever lived. And what a jubilant time we had! We had not then felt the terrors of war. The great struggle was just beginning. The year was as successful and as happy as any I ever spent. During the year I made one hundred and ninety-six attempts to preach. They were feeble attempts, but I did the best I could.

I often recall the noble Christians whose homes I visited in that long ago day. In recent years I have written of several: Uncle Tommy Lamar; a local preacher, Richardson, whose given name I cannot now recall, the strongest and most illuminating uneducated preacher I ever knew; Brother Wm. Gordon, who lived in the country, but held membership in the station; Uncle Billy Foust; Uncle Billy Hyde and his son Jim. Jim Hyde had martyr blood in his veins. There lived in the neighborhood of Toccopola an old brother by the name of Mayhew, the father of Rev. C. C. Mayhew, one of the famous "revivalists" of his time. We had no "evangelists" in those days—at least they were not so called. Near by the old man lived his son Alfred, one of the saintliest men I was ever acquainted with. He had a lovely family, among them a daughter, who, I suppose, at that time was about fourteen years of age—the most beautiful girl in all the land, and as good as she was pretty.

The preachers to-day don't have snch happy times as we did away back in the sixties of the last century; for even then the pioneer days had passed and the people were all living at ease if not all in luxury. The preachers of to-day get better salaries, and have better facilities for work, but they do not meet with such hospitality. I am not prepared to deny that they have the love of the people "for the work's sake," as did the old-time preachers, but I have my doubts. They do not come into such close contact with one another, the young preachers particularly. In many homes there was a room called "the preacher's room." It was always ready for him. It was not until after I was married, at the close of my fourth year in the ministry, that I had even a "boarding house;" but I had homes all around the circuit, and if there were any grown children in the home, I was one of them, and was treated as one. All this was worth something in every sense of the word. And what I received was as freely bestowed by the poor as by the rich. And I was as thankful to the one as to the other.

MISSISSIPPI METHODIST HOSPITAL CAMPAIGN—AN APPEAL.

The success of any movement is contingent upon the faith and vision of its leaders. No undertaking, whether philanthropic, altruistic, hnmanitarian or otherwise, can succeed unless those leading have faith in the cause and vision enough to make others see the need.

Underlying these fundamentals are certain particular or specific requisites. To illustrate this thought, I desire to choose three words—one from the musical world, one from the theological world and one from the business world.

The word from the musical world is "Harmony." Symphony is the pleasing thing in music. No discord prevails. The master of the instrument strikes octave, key or string and prodnces soul-enchanting strains. He harmonizes every note. That is music.

Just so in every great campaign, whether for money, service or souls. Success can only come through harmonized unity. The Scriptural formula is "One faith, one Lord, one baptism." The campaign formula is one faith, one vision, one result.

The word from the theological world is "Life." No cause can be snccessful without it. Life is the antithesis of lethargy, of inertia, of apathy. The one thing that has contributed most to the Methodist Church is the life it has possessed—deep life, abundant life—God-inspired life. Such is the heritage of the past and this must be maintained inviolate for the future.

But if life, enthusiasm, is needed in the church, the theological world, it is unquestionably needed in a financial campaign. Organization must have a soul in it. If the Hospital Campaign succeeds, it must be filled with life, real spirit, real push and energy. Faint heart never won anything.

The word from the business world is "Co-operation." Federated interests are successful interests. Team work is the assurance of an agreeable outcome. Plans, however well laid, are futile unless well worked.

This idea is splendidly illustrated by the story of the lost child in the great wheat fields of the Northwest. As this story goes, a golden-haired boy of five wandered away from his mother's side at six o'clock one afternoon. The alarm was given and all the neighbors came forward as a searching party. Before leaving the home of the lost child, it was agreed that whether the child was found or not, all would return to the starting point at eight o'clock. Upon the appointed hour, the searchers all reported, but no one had found the child. Meantime, one mind had been doing some systematic thinking. He laid the plan of further search before his associates. It was simple but reasonable. Instead of going out singly, they were to join hands and form a human chain and set out for a search back and forth across the great wheat belt. And so the work was re-begun. After one-half hour of this kind of searching, a voice went up from the line, crying, "the lost is found."

Here then is the essence of co-operation. It is working together, team work under a definite plan.

And just so must the work of the Mississippi Hospital Campaign be conducted. Every charge in the Conference must join hands with every other charge and co-operate in the search for five hundred thousand dollars. They can and will be found.

And lastliy, I appeal to every minister and layman in the Conference for this kind of harmonious, lifeful and co-operative action. I appeal in the name of the great Methodist Church, I appeal in the name of the Mississippi Conference, I appeal in the name of suffering humanity, I appeal in the name of a unified responsibility, I appeal in the Name of a greater authority, in the Name of Him who came to minister unto and not to be ministered to. I appeal in the Name of Him who gave sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, speech to the dumb and health to the sick. I appeal to all in the Name of Him who went about doing good and who pronounced that greatest of all commendations, "As oft as you have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, you have done it unto me." I appeal unto all in the Name of Jesus. Won't you help?

The Campaign date has been set for May 30 to June 5. During this time, the drive will be on throughout the Conference for the building fund, and I sincerely trust and earnestly believe that the response will be ample. Let all dedicate this week of May 30 to June 5 to this worthy cause and once more prove that the Methodist Church, South, in the Mississippi Conference still upholds its high standard of Christian mercy and service.

"Inventory"

Invoicing our stock in trade is a common practice. At least once a year we take inventory to see what we have done. We also keep a record of this and, usually, we try, or should try, our best to improve the present year over the last. Each year we try to improve the past one. When we were boys we tried each day to pick more cotton than we did the day before. But we probably would not have done so if we had not invoiced what we did yesterday. So, you see, we should invoice all along throngh life.

We should not only invoice financially, but we should invoice morally. In our financial inventory, one of the principal items is to see carefully that we have paid all our honest obligations. Among these obligations, should be included onr obligations to our Master. From a Bible standpoint, we should include this, especially if we have signed a "promise to pay." When we sign a promise to pay" to a bank, we are very careful to arrange to take care of it. Should we not be just as careful when we promise to pay God a certain sum at a given date, as we are with the bank?

Let us look abont and see if we have cleaned up our promise to God along with our other obligations. In 1919 we signed a small Centenary obligation—a "promise to pay" to help our Master. Now, let's invoice matters carefully and see if we have paid this; and if we have not, let's invoice a little further and see what our standing with him will be—let's see what it would be from a human standpoint—let's be very practical for just a few minutes now—suppose we draw a picture here just to bring the matter right home to us. Suppose you had a friend for whom yon had done many favors and who was freqnently asking favors of you, and this friend owed you a debt that he had promised to pay and he had continued to neglect this obligation. One day you turn an x-ray on him and you see the funds in his pocket—plenty to pay you. Would you feel just as mnch inclined to favor him when he asked yon for favors as you did before? Now, turn this x-ray on yourself and see what you think the Master's attitnde would be to you, if yon promised him some of your material help and did not pay it.

Now, my dear brother, while you have this picture np, turn it around two or three times carefully. Read the Bible, pray over it, and then do what will make you best satisfied with yourself, both now and in after years.

But, while yon have this pictnre and x-ray machine, raise the light high enough to look across the waters and see our innumerable brothers who need our Christ, and see how Christ is overlooking the whole scene, and hear him say, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men to me," and, "How can they preach me and teach me, if they be not sent," and "What is my part in the sending?" If I cannot go, I can send. Also, Christ said, "I was hungry and ye fed me, I was naked and ye clothed me," etc., etc. Therefore, "Get on my right." And remember, too, where he placed those who neglected to do these things.

Invoice all these matters and do your dnty. Don't close your inventory until all your "promises to pay" have been satisfied. The Lord will not send an officer after yon; and no sheriff will attach yonr effects. But, some day when you are all alone, "old man conscience" will step up and discuss the matter with you, and he will be hard to satisfy.

And, finally, my brother, when the last inventory is made, the Book of all books is opened, when the Bible straight-edge is applied, when you and the Master go over these matters, be sure you have handled this so that they will meet his approval. And then your reward will be great in this life and many times greater in the life to come.

A birthday—especially the first one—is always a notable event. It signifies growth, maturity of judgment, enlarged vision, greater seriousness, enhanced ability. It is an opportunity for beginning again.

The Centenary has a birthday this month. In April, 1819, the first American Methodist Missionary Society was formed. In April, 1919, was the original date for the Centenary drive.

On April 18, 1920, there will be a Centenary birthday celebration. It will be participated in by two and a half million Methodists, one million of whom have made Centenary pledges.

Join in the festivities at your Church. Each congregation in the connection should have a part in this final "big day."

Carry out the three-fold objective:

1. Payment of the first and second Centenary installments now due.

2. Payment of entire balance by all who wish to liquidate the whole obligation.

3. Giving all non-subscribers an opportunity to make a Centenary pledge.

LAUGH-DON'T-CRY.

Have you ever seen little Laugh-Don't-Cry,
That gay little elf who lives in the sky?
The next time you stumble and bump your nose,
Or fall from a tree and tear your best clothes,
Just look up quickly, right into the sky,
And forget how badly you'd like to cry.
Just laugh, though softly, and don't even frown!
You'll see little Laugh-Don't-Cry sliding down
A yellow sunbeam! He'll make you a bow,
And say: "Now I see that you do know how
To call me quickly. Cries drive me away!
But laugh and I'll come! I listen all day."

STELLA'S VICTORY.

Stella Vinton had been down town all alone for the first time in her life, to make some purchases for her mother. She had walked down and was riding home. Mrs. Vinton had told her that she might have five cents for herself if there was any change left; but she had been obliged to spend every cent.

She sat in the car with her fare in her hand, waiting for the conductor to come for it. He came along presently, and she held it out toward him, but he did not see it, and went on to the front of the car.

"He has forgotten me. He is not coming for my fare. I shall have to give it to him when I get out," she thought.

"No, I wouldn't; it is his place to come for it," the tempter suggested.

"That would be cheating. You have had your ride and ought to pay for it," whispered conscience.

"Of course; but it is not my place to make the conductor take it."

"It is everybody's business to be honest."

"Mother promised me five cents, too."

"But she would not like you to get it in this way."

"She need never know. I would not tell her."

"But you would know, and Jesus would know; and you profess to be a Christian."

"So I do; and I will be. I won't cheat."

Just then the conductor called out Baker Street, and Stella arose to leave the car. As she did so, she put the five cents in the conductor's hand.

"Thank you," he said, smiling.

Stella went home and told her mother of her temptation. Mrs. Vinton opened her purse, and taking out a 25-cent piece, put it in Stella's hand.

"This is for my honest little girl," she said, kissing her. So Stella had double reason to be glad that she had gained the victory.—Our Young Folks.

"THE VALLEY OF BACA."

"You mean—" Catherine Macey asked slowly.

"I mean," the doctor answered gravely, "that you had better send for some friend at once."

The girl lay very still for several minutes. The doctor's keen eyes, watching, saw the slow tears gather, but that was all. Presently she spoke: "It isn't dying. I have known that for some time. It is only that it seems so—lonesome. I haven't a relative in the world nearer than a cousin, and not a friend to whom I can send. It is very foolish of me"—with a small, brave, appealing smile—"to care for that now, isn't it?

The doctor's hand closed over the thin one with stanch friendship in its firm touch. He had seen many young lives meet their sentence. He had never seen one meet it more bravely. "That is where you are wrong," he said. "You have three friends at least. I am one, and Miss Baker is another. The third one will come to you to-day."

The girl's eyes opened in wide astonishment. "A friend of mine—coming to-day? Who can it be? Why, there isn't anybody."

The doctor had risen now and stood smiling down upon her. "You will know more before night. Now, I want you to promise you will eat all that Miss Baker brings to you. Will you?"

"Yes," Catherine answered. There was a bright spot of excited color in each cheek. What would she not do for a friend to help her down the unknown way of these last weeks? She took what the nurse brought in and then lay quietly looking out at the great geranium hedge beyond her window. Presently she slept a little. She woke at the sound of a light knock and a low voice.

"May I come in, dear?"

"Please," the girl gasped. If she should be a disappointment—this unknown friend!

Tho door opened softly, and the two faced each other—the gray-haired woman with the brave, sweet, serene face, and the girl who had so little time to live.

The girl gave a little cry. "Oh, how did you know that I wanted you—when I never had seen you?"

The girl was taken home to Mrs. Dana's that afternoon. The next day she waited impatiently for the doctor.

"Who is she?" was her eager question. "Tell me all. How did she come to me? It is the most wonderful thing that ever happened in my life. It is so beautiful to have it—at the last."

The doctor nodded; he had known how it would be. He told the story briefly—of the fight for the life of an only daughter, of the defeat at the end, of the love which immediately turned its own sorrow into service. For six years now this woman had been giving herself to other girls who were fighting their sad battle with the same foe. Each, until death or recovery put an end to the need, became her daughter, with full rights to all care and devotion.

The sick girl, who was no longer alone, murmured a few words.

"What did you say?" the doctor asked.

Catherine looked up at him, smiling. "It was just a bit out of one of the psalms," she said. "It made me think of Mrs. Dana. 'Who, passing through the valley of Baca, makes it a well.'"—Acton Free Press.

THE MAN WITH A PURPOSE.

Nothing on earth brings success as certainly as everlastingly pounding away. Find the man who is doing his best and you will find a person who is, or eventually will be a success.

"Know thy work and do it," said Carlyle; "and work at it like a Hercules. One monster there is in the world—an idle man."

Every one believes in the determined person and the world makes way for the one who knows no retreat. People soon acquire confidence in the person who refuses to take no for an answer. When some lawyers take a case the verdict is considered half won. Why not you, my young friend; why not make it hard for the other fellow to get the better of you? In war hundreds of men showed the metal they were made of. In spite of all the difficulties they went right on. Can you do the same? Is your determination so great that nothing can stop you? Have you noticed that it was almost as hard to keep the American boys from breaking over the top as stop the wind? Those men were determined to win and nothing could stop them.

"Those who are resolved to excel must go to their work, willing or unwilling, morning, noon, and night," said Reynolds; "they will find no play, but very hard labor."

It makes no difference to the man of purpose what the other fellow thinks, so long as he is gaining his ambition. The entire matter, summed up, is "Get it."

"I have no secret but hard work," said Turner the painter.

The man or boy who wins in this life must be a live wire in every respect; there is absolutely no chance for the drone. What makes certain girls and boys fail? Lack of stick-to-it-iveness. They cannot stand the hard knocks the world deals; they are weaklings. Many persons in this world are afraid to risk their own ability.

What would be the result if General Pershing felt that he had to wait until he could advise with other persons before he could say, "Over the top, boys?" Would Uncle Sam be where he is to-day? General Pershing is a man of purpose and the result is, the world is backing him. His countrymen believe that he was right and no one dare say he was not. He was prepared for emergencies and got what he went after—no guessing, no wondering, but to the front.

You! young man, can accomplish your aim if you will stick. Refuse to be sidetracked, keep steadily on, and your victory will come. Even though you make mistakes, go on. There never was a person who did not make mistakes. Try not to make the same mistake next time, but go on!—Exchange.

HOW TO DEVELOP SPIRITUALITY—A THREE-MINUTE TALK.

The sincere Christian is not content to remain merely a "babe in Christ;" it is his very nature to want to expand, develop, grow. Maturity is the goal toward which all life moves. Arrested development in an organism is as tragic as it is pathetic.

It is a truism, however, that proper growth is dependent upon the right kind of nourishment and exercise. It is vain to expect to reap bountiful harvests from poorly cultivated crops on land from which the elements of fertility are absent; the plant life must have suitable nourishment upon which to feed if it is to reach a high degree of productiveness. The sowing of the seed is only the beginning of a process that has its fruition in fields of golden grain.

So it is in the spiritual life. Growth in grace is conditioned upon the assimiliation of the elements of spiritual strength, and in grace, as in nature, these elements are food and exercise—cultivation. It is doubtless true that there are too many "weak" Christians; and the reason is not far to seek—they have not been properly nourished and developed. The Christian gets his strength principally from four things—prayer, Bible reading, meditation, and service. It is hardly necessary to emphasize the necessity of all these as a means of "going on to perfection." A man may maintain a high state of morality without prayer—but he cannot maintain a high degree of spiritual energy without it; he may continue to be a good man without reading the Bible—but he cannot grow very much in the knowledge of God's will concerning him without it; he may preserve his Christian integrity without meditating upon divine truth—but he cannot experience a large expansion of soul without serious thought concerning the problems and processes of the very life he is trying to live; he may be satisfied with the personal commitment of himself to the Christian life—but he cannot render efficient service in the Kingdom of God without serving in some helpful way his fellow-man. And he cannot do all these things—pray, read God's Word, think, serve—without feeling day by day that he is growing in knowledge and strength and grace.

We cannot refrain from saying that attendance upon the services of the church is both a cause and an effect of all these. It is very seldom that we find a devout follower of Christ, a real heavenly-minded man or woman, who does not find joy in the house of worship, and the inspiration to more faithful service.

FOR THE BEST INTERESTS OF ALL CONCERNED.

The only objection that we have heard to the suggestion that all financial campaigns in behalf of our connectional causes be postponed until the meeting of the next General Conference, is based upon the grounds that the need of our educational institutions is urgent, and that money is more plentiful now than it is likely to be two years hence.

We believe nobody realizes more fully than do we the urgent need of our schools for immediate and adequate financial support. Our official connection for several years with one of our smaller institutions gave us ample opportunity to discover that its work was sadly handicapped by the lack of resources; and our acquaintance with some of the leaders in our educational work and the testimony they bear to the needs of all our institutions confirms the opinion we had formed that practically all our colleges and universities are sadly in need of largely increased endowment and equipment. There is no question as to the need—the urgent need. We know that it exists, and we are not one whit behind the most earnest advocate of ample provision for their needs in our desire to see them fully provided for.

We do not deem it out of place for us to express the conviction that the church at the present time has no more important task confronting it than the work of placing our educational system upon a solid financial foundation. Every phase of our work is dependent upon the development and maintenance of our educational institutions upon a plane of the highest efficiency. We must have an educated people and an educated ministry if we are to do our full duty in preaching the gospel to an unsaved world. The suggestion is not at all that education can take the place of the enduement of power that comes from on high, but that that power can operate most effectively through trained minds and hearts. In promoting education we are promoting unmistakably and very definitely even the work that we think of as specifically evangelistic. We used to think of endowment and equipment of our colleges and universities in terms of thousands and hundreds of thousands; the time has come when we must think of them in terms of millions and scores of millions. We might as well face the issue once for all—we must educate or abdicate.

This very urgency of the need of our educational institutions is one reason why we believe the campaign should be postponed until a thoroughly unified plan can be worked out. It is already evident that the amount suggested as the goal of the educational campaign is not sufficient to meet the needs of our institutions to-day; if the campaign should secure every dollar asked for, there would still be acute need for additional funds for at least some of our institutions. While we may assume that the askings of our school authorities were liberal, they certainly were not extravagant; and the fact that they so largely exceeded the largest amount the Board of Education felt at liberty to include in the budget, shows the need of still further study of the whole situation.

If the campaign is made now, moreover, there is no sure hope that even the amount asked for will be secured unless some of our very wealthy people are prepared to give by the hundreds of thousands and millions. The rank and file of the membership of our church still have their Centenary pledges to pay—and they are going to pay them—and they are not going to assume heavy additional obligations at the present time. We may as well face facts as theories, and the facts may be known by all who will take the trouble to ask the great body of our people, ministry and laity, what they think about it.

Furthermore, a great campaign now will make it increasingly difficult to provide for other causes that we must provide for in the near future if we intend to give due consideration to urgent appeals that are coming to us from many directions. One "drive" after another is psychologically dangerous if it is not economically unwise. We are thoroughly convinced that it will be for the best interests of all concerned for us to postpone any proposed campaign until the meeting of the General Conference, and then to formulate a comprehensive plan of procedure that will make adequate provision for all worthy causes. Let us have a unified campaign.

A WARNING.

We have received several letters of inquiry concerning the advisability of bringing sick persons to New Orleans for treatment by "Brother Isaiah," the man whose work here has attracted such widespread attention. Without in the slightest degree disparaging the sincerity of "Brother Isaiah," we most earnestly advise against anybody's making the trip here for treatment. There is no assurance that he can help any given case; nor is there any assurance that the afflicted will be able to see him at all. It is a matter of record that many invalids who have come expecting to be cured, not only have failed to be benefited, but have also suffered greatly by exposure and insufficient care; many of them, being practically penniless, have become a charge upon the charitable institutions of the city. Some of these organizations have issued official statements to the effect that it is unwise for the sick of other communities to come here. Of course if a patient has ample funds, if he has secured boarding accommodations in advance, and if somebody comes with him to take care of him while here, it is simply a matter of personal judgment as to whether he shall come or not. It is our opinion that results have not justified any strong hope of cure at the hands of "Brother Isaiah."

Miss Mollie Higginbotham, of Mer Rouge, La., is a long-time and greatly appreciated friend of the Advocate. We are indebted to her for a fine list of subscriptions which she recently sent for our files.

Rev. Standifer Raper is delighted with his work at Coldwater, Miss. He serves an excellent people.

Our work at Bernice, La., is prospering under the leadership of Rev. W. A. Mangum. Reports show that the charge is making satisfactory progress in the various fields of activity.

"This makes 46 new subscribers so far—will send more later," writes Rev. M. L. White, of DeKalb, Miss., in sending some names to be added to our subscription files. Brother White is one of our most faithful pastors.

We had the pleasure of meeting Rev. L. E. Crooks, our pastor at Greensburg, La., while he was visiting the city last week. We were glad to learn that his family has practically recovered from a recent attack of the influenza.

The distressing news comes from Rev. L. P. Moreland, of Hornbeck, La., that his home was burned on March 14, only a part of its contents being saved. He writes in grateful appreciation of the kindness of the people whom he serves.

As a result of the meeting at Grand Cane, La., where the pastor, Rev. S. J. Davies, was assisted by Rev. Leland Clegg, junior preacher at First Church, Shreveport, there were ten accessions to the church by baptism and one by certificate.

According to an announcement in the Magnolia Gazette, the Millsaps College Preachers' League Quartet sang at the South Magnolia Methodist Church on Easter Sunday morning, and at the Magnolia Methodist Church at the evening service.

Brother James H. Ramsey, of Houlka, Miss., has been a subscriber to the Advocate for thirty years. In renewing his subscription, he writes in high terms of the work of his pastor, Rev. B. F. Bullard, and wife. They are greatly beloved by the people.

Brother J. H. Havens, of Vancleave, Miss., has been a subscriber to the Advocate for forty years. In renewing his subscription, he takes occasion to say that he is very well satisfied with the M. E. Church, South, as it is at present constituted—he sees nothing to be gained by unification.

Plans looking toward an Ecumenical Conference, representing Christians of every faith and land, were approved by the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at a recent meeting in New York City. The preliminary meeting of an international committee to arrange the details of the Conference has been called at Geneva, Switzerland, August 10-11, 1920.

The District Outlook is the official organ of the Monroe District, Louisiana Conference. Rev. C. D. Atkinson, the presiding elder, is a great believer in the value of printer's ink—he always maintains some kind of publication in connection with his work. According to the Minutes of the Annual Conference, the Monroe District leads the other districts of the Louisiana Conference in the number of subscribers to the Advocate.

According to the Discipline, an offering for young people's work shall be made on Epworth League Anniversary Day, the second Sunday in May, and the proceeds remitted to the Conference Epworth League treasurers. These treasurers in our territory are as follows: Louisiana Conference, Miss Grace Cook, Grammond Street, Monroe, La.; Mississippi Conference, Rev. L. F. Alford, Laurel, Miss.; North Mississippi Conference, Mr. Victor Stevenson, Booneville, Miss.

The General Boards of our church will meet in annual session as follows: Board of Education, Nashville, April 27-28; Church Extension Board, Louisville, April 29-30; College of Bishops, Nashville, May 1-3; Board of Missions, Nashville, May 5; Epworth League Board, Nashville, May 7-8; Conference Representatives of Board of Finance, St. Louis, May 7-8; Board of Finance, St. Louis, May 10; Sunday School Board, Nashville, May 11; Book Committee, Nashville, May 12.

We have recently heard good reports of the work on the Hattiesburg District, Mississippi Conference, of which Rev. W. B. Jones is presiding elder. The salary increases in the district this year amount to about $6000. The preachers are all at their posts of duty, diligently at work. They are making earnest preparation for a great revival, and the outlook is most encouraging. The final payment on the district parsonage, which was bought in the beginning of Brother Jones's administration, will be made this year.

Sixty-seven members were received into the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church of this city on Easter Sunday as the result of a two-weeks' evangelistic campaign. Many of these were on profession of faith, a fine class coming in from the Sunday school. The work was carried on according to the suggestions of the Evangelistic Committee. A diligent canvass of the local territory was made by faithful and enthusiastic teams of workers, and a considerable number of unidentified Methodists were discovered and brought into the church. More than 100 members have been received into this church since Conference. Rev. Ellis Smith is the pastor.

Rev. H. J. Moore, our pastor at Ellisville, Miss., suffered the misfortune to lose his automobile on the last Sunday in March. As it was raining when the service closed at the church, he kindly let one of the students of the Jones County Agricultural High School have the use of his car to carry home two of the teachers of that institution. Immediately after the occupants got out of the car, lightning struck the dormitory, tearing down a chimney, which fell on the car, demolishing it.

Rev. E. J. Taylor, a local Methodist preacher, died in a hospital at Laurel, Miss., on Sunday, March 28, at the ripe age of 86 years. For several years he was a member of the Mississippi Conference and filled a number of pastoral charges. After his location he resided near Ellisville, Miss., and was very highly esteemed in the community. He was a finely educated man and served as superintendent of education in Jones County for sixteen years. Interment was in the Hinton cemetery near his old home, the funeral service being conducted by his long-time friend, Rev. L. Carley, and Rev. H. J. Moore.

According to a recent number of the Magnolia Gazette, Dr. I. W. Cooper, the distinguished president of Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., has received a flattering offer to take charge of a college for girls in Texas, and he has the offer under advisement. At the recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of Whitworth, Dr. Cooper was re-elected president for another five-year term. It is to be earnestly hoped that he will see his way clear to remain with the institution which has grown great under his management. We understand that Mr. T. E. Enochs, of Fernwood, and Rev. W. B. Jones, of Hattiesburg, were added to the Board of Trustees at its recent meeting.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT NOTES.

The Missionary Society, the Ladies Aid and the Junior Aid of First Church, Baton Rouge, have been united into one large Missionary Society. This has been accomplished through the faithful efforts of the pastor, Rev. N. E. Joyner, who is giving full proof of his ministry both in the pulpit and in his pastoral work. Special services were held every night of the week preceding Easter.

At Keener Memorial Church in Baton Rouge, the pastor, Rev. J. W. Booth, carried out the full two weeks' program of the Centenary plan. The services were fairly well attended and a growing interest was manifested. This is a well organized church with an active board of stewards.

At Tickfaw church, the pastor, Rev. H. C. Murphy, had the services of the quarterly meeting conform to the evangelistic campaign. There were two accessions, one on profession of faith and the other by certificate.

The second quarterly conference for the Gonzales charge was held at Meadow's Chapel. The pastor, Rev. S. S. Bogan, is planning for a revival in each one of his churches. In spite of the cold weather, the rain and the bad roads, he has not missed a single appointment since Conference.

Chaplain H. S. Johns keeps busy with his Christ-like work among the prisoners in the penitentiary. On a visit with him recently to the walls, we were surprised to see the preponderance of young men. This but shows some of the early indiscretions of youth. The "Gospel of Another Chance" is the hope for these young men.

Evangelist Bozeman is in a meeting at Clinton, La., with the pastor, Rev. T. D. Lipscomb. The meeting is growing in interest and a gracious outpouring of the spirit is expected.

The Board of Directors of the Bluff Creek Camp Meeting will meet on April 8 to plan for the annual encampment. ALBERT S. LUTZ, P. E.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE HATTIESBURG DISTRICT.

Dear Brethren: It is very important that the assessment for the district parsonage be raised as soon as possible in order that we may be able to make final payment when due. I am asking that each pastor see to it that the entire amount of the assessment on his charge be in hand by the time of the District Conference, May 18. The notes will fall due shortly after that date; and it will enable you to get this out of the way of other things that are coming on. Please kindly, therefore, get the amount in full and send the same to me.

The allotment of the number of Advocates was not made at the District Stewards' meeting, as we had not been notified of the allotment to our district. Your allotment is the same as last year. Let us push it.

I am asking the revival campaign committee to mail to you a sample package of literature that will be helpful in your revivals. Order from them such as you can use and in such quantities as you want, free.

Fraternally,

W. B. JONES, P. E.

JOHN HIPP was born November 20, 1898, and died January 30, 1920, aged 22 years, 9 months, and 20 days. He leaves a heart-broken father, mother, one brother, four sisters, and a host of friends to mourn his going. He joined the Methodist Church in early life. He was a consecrated member, serving as steward in the church. He was always faithful to his pastor, his church and his home. He was a lover of Sunday school. He began high school at Tula, Miss., in 1916, where he went two years; there he went to Derma Agricultural High School; then he entered the S. A. T. C. at the University, where he remained for about three months; then he came back to Derma, where he graduated in the summer of 1919. He tben went to Akron, Ohio, where he was taking a commercial course better to prepare himself for his life-work. How blessed it is to know that we can meet him again after awhile. Mourn not, loved ones, but rather rejoice to know that there will be a great reunion, and strive to emulate the noble example that has been set by him for you all. Funeral services were conducted in Akron, Ohio. His remains were shipped back to his home, where a large funeral procession followed him to the cemetery, his pastor, Rev. J. A. Brody, conducting the service at the grave, after which his form was laid to rest in the cemetery at Sarepta, to await the resurrection morn. May God comfort the bereaved in this their great sorrow. J. A. BRODY, P. C.

W. G. C. GRESHAM, one of Booneville's oldest and best citizens, and a Confederate veteran, after an illness of several years died at his home in Booneville, Miss., March 4, at the age of 76 years. He was one of the pioneers of our little city, and a consistent member of the Methodist Church that he loved and served. He was superintendent of our Sunday school for years, and was seldom absent. He was steward a long time and a delegate to the Annual Conference several times. Of him it can be said that he creditably served in almost every official capacity committed to the laity. His goodness was not selfishly laid away in an alabaster box; it was present and diffused through his daily life. His was a soul of heroic proportions. His faith in God and the Christian religion was absolute, profound, serene. During his long drawn-out illness, which covered a period of several years, he bore his afflictions with sublime heroism. There was no stir or hasty preparation for his voyage, for he was ready and prepared to go. It is inappropriate to speak of death in connection with this man's going away, but to use another expression, as it was spoken of the Lord's companion of old, "He walked with God and he was not, for God took him."

H. W. REES.

Booneville, Miss.

SIDNEY E. HODGES was born in Prentiss County, Mississippi, in 1868, where he has spent his entire life. For a number of years his home has been in Booneville, where, on the night of March 2, after a few day's sickness with pneumonia, he peacefully and quietly slipped away from us and went to dwell with God, being at the time of his going 52 years old. Brother Hodge was one of the truest and best men I ever knew. When a boy he professed religion and joined the Methodist Church, and he has been a useful and efficient member ever since. For 35 years he was a steward. He was a teacher in our Sunday school for years. At the time of his going away he was lay leader of the Booneville church. He was a devoted husband, a loving father, and had the confidence, friendship and love of all who knew him. It was my good fortune to be with him much and talk of church work and of the goodness of God, and I always left him feeling better and that I was on a high plane. He was always on the right side of all questions. He could have left his family no better legacy than he did—that of a man who stood for the right and did what he could. No better epitaph could be placed on his monument than this: "His life is before us and his record is on high."

H. W. REES.

MRS. CLYDE FARRIS was born February 1, 1882, in DeSoto County, Mississippi, and died February 18, 1920, at Little Rock, Ark. In 1907 she was married to Mr. S. R. Farris, formerly of DeSoto County, Mississippi, but since their marriage their home has been at Little Rock. Two children, one daughter and one son, were born to them. Clyde was a sweet Christian character, and with her patient, loving disposition and wise administrations, she was, indeed, the light of her home. She was a quiet, reserved girl and woman in all her ways, but firm and unyielding when it came to a question of right and wrong. At the tender age of twelve, she was converted and united with the Methodist Church, of which she was a faithful member to the time of her death. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Morgan, whose home is several miles east of Coldwater, Miss., and, at her request, her body was brought back to her native State for burial. She was laid to rest in Greenleaf cemetery, in the presence of a large concourse of weeping friends and relatives, there to await the resurrection morn. Her devoted husband and two precious children will feel the loss of her wise counsel and sweet benefactions more than any one else. She also leaves a father, mother, five sisters and three brothers to mourn her going. But we feel that she has closed her eyes to earth to open them in heaven.

"Then let our sorrows cease to flow,
God has recalled his own;
But let our hearts in every woe,
Still say, 'Thy will be done.'"

Her uncle, A. F. MOORE.

In the sixty-sixth year of his life, on February 8, 1920, Brother I. C. WILLIAMSON passed away. As the angel called home to heaven this brother, it left a vacant place in the church, town of Pleasant Hill, and DeSoto County, Mississippi. Brother Williamson was converted in the Cumberland Presbyterian church in early life, but soon became a member of the M. E. Church, South. He made for God a brave soldier, holding out always for the thing he thought to be right. He was not a man-fearing, but truly a God-fearing man. Since first I knew him he took the interest of the church into his real life; the need of the church came first with him. Brother Williamson was the older son of the saintly father and mother, Charles Wesley and Mrs. Ann McMellon Williamson. Brother Williamson leaves to mourn their loss a wife, Mrs. Julia (Sage) Williamson, a daughter, Julia Carrol, one brother, W. A. Williamson, and one sister, Miss Annie Williamson, and besides these, a great number of true and dear friends. We extend to these relatives our sympathy, and share with them in the sadness of his absence. W. W. BRUNER, P. C.

Sage Tea Darkens Hair to Any Shde

Don't Stay Gray! Here's an Old-Time Recipe that Anybody Can Apply.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is mussy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.—Adv.

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Hood's Sarsaparilla—A Good Blood-Purifying Tonic Medicine.

It is a medicine in which the people can and do have entire confidence as pure, clean and safe.

All the claims made for it are justified by the testimony of the gratifying results attending its use in a multitude of cases of scrofula, eczema or salt rheum, psoriasis, blood-poisoning, catarrh and rheumatism, and of loss of appetite, that tired feeling, and low or run-down conditions common in the spring.

It is not adulterated; it is not misbranded, but honestly labelled. It originated in a physician's prescription and is recommended and used by many physicians today. It has a record of nearly 50 years of wonderful success.

Hood's Sarsaparilla "makes food taste good." Get it today.

If you need a mild laxative or cathartic, take Hood's Pills.

If the engine is properly oiled and cared for it will last a great many years, and in the same way if the human mechanism is properly looked after it will last the allotted three score and ten years. The human system must be a laboratory for the constant manufacture of rich, red blood, and the blood depends upon the stomach.

After many years of study in the active practice of medicine, Dr. Pierce found that when the stomach was out of order, the blood impure and there were symptoms of general break-down, a tonic made of the alterative extracts of certain herbs and roots was the best corrective. This he called: Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. For over half of a century this tonic and alterative has been more largely sold than any other blood medicine or nerve tonic.

For those who are weakened by the after effects of grip or a bad cold or cough during the winter, nothing will increase the number of red blood corpuscles and eradicate poison from the blood so quickly as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is sold by almost every druggist in the land in tablets or liquid. Send 10c for trial package of the tablets. Write for free medical advice to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, in Buffalo, N. Y.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The man that grinds around and around, that runs along in a rut, or waits to be told to do his plain duty, is not a very great leader.

Mrs. Fant and Miss Mary Ross, at the call of Brother Holder, did some excellent work at Coffeeville, Water Valley and Taylor. I joined them at Water Valley and Taylor; from thence Brother Holder and I went to Harris' Chapel and organized a school, appointed teachers, ordered literature, and so on.

The work of the Field Secretary is heavy and wearing on the nerves, but the hardest thing to bear is to wait and wait for an answer to a plain letter, asking for the privilege to help a brother. It doesn't matter about the weather or the wind, but to have to wait and wonder what's the matter, is killing on the fellow at this end of the line.

Sunday School Day programs are late because the Publishing House could not get the paper needed to do the printing. Orders have been sent in for the men I have heard from. The Sunday School Board is anxious that each school have a sufficient supply for use, but not one to waste. Sixty per cent of the schools of the Conference will have to observe the day if we get into the third-rank standard on that score. The program is simple enough this year; if too simple, add to it all the complicated things you want. The main thing is to make the day evangelistic.

What do you think of a report like this from Mr. George F. Maynard, Superintendent of Int. Sen. Department in the Tupelo school? Seven classes organized, enrolled, and active. Each class has a Missionary Special; total amount pledged for the year, $340. The department is second rank. Send in your reports and see if you can beat this.

The time is about out for you to get a Missionary Special, but if you are prompt and write to Mrs. W. T. Boswell, New Albany, Miss., to-day, you may get in on the last call. God still has a host of loyal sons and daughters he can trust with his work. Be up and doing, "the night is far spent, the day is at hand."

HAS NO PAIN NOW

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did for Mrs. Warner.

Onalaska, Wis.—"Every month I had such pains in my back and lower part of stomach I could not lie in bed. I suffered so it seemed as though I would die, and I was not regular either. I suffered for a year and was unfit to do my housework, could only wash dishes once in a while. I read an advertisement of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other women and decided to try it. It surely did wonders for me. I have no pains now and I can do my housework without any trouble at all. I will always praise your medicine as I do not believe there is a doctor that can do as much good in female weakness, and you may use these facts as a testimonial."—Mrs. LESTER E. WARNER, R. 1, Box 69, Onalaska, Wis.

The reason women write such letters to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. and tell their friends how they are helped is that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought health and happiness into their lives. Freed from their illness they want to pass the good news along to other suffering women that they also may be relieved.

REVIVAL AT PASCAGOULA, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Our revival meeting closed here Sunday night, March 28. The results are very gratifying; something like twenty-five professed faith in Christ and a full surrender to his service, besides six accessions on profession of faith. The general spirit of the church is toned up, and this year bids fair to be the best year in the life of the church. As an evidence of the benefits derived from the meeting, our number in the mid-week service doubled last Wednesday evening. The preaching was done by Brother J. A. Smith, of Philadelphia, Miss., and his wife did the special singing. Brother Smith's work is of a very high order; every message is clear and forceful and one feels that the Spirit is present to apply his words to the hearts of the hearers. Sister Smith is simply fine as a soloist. We have never heard the gospel sung with more love, or with greater power. Our people here were delighted with the service this excellent couple gave us during these services.

The work here is moving along nicely in spite of the confusion caused by the unsettled conditions at the International Shipyards. We have received forty members into the church since Conference, and this number would be much greater had we not been unable to do our work the first month of the year on account of a severe throat trouble. We have a splendid people here, and the Lord is blessing us greatly. The field is white unto harvest, and men are waiting to be won.

Your brother,
J. H. MOORE, P. C.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas God in his wisdom has called our dearly beloved friend and member, Mrs. Maggie Larkin Pitts, to her heavenly home, and the Ladies' Aid has lost one of its most beloved and faithful members; therefore be it resolved:

1. That we humbly bow to God's will, but most sincerely lament her death.

2. That we cherish the memory of her Christian character, her interest and help in every phase of church work, her generous response to every appeal of charity, and especially her loyalty to Christ.

3. That the Ladies' Aid, the Methodist Church, and our community have lost a most consecrated Christian.

4. That our heart's go out in deepest sympathy to the bereaved relatives and we commend thom to Christ who alone can give comfort to the broken-hearted, and peace to the soul.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be given to the family, the New Orleans Advocate for publication and a copy be spread upon the minutes of the Ladies' Aid.

"Grandma," as we all knew and loved her, is gone, but her life, so true and unassuming, will ever linger with us, and we will live better for having known her.

"God thought to give the sweetest thing
In his almighty power
To earth; and deeply pondering
What it should be—one hour
In fondest joy and love of heart
Outweighing every other,
He moved the gates of heaven apart
And gave to earth—a mother!"

Signed by: Mrs. A. J. Burks, Mrs. A. W. Gleason.

REWARDS.

The other day, I was talking with one of my members, a business man, and he was telling me about the business he had done the day before, which was Saturday. He concluded by saying, "I could have sold $52 more of goods if I had consented to deliver them this morning (Sunday). The customer gave as an excuse for wanting them delivered Sunday morning, that he lived some distance out in the country, and was not going to return home till next day, and did not want to run the risk of having his wagon loaded the night before. But I refused to let him have the goods unless he took them that (Saturday) evening. He went elsewhere and got the goods."

In commenting on the event, I told the man that I thought he did exactly right, and that while he may never be rewarded in this life with larger trade by such a position, because the world will love its own and them only, yet I knew that he was rewarded with a more tender conscience towards God, and a stronger hold on the Almighty; and that his reward when he came to meet his Savior face to face would be sweeter and more satisfying.

The sacredness of the Sabbath is upheld by men of such stand, and the channel to God's throne of grace is kept opened to such men who put God and His Kingdom first in their lives.

EAT IT ALL

You are crazy to be afraid when seated before a large dinner or before a particularly delightful meal lest you may suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion heart burn or some of the other disagreeable after effects. We are prone at times to forget our stomachs and our rashness causes us to suffer. A simple natural aid at times when your organs rebell will not only avoid temporary discomfort but will also give comfort, and rest to the tired over-worked, mistreated organs and smoothly pave the way to strength.

RELIABLE VADCO REMEDIES

VADCO Dyspepsia Remedy is a harmless though immensely comforting and effective corrective. A teaspoonful just after meals or whenever needed will bring immediate relief and by aiding the stomach in its work, restore it to strength and health. It is simple to take and pleasant to taste. NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

A Word of Greeting.

In entering upon the duties of the Superintendent of Mission Study and Publicity, I feel deeply the responsibility which this office devolves upon me. Especially is this true since it falls to my lot to succeed in office one of our most talented women, Mrs. Lester G. Fant, who by instinct and training, by her charming personality and brilliant intellect, as well as her deep interest in the work and wide range of experience, was eminently qualified to make, as she unquestionably has, one of the very best superintendents ever in charge of this department of our work. However, it is my sincere desire and shall be my honest endeavor to make you a really good superintendent and to promote in an earnest, aggressive, and intelligent way the interests of this department so that it shall truly be of vital interest and real help to our work throughout the Conference. The Bulletin should be, I think, a medium of communication between, as well as information for, the Missionary Society throughout the Conference. If one Society is doing anything out of the ordinary or of unusual interest, the other Societies should be informed of this through the Bulletin. If you should secure a life member, have an interesting mite box opening, an unusual young people's program, a contribution for the support of a missionary, a volunteer for mission work, or any other item of real interest, let us have them, and due publicity will be given through the Bulletin. Then it is our duty to promote mission study throughout the Conference and give all the assistance we can in organizing Mission Study Classes where they have none. We believe with all our heart that every Missionary Society should have a Mission Study Class, for how can our women become interested in mission work if they are not informed as to the needs of the fields, the glorious opportunities for missionary endeavor, and the marvelous things being accomplished by our missionaries? If you have a Mission Study Class, tell us about it—how it is conducted, how you make it interesting and keep up the interest—give us some of the most interesting facts and thoughts you have gathered from the books you are studying. In this way you can render valuable assistance to your Superintendent of Mission Study and Publicity in disseminating missionary information and provoking an interest in mission study within our bounds. I most earnestly desire your hearty cooperation; may I count on you?

MRS. T. M. BROWNLEE.
Grenada, Miss.

The Annual Meeting.

The eighth annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference was held in the Methodist Church of Kosciusko, Miss., March 2-5. Mrs. J. W. Conger, our truly consecrated and really gifted president, was in the chair, and directed the work of each session in such a way that there was not a dull or uninteresting moment during the entire conference. Her annual address was indeed an inspiring message. She spoke in terms of gratitude and thanksgiving to God for the many unmistakable evidences of growth and development in the various departments of the work and sounded the note of true optimism in anticipation of the work for the coming year. "Go forward," was the key note of her address, and in a very earnest and forceful way she urged each member to endeavor to make this the very best in the history of the work.

The reports show that last year was the most prosperous, by far, in the history of the Conference. More new societies were organized than during any former year, more money was paid on pledges than ever before, more societies observed the Week of Prayer and more than forty per cent of the societies observed Rally Day and Harvest Day during the year. But, notwithstanding the encouraging features of the work, there still remains much to be done. Within the bounds of our Conference there are 595 churches and only 147 of these have Missionary Societies. It is our aim that, and we shall never be satisfied until, every church within our bounds shall have at least one active Missionary Society.

One item of interest in the reports presented to the Conference is that every district excelled in some certain phase of work. The Holly Springs District is the only one that did not sustain the loss of a single auxiliary during the year.

The Young People and Juniors made greater advancement during the year than any other departments; the honor for the greatest increase along all lines of work and activity going to the Juniors. We doubt very seriously if there could be found more interested or better qualified leaders for our young people and children than we have in the persons of Mrs. T. W. Baker and Miss Corinne Rogers.

The good people of Kosciusko were generous and unstinted in their hospitality and entertained the Conference in a most royal manner. The efficient and popular pastor and his good wife, Rev. and Mrs. E. H. Cunningham, added much to the success of the Conference and brought us all under lasting obligation to them by their untiring efforts to make our stay in their midst both profitable and pleasant for us.

The following Conference officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, Mrs. J. W. Conger, Vaiden, Miss.; Vice President, Mrs. Lester G. Fant, Holly Springs; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. W. T. Boswell, New Albany; Recording Secretary, Mrs. G. C. Jones, Belen; Treasurer, Mrs. W. W. Wilburn, Lexington; Superintendent of Young People, Mrs. T. W. Baker, Tupelo; Superintendent of Children, Miss Corinne Rogers, New Albany; Superintendent of Mission Study and Publicity, Mrs. T. M. Brownlee, Grenada; Superintendent of Social Service, Mrs. W. V. Pittman, Sunflower; Superintendent of Supplies, Mrs. Susie Thomas, Starkville.

District Secretaries—Aberdeen Dist., Mrs. Joe Herndon, Okolona; Columbus Dist., Miss Alma McGee, Columbus; Corinth Dist., Mrs. Elma King, Durant; Greenville Dist., Mrs. W. B. Parks, Merigold; Holly Springs Dist., Mrs. A. W. Stokes, Grenada; Sardis Dist., Mrs. W. J. East, Sardis; Winona Dist., Mrs. C. A. Neal, Carroliton.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To the Conference and Auxiliary Officers.

At the recent session of our Annual Conference, when it was decided to publish a quarterly Bulletin, I immediately began to plan for this means of putting our work before the auxiliaries. I shall do all I can to make this Bulletin interesting and profitable to our women. I cannot hope, however, to put into this paper the things that really should be there, unless I have the co-operation of each of you.

Will each Conference officer please send me, as soon as possible after the close of each quarter, her report as

Uric Acid in Meat Clogs the Kidneys

Take a Glass of Salts if Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.—Adv.

FROM AVERA, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: I am sure some of our people would be glad to hear from the Avera charge, this being wholly mission territory, and a brand-new work. So, if you will give me a little space, I will try to tell them of the work.

We did not get moved on the work until the 24th of January, not being able to get a house any sooner. On the night of the 26th, some one rapped on our door; we of course opened, and in came Gideon's three hundred: They put the wolf to flight, by filling our table with many good things to eat, for which we feel very grateful to them.

For five weeks we lived in one of the Griffin Lumber Company's houses, which we appreciate very much; but seeing the need of a parsonage on this work, we went to work to get one. On the 24th of February we succeeded in buying a real nice one at a cost of $1386. We hope to make first payment on this in a few days of at least half, if not more. We are putting up a garden and yard fence now. We are going to paint the house as soon as we can.

We have been handicapped somewhat on account of the "flu," but that is giving way now, and spring is here, so we hope to be able to meet all of our appointments from now on. We have five preaching places at present, Avera, Piave, Grafton, Wilson and Reba; by the first of May or June we will have another, Bothwell.

We are serving some of as fine people as you will find anywhere. This is a very needy field; pray for me that I may be enabled to do a great work for the Master here in this part of his vineyard. M. W. PORTER.

TIME TO DO SOMETHING.

Dear Brother Carley: Three articles, lately, in the Advocate have peculiarly impressed me, viz., the account of the evangelistic conference at Cleveland, Miss., your article, "A Serious Situation — And A Remedy," and Robert McIlvoy's, "The Coming District Conference." As you say, "There is a restlessness, a longing, a vague uneasiness, a yearning, a fear, a hope, that cannot be localized, no matter what local situations may be cited in explanation." As Brother McIlvoy says, "We have 'put on,' 'put over,' 'put across,' 'gone over the top,' 'delivered the goods,' etc., until we would enjoy 'hitting the bottom' for awhile for a change." In the account of the Cleveland joint evangelistic conference, the preacher who led the forces there has this to say relative to the conference: "The preachers gathered about the altar and there was much earnest praying and pledging to more devout service." Now, this evangelistic conference, I devoutly believe, is a step toward the solution of the problem. Speaking for myself only, I long to go to some kind of conference where there will be no "official business," no strict adherence to a set program, no "three-minute speeches," no "homiletical" listening to the sermons preached, but where there is gathered—at the call of those in authority—a crowd of preachers who feel the worth of immortal souls, who have come to the conference to gather around the altar of prayer, who have come to "confess their faults one to another, and pray one for another," who are there to undertake to meet the conditions that some other preachers met once; when they "prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together * * * and they spake the Word of God with boldness." As I see it, though I guess I am a "moss-back," too, something of this kind is all that will save us from this untoward generation. I am ready to pay my expenses to attend a conference of this kind. Yours in Jesus.

It Is Iron In The Blood That Makes Iron Muscles Like These---

Physician Explains a Secret of the Great Power and Endurance of Athletes--Tells How Organic Iron--

Nuxated Iron Helps Build Rich, Red Blood

That Gives Physical Strength and Energy

To touch the arm of a strong, sturdy man—to feel the steel-like firmness of those muscular sinews—to think of the tremendous force and power that must lie behind such strength—these are thrills that come to the thin-blooded men and women whose own bodies are weak and physically unfit.

It takes men of red-blooded force and power to hit the sledge-hammer blows that count—and whether you are a pile-driver or a bank president you cannot expect to win out against odds forever unless you are a man of iron—constantly able to strike—and strike hard.

"There are countless numbers of men today who at 40 are broken in health and steadily going downward to physical and mental decay," says Dr. John J. Van Horne, formerly Medical Inspector and Clinical Physician on the Board of Health of New York City. "Yet there are thousands of such men who undergo a most remarkable transformation the moment they get plenty of the right kind of iron into their blood to give increased energy and endurance. To help build stronger, healthier men and women, better able physically to meet the problems of everyday life, I believe that physicians should, at every opportunity prescribe organic iron—Nuxated Iron—for in my experience it is one of the best tonic and red blood builders known to medical science."

If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals, for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see for yourself how much you have gained. Many an athlete or prize fighter has won the day simply because he knew the secret of great strength and endurance, which comes from having plenty of iron in the blood, while many another has gone down to inglorious defeat simply for lack of iron.

Manufacturers' Note: Nuxated Iron, which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians, is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products, it is easily assimilated and does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

NUXATED IRON

Back hurt you? Can't straighten up without feeling sudden pains, sharp aches and twinges? Now listen! she has it made for the Council officer?

To the auxiliary officers I would bring the same old plea—please report on time, that you may get your credit for work done when the Bulletin comes out. Anything of special interest I will be glad to have.

This means a good deal of extra work for your Conference Superintendent of Publicity, but you can greatly lighten the work by granting my request and contributing something worth while for the Bulletin. Any news items from your auxiliary, or anything of special interest, I would greatly appreciate for the woman's page in the New Orleans Advocate.

Trusting you will do all in your power to help me make the Bulletin and the Mississippi Conference column in our church paper a success, I remain yours in the Master's service,

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Ruston Auxiliary Interested in World Topics.

Twenty-three ladies of the Methodist Church met at the parsonage Monday afternoon for the regular social meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society.

Devotional service was conducted by Mrs. W. H. Perkins, after which Mrs. Walker Riser gave an excellent talk on, "The New American in Labor Reconstruction." Mrs. Riser gave statistics showing how many foreign born are to-day workers in the U. S., and how, conditions being as they are, they and labor are a menace to each other. The field is wide for much Home Mission work and there are already many who are now teaching these immigrants to speak and read the English language so that they may understand our laws and know their own rights—and sanitation, that they may protect their families in their crowded condition.

Our hostess, Mrs. Wynn, gave us a beautiful poem of Van Dyke's, "The Toiling of Felix."

Mrs. Floyd Pearce talked on "The Spirit of Scarritt." She told how the Scarritt Training School was born, and how it had grown, how many young women had entered there for training and had gone out to the foreign field to spend their lives for Christ.

The program was closed with a piano solo, "Schubert's Serenade," by Mrs. Virgil Spinks.

Such an encouraging report of the Junior Missionary was given by Mrs. Ball. This little band has 33 members and this last Sunday afternoon one might have seen these boys and girls on their way to the church, each with a paper bag of flour to be given to one in need.

Refreshments of cream and cake were served and a silver offering taken which is to go toward helping furnish the Louisiana room in the Scarritt Training School. REPORTER.

HARD TO WIN WITHOUT CONFIDENCE.

Many a man has gone down to defeat when he ought to have won a victory, simply because he did not believe strongly enough that victory was possible. We sometimes hear the expression, "a losing fight," the suggestion heing that defeat was inevitabie; we like the inspiration that comes from the thought of "turning defeat into victory." A blind assurance is not to be commended, because it implies a failure to take reai difficulties properiy into consideration; it is very true, however, that "faint heart" never won anything much that was worth having. Unless we helieve in our cause and in ourselves, success is only a remote possibility. Even the devii will flee if we oppose him manfuiiy. The timorous soul is always on the defensive—the tactical advantage iies in the attack. "Be sure you are right—THEN GO AHEAD."

HEAR THE LIVING.

A kind of craze seems to he sweeping over the world to establish communication with departed spirits. So-cailed "mediums" are reaping a rich harvest by playing upon the credulty of the ignorant, and the manufacturers of "ouija hoards," according to reports, are working overtime to supply the demand for a siiiy toy. We have no harsh criticsm, of course, for those devout souis who long for the sound of a voice stilled in death; love is stronger than the grave, and faith in immortality is invincible. The heart thriiis with the thought that, perchance, we may somehow catch even the whisper of a singie syiiahie from those far-off shores where we know our loved ones rest; but our hope is not that they can return to us, but that we can go to them. Some day, please God. we shall see them again and talk with them face to face. But we can hear the voices of the living, and it is to them that we should give heed in these days of trouble and sorrow. Men are crying for the light—and we need to hear their cry; little children are calling for help and protection against the evils that are blighting their lives—and we must listen to them; sorrowing women are lifting up their voices in pitiful pleas for the loving ministry of helpful hands—and we cannot say them nay. Myriad voices are calling to us—voices of the living who need our heip and need it now. Let us hear them.

PROHIBITION AND HOTEL RATES.

At a recent meeting of the Southern Interstate Hotel Association in New Orieans, the suggestion was made that there will probably be a readjustment of hotel rates in order to make up for the ioss of revenue caused by the abolition of bars. Travelers who have to pay current rates have probably thought that the adjustment had already been made, and a liberal amount added for good measure. If the hotels just have to have it, though, we are willing to pay a little more for the privilege of feeling that we are not being entertained by a barkeeper.

WHAT WE ARE FIGHTING FOR.

The people of the world to-day are fighting for the opportunity to live quietly, normally, sanely. During the war we expected, and were prepared for, a more or less unsettled state of affairs, with consequent restlessness and uncertainty; now that the war is over, however, we want a chance to follow quietly in the paths of peace, giving our tense nerves the opportunity to relax. But are we getting it? In screaming headlines the newspapers are piiing one sensation upon top of another, and itinerant diagnosticians are proclaiming in raucous tones the thousand and one symptoms that indicate the speedy dissoiution of the hody politic. We go to bed at night in a state of feverish excitement over what has happened during the day, and we wake in the morning with a nameless dread of what the new day will bring forth. We want rest—and we need it—but we are multiplying our terrors and pyramiding our fears. The abnormal has hecome the normal, and the usual is the extraordinary. There is no rule by which we can calculate the probable results of a given course of action. The connecting link between yesterday and to-morrow has been broken; each day is like a wiid wanderer upon the face of the earth, rushing hither and yon in reckless disregard of aii that ever was or that ever will he. The past has lost its lessons, and the future is like a raging and uncharted ocean. The great mass of men seem to have lost the power to think caimiy and sanely; even those who occupy positions of leadership give forth no certain sound, passion and prejudice seeming to take the place of reason and ripe judgment. It is a world of unrest and unhappiness. But it cannot remain so forever. Men wiil have what they strive for, and the eager cry of every heart is for peace and quiet. Faith and hope have not perished from the earth, and love is stiil the most beautiful and the most wonderfuf thing in the world. God, too, sits upon the throne of the universe.

THE CHURCH AND POLITICS.

We do not believe that the church should enter political campaigns as a partisan advocate of either men or measures; hut we do helieve that Christian citizens shouid carry with them into their political activities the same high moral standards that they maintain in their private lives. Any effort to foist upon the puhiic disrepntahle men as office-holders, or questionabie measures for enactment into legislation should be met hy such uncompromising opposition on the part of those who place right above every other consideration that the effort would meet with ignominious failure. It is not often that even a powerfully entrenched political machine can stem the tide of outraged opinion. According to a press report, the mayor of Philadeiphia undertook to appoint to a high office a disreputabie ex-saloon keeper. When the good people of the city realized what was about to take place, their protests found voice through the action of the churches and the appointment was revoked. The church is ieast of all a political organization—hut it can do mnch to maintain decency in political life.

THE USES OF ADVERSITY.

Adversity is not pleasant, but it is often profitable. By its very nature it is a test of character. It always gives the sufferer the opportunity and the occasion for examining the foundation principles upon which he has builded his life. If prosperity and good fortune are the essentiais of rectitude, morality is merely a convenience and good character is a thing to be bought in the marketplace. Only weak men falter when troubies come upon them—strong men can carry burdens. We cannot attribute evil to God, and all pain is not punishment; hut in a strange way aii things, even sorrow and suffering, work together for good to those who are ohedient to the Divine wiii. The fiber of the sturdy oak is toughened by the storms that would uproot it, and its heauty is heightened by the blasts that would wrench its branches from their hold upon the trunk; so the tested man grows stronger by the tribulations he endures, and the maintenance of his integrity in the midst of sore trials inspires others to hold fast when adversity comes. It is no smaii thing that a beautitude was uttered hy the Lord in behaif of those who are the victims of persecution and false witness.

THE MEANS AT HAND.

We read not long ago that Raphael's Madonna of the Chair, one of the priceless art treasures of Europe, is painted on the head of a barrel. In addition to the snggestion that the most commonplace things may be glorified by the loving labor of consecrated hands, we note also that genius is not dependent upon favorabie conditions for the achievement of marveious results. The man of power is the man who can take ordinary equipment—even poor equipment—and fashion with it the perfect creation of the ideal in his soui. It would be hetter, of course, to have things just as we wouid like to have them; hut if we do our best with what is at hand, we have wrought for the ages.

LOW STANDARDS.

Commercial enterprises always take advantage of existing standards to fill their coffers. If public sentiment will permit the exploitation of degrading forms of amusement, there are always mercenary individuals and corporations ready to pander to the lowest passions of depraved hnman nature. We have a right to expect that reputable business concerns shall have a care for the morals of the community as well as for the profits from their investments; hut, apparently, the voice of conscience is drowned by the tinkie of coin in the till. Not good, but gold, is the standard by which the success of a husiness venture is too often measured. The community itself wiii have to learn to protect its finest instincts against the demoralizing influence of the greed for gain. Our standards are too low. A shrug of the shouiders is no adequate protest against salacious stories and lewd pictures; we need to hegin a campaign of education that will raise the standard of public morality to the point where even the attempt to give morally ohjectionahle entertainments wiii arouse such an outburst of indignation as will make their promoters fear to repeat the offense. Healthful recreation is a good thing, and clean entertainments are both enjoyable and heipful; our fight is solely against the so-caiied amusements and entertainments that inevitably produce moral disintegration.

UNIFICATION.

By Bishop Collins Denny,
Member of the Joint Commission on Unification.

III.

The Judicial Council, fifteen in number, cannot be recruited from members of the General Conference, nor of any Regional Conference, nor of any connectional board, nor shall any member of the Council hold any other connectional office. The Council will possess the functions now exercised by our committee of appeals—to hear appeals of traveling preachers, and to arrest an action of connectional boards—and in addition, to review upon appeal on constitutional grounds, the acts of the General Conference, the Associate General Conferences, the Regional Conferences and the Annual Conferences.

In itself alone, the attraction of office without salary, whether in the church or in the State, is too well known to need emphasis. Not infrequently office is given rather as a reward for some service than because of qualification. Sometimes men who have failed to attain a desired object have been given an office to relieve feelings possibly wounded by that failure. It is useless to struggle against this, because human nature must be taken as it is, not as we wish it to be. Searched to its foundation by a thoughtful, serious person, by one who is not easily thrown off his balance, office means literally nothing beyond opportunity for service. This plan greatly narrows the field from which members of the Judicial Council can be taken, thus excluding those best qualified to render important service. The purpose to secure men who have not committed themselves by word or action on the issues to be determined by the Council is a good purpose, a purpose whose ideal cannot be fully attained; for no man ever yet came to the consideration of a contested issue without some bias of thought or tendency of nature. Men free from all partiality do not exist. Knowledge of the facts involved necessitates the thinking of the thoughtful. Noting the exclusions from the field of choice, remembering that the best men must see that the possible service is worthy of the gift of time and thought, and observing the possibly narrow range of the work of the Council, it fails to impress the student of this Constitution as likely to be either a great or a useful body. As a committee of appeals in cases of their trial of preachers and of the review of the actions of boards, it will have a worthy sphere; but a General Conference committee would be equally as efficient. As a check on a General Conference of such wide powers, "endowed with dominion and made imperial in its operations," it is quite unlikely that a case will ever be entered on its docket.

Regional Conference—Its Seeming Advantages.

This paper does not propose to discuss the value of a possible Regional Conference, but only the Regional Conference provided for in this plan. The provision for this Conference is for our church the most attractive feature of the plan.

In the first place, we are to have a majority in three of the seven Regions, and within those Regions will be included Maryland, the District of Columbia and Missouri. The territory in these three Regions will cover practically the settled portion of the country which voted in 1844 to adhere to our church, and, in addition, the Baltimore Conference as then bounded, together with the Eastern Shore of Maryland and Virginia and the State of Delaware. Undoubtedly, so far as geography is concerned, our people will be satisfied, and each of these three Regions will be as homogenous as any division that could have been made.

In the second place, the provision for a vote by regional delegations in the United States on any pending motion or resolution, including amendments to the Constitution, when such vote shall be called for by a majority of each of two regional delegations, and the necessity for the concurrence of five of these delegations, each voting as one body, before action can be adopted, will be satisfactory to our people. In the third place, the requirement that the consent of three-fourths of all the members of the several Annual Conferences present and voting must be obtained to secure a change in the Constitution will appeal to our church. We are familiar with this three-fourths requirement, and we have found it to be a safeguard, and yet not too great a check. It needs to be kept clearly in mind that unless the Constitution is to be changed there will be nothing to call for a vote by the Annual Conferences, and the Constitution once adopted, the powers granted in the beginning by those Conferences will not be returned to them. Power once yielded is seldom, if ever, recovered. On the contrary, power tends almost irresistibly to increase. Practically, this three-fourths vote gives no protection to the South. Take the figures given at the Savannah meeting by one accustomed to deal much in statistics. His figures may not now be perfectly accurate, but relatively they will stand. The South "brings 7,440 preachers," the North "20,524 preachers" (Savannah Proceedings, page 344). We have now forty-seven Annual Conferences; they had in 1915, 109 Annual Conferences. To the preachers, add the lay members of the Annual Conferences, and we shall enter this union with not more than a fourth of the voting strength, if, indeed, we shall have a fourth. It is easy to say with truth that probably the North will not vote as a body, and as easy to reply with truth that neither shall we. If they wish, they will have the power to do according to their pleasure, and we shall lack the strength to say them nay.

No Analogy With State.

In the fourth place, our brethren will be pleased to see that "each Regional Conference shall have full power over all distinctively regional affairs within its area," and at first sight this seems to be local self-government. But is it? Look at those sweeping powers of the supreme General Conference. Within "those wide-extended plains" the Regional Conference cannot put its foot. It can busy itself with adjusting the boundaries of an Annual Conference, a work now practically in the power of the General Conference committee on boundaries. It can also take charge of the church institutions within its own territory, "which are not otherwise legally provided for." Our Annual Conferences now control such institutions, and there may be no purpose or need to change that control. It seems at best to be of no great importance, for doubtless no one will wish to change the management of those institutions which are now giving satisfaction. The Regional Conference is a feeble, sickly plant, as free from fruit and aroma as a painted flower. It was lauded as taking in the church the place of the State in the Union. There is no real analogy. This Conference is not even equal to a county in a State. A county school board with power to nominate the county superintendent is a closer analogy.

In the fifth place, the right of the Regional Conferences to nominate to the General Conference the men to be their bishops will be, at first sight, very attractive, partly because from 1808 to 1844 only McKendree and Andrew were chosen for that office from Virginia south to the Gulf and west to the latest settlement; and also because it is natural and right that whatever a bishop is to do hereafter, he should be the choice of the men with whom he is to work. It must not be overlooked that the General Conference is given the power to determine the number of bishops a Region shall have, and that without reference to a uniform principle. Should death or sickness reduce the number of active bishops in any Region, and should the bishops of any other Region be active and strong, it will be possible and likely that the General Conference will insist that one or more of these active bishops shall be taken for presidential and residential supervision by a Region by whom such bishops were not elected. What then can a Region do, the power to allot the number of bishops to be elected being in the General Conference? The Region must either accept the assignment suggested, or do its work with a weakened force. It will be well also to examine with care what the episcopacy will amount to under this Constitution. The church has the undoubted right to determine by law whether the episcopacy shall continue even in name, and if continued what shall be its functions.

Regional Conference—Its Real Weakness.

The white Regional Conference is an ex officio body. Its members are elected to the General Conference, and then by virtue of that election they become the delegates to the Regional Conference. Regional interests are subordinated even in the choice of the men to care for those interests. The Joint Commission would not even agree that "any Regional Jurisdiction may, if it desire, elect delegates to the Regional Conference other than those elected to the General Conference." That motion was offered, and was lost by a large majority. The white Regions are not allowed the privilege to determine for themselves whether they shall trust their interests to men less absorbed than the members of the General Conference always are, and necessarily must be. The main reason for this ex officio membership in the white Conferences was repeatedly given: The place and time of the meeting of General and Regional Conferences must be the same. It was said that till the General Conference had decided the question, a Region could not know the number of bishops to be allotted to it, nor that their nominations were confirmed. Attention was called to the ease and rapidity of telegraphic communication. The negro and foreign Regional Conferences are in this important respect given a privilege denied to the white Conferences in the United States. The Constitution contains under "Regional Conference for Colored Membership in the United States" the following provision (repeated in identical words under the title "Regional Conference for Membership in Foreign Countries," except that "said" in the first is replaced by "any of these" in the second): "The numerical basis of representation in said Regional Conference may be changed by said Regional Conference, subject to approval by the General Conference, provided, that the membership of said Regional Conference shall not exceed 400 ministers and laymen in equal numbers."

We are told that we can trust the General Conference not to take any action needlessly, that we can have, indeed must have confidence in that body. Lawyers, indeed, students generally, will readily recall those words of Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch vs. Maryland, perhaps the most famous and the ablest of his judicial opinions: "All inconsistences are to be reconciled by the magic word 'confidence.' But is this a case of 'confidence?' Would the people of any one State trust those of another with a power to control the most insignificant operations of their State government? We know they would not. * * * This is not a case of confidence." (4 Wheaton 431.) The Annual Conference, yea, more the church, whose liberty depends on the will of another body, especially when that body is declared to be supreme, has no liberty.

Influence Will Dwindle.

What efficiency can be expected from a body whose members meet during the time and at the place a General Conference is in session? Any man who has ever served in a General Conference knows that its business presses him to the utmost limit of time and strength. Let him do his best, and out of the multitude of interests he must select a few to which to give himself. No ordinary man can serve with efficiency in a General Conference and have time and strength to give to any other business. In addition to the overshadowing importance of General Conference business, compressed as it is within a few weeks, even a slight knowledge of human nature is all that is necessary to lead to the inevitable conclusion that only a dwindling usefulness and life lie before these Regional Conferences. The General and Regional Conferences cannot both continue, and the lesser will be swallowed by the greater. The twelve-year proviso in the Constitution is likely to be the limit of the life of the Regional Conference. Then, indeed, we shall probably see this feature, now so lauded, eliminated, and complete absorption will have taken place. The first gale that sweeps from the North brings to our ears the crash of these resounding words from a recent editorial by a member of the Commission: "May we not trust the united church to deal wisely and effectively with any sectionalism which may emerge because of or in spite of this piece of new machinery known as the Regional Conference, and either to mend or scrap any such machinery as may be found in the way of the full union earnestly desired and determinedly sought by the Methodists of the Methodist Church?"

A motion to strike from the section on the powers of the Regional Conference the word "legislative," and to insert "administrative," met with instant and positive rejection by our Commission. The difference was vital. Every one instantly saw the radical change involved. Yet when it is objected that a legislative ex officio body is an anomaly, is in itself inefficient, we are told that our General Conference boards have ex officio members and that their work is well done! It ought not to be necessary to call attention to the fact that these boards are not legislative, but are administrative bodies. The administrative body works under law made for it, the legislative body makes the laws for others to work under. The church has not favored even a small per cent of ex officio members in the Annual Conferences, a body with no power to make law. Only a few years ago an effort to introduce ex officio members into the Annual Conference, actively supported as it was by the most influential board in the church, failed to secure even half the votes in the Annual Conferences. The longer that plan was discussed the fewer votes it received.

Argument is Refuted.

It has been said that should the Regional Conference and the General Conference be composed of different men, the General Conference would have all the stronger men and the Regional Conference would be composed of men unfitted for the work. This argument evidently proceeds upon a supposition contrary to fact. The Baltimore Conference had in 1824 no stronger men than John Emory, Beverly Waugh and Alfred Griffith, all of whom were members of the Conference of 1820, two of them afterwards bishops, yet none of them was elected to the Conference of 1824. Norval Wilson was not elected to the Conference of 1844, nor P. H. Whisner to that of 1882, nor Paul Whitehead to that of 1874. The list could be greatly lengthened. Let it suffice to notice that neither Enoch M. Marvin nor Robert K. Hargrove nor Atticus G. Haygood was a member of the Conference at which he was elected and ordained a bishop. The necessity for this ex officio character of the Regional Conference does not exist. Men equally as able as those sent to the General Conference fail of election to that body, often men of greater ability than those who are chosen. Election does not now depend on ability, nor has ability in itself alone ever been the ground of election. Was it lack of ability that kept Calhoun, Clay and Webster out of the White House? There are not wanting historians who say they were too great to be elected, that smaller men made stronger appeal to those who cast the votes.

All of us agree that there is a place for the Regional Conference; perhaps among us it would be said there is a necessary place. Then surely it should be given a place of dignity, a place of power, a place of efficiency, and not be dwarfed into this ex officio body under the shadow of a supreme General Conference. In membership, in work, in time given to do that work, it could be made to appeal to the best men in the church; whereas, in this plan of government its membership is but an appendage to another body, its work is of no dignity or comparative importance, the time given to that work only the dregs left in men weary in mind and body. It lacks even the attraction of looking well on paper, and in practice will be found as inefficient as Don Quixote's pasteboard helmet.

No Time for Regional Conference.

Consider the possibilities and probabilities. When are the Regional Conferences to meet? All the morning the General Conference is in session, all the afternoon the committees by which most of the work is done are meeting. Should one Region desire to meet, will the General Conference accommodate it by adjourning, seventeen men in one Region and fifty-one in another, reducing to idleness or to scheming the remaining hundreds? At times balloting is protracted. Possibly but one Region will need to nominate bishops. Will all the General Conference, including committee meetings, be brought to a pause while this one Region works over the knotty problems? Suppose a majority of two Regions desires the opportunity to test whether it be best to have a vote by Regions, and suppose, in addition, a third Region may be inclined to agree with these two, will four Regions agree to adjourn and thus forego the victory safe in their hands? When did majorities act in this way? Every one will readily recall how Clay, by shrewd management, with a majority of but three votes, carried the Missouri compromise. That majority will justify its action by the maxim that majorities have the right to rule. But why continue to enumerate the almost inexhaustible possibilities and probabilities? The Constitution makes no provision for a meeting by Regions when a resolution is pending in the General Conference, and many instances are readily recalled when quick action is necessary.

In this Constitution it is difficult to determine the point of greatest danger, but pehaps it will be found to be the Regional Conference; and that whether viewed in the favorable light of the South, or in the unfavorable light of the North. The greater the attraction of this feature to men in the South, the greater the repulsion it must be in the North. Only men who try to see both sides of a question can get an approach to a true understanding of it. Take the Northern view, and at once it is seen that about 440,000 of their members fall into Regions predominantly Southern, while of our members perhaps scarcely more than 30,000 will be in Regions predominantly Northern. (Exact figures are not available. Statistics furnished a year or two ago for the use of the Commission have been summarized in round numbers.) Will there be no friction growing out of the government of these members? Are not these the very members who have been most afflicted by existing friction? Will this human nature, even though all of it be regenerate, never have a hearthurn? Think of the Regional Conference as an enduring, efficient organ of government, and he is blind who does not see that it must be by the North looked upon as dangerous to the peace and prosperity of those in whose interest he has suffered most. On the other hand, look at this Regional Conference from the Southern side. The role of the prophet is not assumed. All that is attempted is to draw inferences from indisputable fact and principles. To the North the provision for the Regional Conferences must appear not the unification of Methodism, but its reorganization; and the pressure, the constant pressure from that quarter, must be to abolish it or to make it useless. To us it will be the citadel, till we become wearied with its impotency.

Powers Next to Nothing.

Will any church composed of sensible people consent to weary itself long with a piece of useless machinery? Either some use for the machinery will be found or it will soon be discarded. According to this Constitution the Regional Conference cannot be a useful piece of church machinery, because its membership is ex officio, its powers are next to nothing, it is too subordinate, too overshadowed to command respect. The only possible attention it can receive will be the attention given by men already overworked. Weary men are not generally characterized by wisdom, discretion, prudence. Too often in haste and imprudence they wreck the vessel they should bring into port. Discard this part of the plan and what is left to the South except complete absorption?

If, however, it should be found that some real power for the Regional Conference can be found, and this is most unlikely, then the functions of that Conference will be a growing irritation to the General Conference, and the North will be in perpetual trouble. If the Regional Conference should grow into a governing body of local affairs of any moment to the church, it will be the government by a minority, for we are greatly in the minority. As long as human nature retains its characteristic traits, as surely as history gives us any light, a minority possessing none of the advantages of superior ability, training, knowledge, wealth, position, cannot govern a majority. The Regional Conference, looked at from all sides, all the provisions for it calmly and carefully weighed, is destructive to the South if it should prove to be temporary and inefficient, and it will be, if it should prove to be efficient, irritating and impossible of endurance by the North. A Regional Conference with a real membership with powers needed to do its work efficiently, working in harmony with a General Conference restricted to the oversight of purely connectional business and kept within legitimate bounds by enforcible limitations, would give promise of solving our difficulties. By this plan it can do no more than the State of New York could accomplish if the legislature of that State were composed ex officio of its senators and representatives in Congress and were necessitated to meet in Washington during the time Congress was in session, and confined to such narrow limits as those to which this Constitution confines the Regional Conference, under a Congress with such supreme, all-controlling powers as are given to the General Conference.

This Plan Revolutionary.

This plan does not reconstruct the Methodism of our fathers, the Methodism we have known and loved; it revolutionizes it. Methodism is torn down, the plowshare is run through its foundations, the retention of some familiar terms to the contrary notwithstanding. In the reconstruction not all the valuable material of the old building is retained. "For wise men this is not judicious, for sober men not sound, for minds tinctured with caution not without jeopardy."

So revolutionary is the plan that the new church will be altogether different from anything any of us has ever known. Its advocates in asking its acceptance should make it perfectly clear, not that it is a change, but that it is an improvement. The end proposed should be looked at with steadiness. The greater usefulness of the church is sought through the union of two churches, whose spirit is very different. This plan is indifferently suited to the end proposed. It is complicated, most complicated, and to adopt the words of a great statesman, "we know in general what an operose business it is to establish a government almost wholly new." Men need time to accommodate themselves to great changes, as D'Aubigne says somewhere in one of those thirteen volumes of his great work. The change from the Articles of Confederation to the United States Constitution was not so great as will be the change from our present church government to the proposed plan, yet even with the unsurpassed influence of Washington, the admiration, the respect, the reverence, the love of the people for him, together with the genius of Jefferson and Hamilton, and of that host of able associate patriots, our ship of state was for years in a storm off a lea shore. In our experience Romanism is the only church at all similar to this new Methodism. Now "all Protestantism, even the most cold and passive, is a kind of dissent." A Protestant world-church is antagonistic to the very genius of the Reformation and all that has followed from it. Such a church must be only a dismal, cold, dead uniformity.

Experimenting With Success.

No known age of the world has lacked a large class of minds which regards an appeal to the past as indisputable evidence of crystallized conservatism, and many are the coarse, question-begging epithets by which this conservatism is stigmatized. It is usual to-day for this class to honor itself with the name of "forward-looking men," men who are freed from the trammels of the past, men who follow the path that has not yet been trodden. Few, if any, of this class pause to consider where they are to find the light to enable them to look forward. In fact, the need of light with which to look is not with them a conscious need. Every man who thinks well knows that in a developing world new conditions must be met by new plans. He also knows that without disaster a man cannot ignore the wisdom of the past, nor its unbroken experience. He knows that changed conditions necessitate a change in the form of the application of tried maxims and eternal principles, yet those maxims and principles can never change. The greatest writers in military history declare that no change in tactics can ever change the science of military strategy. No sane commander would now arm his men with the long spears with which at Marathon the Athenians pushed their way to victory, nor with the sturdy oars, whose synchronous strokes at Salamis brought the Greek triremes crashing down upon the Persian fleet. The shields of the phalanxes of Alexander at Issus are now as useless on the field of battle as are the elephants of Hannibal or the lighted fagots on the horns of the oxen by which means he was able to go through the pass in Samnium. Even the English cannon at Waterloo would now be useless, though at that time those cannon tore through the French squadrons as they advanced to foam themselves away around the English squares. But different as were the arms recently used in Flanders and on the fair fields of France, the principles of strategy had not changed. Victory now, as then, belongs to the general who will bring the greater number of trained, fresh men, properly armed, to the critical position and will keep up his supplies.

Only ignorance shuts its eyes to the steady light that comes from the past. It is as true to-day as it was in 1830 when Bascom wrote the words: "A government uniting the legislative, judicial and executive powers in the hands of the same men is an absurdity in theory, in practice a tyranny." Indeed, he simply formulated the experience of the ages, experience as old as human government. Maxims and principles of government may be trampled under foot by the careless and the ignorant, but only to have them turn and rend you. Pride in ancestry may be a stimulus to noble endeavor, disregard of posterity will inevitably lead to its ruin. Forward-looking blind men and all their followers stumble to destruction. As we go along our way let us gladly accept all the light given by the past. Let us not deceive ourselves with the delusion that no Solomon ever lived, or that Solon begins his life to-day. Eternal is the fact that those who believe not Moses and the prophets will not believe the truth that never dies.

Glory of Methodism.

Many pages of Protestant church history glow with heavenly light, but none surpasses the pages commemorating the deeds of our Methodist fathers. If any page of church history be comparable, it must be found among the records of the century that marked the planting and training of the church. Our church in America had its rise, as it has had its development, in simple hearts aflame with love for God. Little was the light of learning that illumined their minds, but God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, shone in their hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Silver and gold they had none, but God gave them power to lift the moral cripple to his feet. No earthly influence aided their efforts, no propitious breezes from the hills of worldly favor filled their sails. Against opposing currents with pain they made their way, but kindly were the stars that shone in heaven's cloudless sky. Truly, they had nothing, yet they possessed all things. Small as was the mustard seed with which they went forth to sow, hard as was the soil watered with their tears, like the forest of Lebanon has been the result. Those fathers of ours, they civilized the country. They turned the rushing stream of evil out of its channel, and set the current flowing toward the city of God. The heraldic cognizance of the Prince of Wales, won by the Black Prince on that great day at Crecy, and taken by him from the slain Bohemian king, "I serve," kindles enthusiasm. That motto was most gloriously blazoned in the lives of our fathers, blazoned the brighter because of success won by adversity. The sacred sign passed on from hand to hand and burned more brightly all the way, for they were wholly free from the strangling arms of those twin brothers—love of ease and worldly wealth. Methodism has been a success, an unexampled success. She has lived her days under the smile of her Lord, and never before had she a wider or a brighter outlook than to-day. Nor has she lost the momentum of her faith.

Shall we experiment with a success, an unequaled success? Wisdom does not favor that; it condemns it.

"REVIVE US AGAIN."

By Rev. S. Curtis Yates.

There is reason for alarm in sectarian circles to-day because of a spirit of coldness, of lethargy, and of arrested growth pervading them. God is going to work a change of disintegration in them unless we honor Him, and that right early. "Unless we honor Him," and the expression is used advisedly and with much deliberation. The Southern Methodist Church has ceased to grow, statistics showing that during the past year the number of members received into the church on profession of faith in the North Mississippi Conference was twelve per cent less than during the preceding year. So far was the church from holding its own, there was a net loss in the North Mississippi Conference of six hundred members. This decline in membership is the appalling characteristic in the summary of perhaps all the Conferences, and of the several denominations as well. The number of members lost by the Methodist Church of the North was sixty thousand! It takes no Jeremiah to read in the marred vessel the fate of any church if such a showing continues to repeat itself.

The need for a church-wide spiritual awakening is manifest. No monetary need ever approached the present one. The Methodist Church carried the Centenary over, and carried it over "big," and great was the rejoicing throughout the land. But in our eagerness for making the financial drive a success, we did little driving for immortal souls. The new year found us rich in silver and gold, but spiritually we were well-nigh impoverished. It is well that a spiritual campaign is to be inaugurated this year. Let us make a drive for the return of the Sabbath Day in its full and deep significance, and in all its ancient sanctity. Let us include in our spiritual program for the year a discouragement of loafing about the cafes and depot during the hours of church services. Let us begin now to love our church and one another as we never did before; this must precede an approaching revival, if it is to be worthy of the name.

It is said that the Methodist is less loyal to his church and loves his fellow churchman less than does the member of any of the other denominations. The accusation is challenged, but there is food here for thought. We hear it said at every turn, "We don't stick together, we are not as loyal to Sunday school and faithful to attend church as are the ———." Why not? Why should one balk at inviting some one to attend church? If the children can come out to Sunday school, why should the teacher not be as faithful, and not deliberately leave the class without a leader, because the weather happens not to be the counterpart of the spicy breezes that "blow soft o'er Ceylon's isle?" Do we inquire after absent pupils, and make it a point to see personally any who are irregular in their attendance? When a new family comes to town, do we go after them for the church and Sunday school, or do we leave them for other denominations to receive? There are always unchurched members in every community; do we urge them to come into our church? We know how quick many another denomination would be to solicit prospective members.

The Methodist Church is to-day the biggest Protestant body in Christendom with respect to wealth and membership. As an ecclesiastical organization God has blessed it, and Methodism stands like Saul among his brethren, head and shoulders above them all. But last year the church went through a period of arrested growth. God is ever trying to do his best for us, but he has not covenanted to keep a favoring countenance turned upon any ecclesiastical body. He sets his permanent, final, irrevocable approval upon no person or thing. And if we do not answer His purpose; if we as a church reflect not his mind and character, God's face will be turned from us and the hand of disappointment will rebuke, crush, disintegrate us. If we will not be first, we may be second. If we will not be gold, we may be silver; and if not silver, we may be wood or clay.

"Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee?" The one thought and purpose and aim of Methodism this year is a revival of religion in every Methodist congregation. Everything else is subordinate, secondary in importance. The one offering that will this year go up from her altar will be a universal cry, not for silver dollars or golden eagles, but for a Pentecostal awakening that shall permeate, electrify, and enliven the faith of believers, and shall awaken sleeping sinners to the blessed realty of the presence of, and companionship with the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

And it shall be done. When the millions of Methodists "go from their knees to any task, it shall be done." The campaign this year is for souls. When the campaign closes it will be found that the church went over, and went over big. Methodism is aroused like a giant from troubled sleep, and is girding itself for an effort that is titanic in its proportions, is poising itself for a thrust that shall cause Heli's foundations to quiver. All up and down the land comes the good news that God's saints are gathering at Jerusalem. The whole church moves forward like the Crusaders, whose vast host awoke the silent, dreary plains to the thundering tread of innumerable feet. Staff in hand, the dust on our sandals, each in the habiliment of a pilgrim, the saints of Methodism betake themselves to the shrine at which Christ said tarry "until ye be endued with power from on high." Let us enter upon this pilgrimage. Let us go to the mercy seat and tarry and wrestle till heaven and earth are brought together. Let the dreary hours of the night and the gray breaking of the day find us struggling like Jacob as he strove with the angel by the brook. Let us pray God mightily to revive us.

"Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee?"

THE INTERCHURCH WORLD MOVEMENT.

By Rev. C. A. Battle.

Whatever good may have been seen by many in the Interchurch World Movement from its beginning up till a few weeks ago, seemingly has been blurred by some facts that are now forthcoming. An effort was made to stampede Protestant ministry and laity into the organization before they had opportunity to know all about it. Vast office buildings and forces are being maintained throughout the country; expensive group meetings have been held; surveys in which the expense was not considered have been made; and in other ways has money been spent in a lavish manner. And one of the troubles now seems to be that the money was not in sight when it was spent. A correspondent in the New Orleans Advocate of March 4, records some illuminating information. He states: "The immediate expenses of the Movement are being met through credits established by the boards of the co-operating denominations. These boards do not advance money, but they do provide credit on which the Movement can borrow. More than twenty churches operating separately would spend a vast amount of money which would not be noticed, but when their interests are brought together under one clearing-house agency, it naturally attracts attention."

These "co-operating denominations," which this correspondent seems to think are so beautifully engaged in this cure-all work, are not so all-embracive as the innocent might imagine; neither can it be said that they are sailing toward their Interchurch goal as peacefully as some have aspired for them.

One of the leading churchmen of the Northern Presbyterian Church, writing in the Presbyterian of Philadelphia, states: "The Presbyterian Church is being flooded with letters and literature regarding this Movement, some of which grossly misrepresent the facts. I have before me a letter which, no doubt, has been sent to all our ministers, which is full of misstatements. It is supposed to deal with the question of the change of date for the every-member canvass in the Presbyterian Church. It really is an urgent appeal for ministers not to criticise or to have any opinions except what are furnished them by the Movement on the subject of the Interchurch World Movement. The letter states that 'a practically complete Protestantism will unite in raising together the budget needed.' That is not true. As far as I can learn the Methodists, some of whose members are engineering this movement, have refused to make any canvass. The Baptist Church, South, refused to go into it. The Episcopalians hold aloof and will have nothing to do with it. The bishops of the Methodist Church, South and North, are against it. The United Lutherans refuse to join it. Again, the letter states that 'the budget for the Presbyterian Church will not be determined by the Interchurch.' That was precisely what was done. The Interchurch asked our Executive Commission for sixty-two million dollars. The commission pared that down to forty-five million, twenty-two million of it to go to the Interchurch Movement. If that is not allowing the Interchurch to fix the Presbyterian budget, I do not know what it is. Again, the letter states: 'We shall not be called upon to surrender our New Era program.' The loss comes in the large overhead charges of the Interchurch Movement, for publicity, for parlor cars, expensive hotels, useless literature and surveys, high salaries of men outside our church who never had a pastorate, in telling us how to do it, and to take off our coats and go to work in order to get our salaries raised as was advised last week at Harrisburg, Pa. The only way the writer sees of getting a large salary is to join the Movement and become a traveling secretary, and have a good time at the expense of the church. Some of those already in the Movement had better take off their coats and go at it in the pastorate."

The editorial policy of the Presbyterian of Philadelphia is highly critical of, and indignant at, the Interchurch Movement. At the great Atlantic City Interchurch Movement gathering a budget of one hundred and four million dollars for foreign missions was prepared. When the Foreign Missions Conference gathered a week later at New Haven, Conn., a lively session was held. The editor of the Presbyterian states: "The secretaries at the Conference at New Haven knew that this budget had been made up by the Interchurch leaders, without authority. They also knew that the boards had not yet endorsed it. Then Secretaries Mott, Speer and Taylor, by fervent addresses, urged and appealed that the secretaries ratify the foreign missionary item of $104,000,000 for the coming year. It was ratified by a unanimous vote. It is reported that Mr. Speer urged the secretaries to ratify even if the boards should later rebuke them for rashness. This disregard for law and order is a bitter surprise to the friends of Mr. Speer. This whole action smacks of ecclesiastical anarchy. It shows a bad spirit, and seems to throw down the challenge to the various denominations to defend their own organizations and integrity."

The editor of the Presbyterian also makes the following statement: "The cost of the Interchurch campaign up to April, this year, will be over ten million dollars. Of this amount the majority vote of the Executive Commission obligated the Presbyterian Church to one million dollars." Again, he says: "The Interchurch Movement is wholly outside all denominations. The men who originated it did so without authority. They have pursued their course up to this date according to their own wisdom. They are now confronting an obligation of ten million dollars. Some of their friends say, if they are not 'helped out,' it means a state of chaos. Is it financially sound, or morally right, to take a million dollars of the church's money to prevent a self-instituted and self-directed Movement from chaos?"

Of course, the M. E. Church, South, is not officially connected with the Interchurch World Movement. But the Movement evidently expects Southern Methodist pastors to co-operate with it in its "progressive" programs, or long telegrams would not be sent to our ministers or their railroad and Pullman fares would not be paid to the various Interchurch Movement meetings. In the face of our recent fifty-million-dollar mission drive and our forthcoming twenty-three-million-dollar educational drive, how are we going to assist the Interchurch Movement in its burdensome financial programs? And if we are not able to raise its needed millions, ought we ride on the railroad and Pullman fare money the Movement is corkscrewing out of the Northern Presbyterian and other denominations already in its drag-net?

SOUTH AMERICA: THE UNDEVELOPED CONTINENT.

By Rev. A. C. Millar, D.D.

(Dr. Millar, the distinguished editor of the Arkansas Methodist, has recently completed an extensive tour of South America. We consider ourselves extremely fortunate to be able to give these interesting sketches to our readers.—Editor.)

The Physical Features of South America.

In order properly to understand Latin America it is necessary to familiarize ourselves with its physical features and its history.

On account of the way our maps are made, as if the earth were a cylinder split lengthwise and spread flat, we do not get a correct idea of the size of South America. Its area is more than 7,000,000 square miles, or almost exactly that of the United States and Canada combined. Brazil alone is larger than the United States without Alaska and larger than all Europe without Russia. Even pigmy Panama is twice as large as Switzerland, and little Uruguay is larger than the six New England States together, while Argentine is equal to all of the United States east of the west line of Missouri and Arkansas, and, if placed upon North America, it would extend from Key West, Florida, beyond northern Labrador. Chile, although only about 200 miles wide, if stretched across the United States, would reach from the Atlantic at Maine to the Pacific at Oregon. The breadth of South America at the equator is 3,500 miles and its length from Cape Horn to the tip of Colombia is 4,600 miles, and as Cape Horn is not ice-bound, the whole continent is surrounded by the open ocean and is accessible by ship.

The mountains, the plains, and the rivers are all on a gigantic scale. There is a very narrow strip of lowland on the Pacific coast. Rising abruptly and extending from the Caribbean Sea to Magellan Strait are the magnificent Andes Mountains, which broaden in Bolivia, Peru, and Ecuador into two or three ranges superimposed upon a plateau 6,000 to 10,000 feet high. Here are found some of the highest peaks in the world, as Aconcagua, in Argentina, over 23,000 feet high, and Cotopaxi in Ecuador, the highest active volcano on the globe. Here, too, are great glaciers; and Lake Titicaca, between Bolivia and Peru, the largest body of water at that height in the world, is two miles above sea level and is 135 miles long and 66 wide.

East of the Andes is a great plain, extending from Magellan Strait to the Caribbean Sea. The plains are called pampas, and are somewhat similar to the plains of the United States between the Alleghanies and the Rockies. Through these broad plains run mighty rivers. The Amazon, which in Peru rises within 100 miles of the Pacific, uniting a multitude of tributaries, flows majestically across the continent almost exactly under the equator to the Atlantic Ocean. It is the largest river in the world, and is navigable for 3,000 miles, or from the Andes to the Atlantic, while with its tributaries it affords 30,000 miles of navigable waterway. North of it is the Orinoco River, navigable for 1,000 miles and at one place connecting with a branch of the Amazon, so that it is possible for a small boat to enter the mouth of the Amazon and sail up and then out through the Orinoco into the Atlantic again, having encompassed the plateau of the Orinoco. Then, rising in the central portion of the continent are the numerous streams which unite to form the Rio de la Plata. One can hardly credit the statement that this last system carries to the ocean more water than does the Mississippi, and is navigable for sea-going craft for 1200 miles and for smaller vessels over 2,000 miles from its mouth. Between the Amazon and the La Plata in Brazil is a plateau and a range of mountains which runs parallel with the Atlantic coast. Out of these flow short rivers into the ocean.

While the larger portion of South America lies in the torrid zone, the high altitude and proximity to water cause much of it to have very pleasant climatic conditions. Through the Andean region the cities are either on the seacoast or at an elevation of 6,000 to 10,000 feet. All the countries have some temperate sections and practically all of the capitals have favorable climates, while Quito, the capital of Ecuador, eight miles from the equator, has an altitude of two miles and a delightful all-year climate.

South America contains a wonderful variety and quantity of minerals. In Brazil are found sixty-eight different minerals. The gold and silver mines of Peru are enormously rich, and its deposit of copper is thought to be the most extensive in the world. Coal is scarce, but petroleum has been discovered, and in Chile the copper and nitrate deposits are simply enormous. Bolivia alone produces one-fourth of the world's tin. Large and beautiful emeralds and even diamonds are found. On the island of Trinidad is a lake of pure asphalt 8,000 feet across, and in British Guiana great deposits of bauxite are being developed.

The forests are vast. Along the Amazon and the Orinoco they are almost inexhaustible and have been scarcely touched. Brazil's coffee crop amounts to about 1,585,000,000 pounds annually, while cocoa, rice, cotton, sugar, tobacco, and rubber are raised in large quantities in many places. The wide pampas support much cattle and in Argentina particularly much wheat and other grains are grown.

As the total population of South America is only 50,000,000, it may readily be seen that it is a vast, undeveloped continent of almost inconceivable possibilities.

OPPOSED TO UNIFICATION.

Some weeks since, the Advocate came to our home, and as we opened it and read, first thing, "Plan For Unification of American Methodism," we felt such a shock, and a cloud seemed to have spread over the entire heavens without one ray of hope. This came in addition to the horrors caused by the telegram in the daily papers, a dispatch from Kentucky, to the effect that the Joint Commission had unanimously adopted the plan for unification. We are indebted to Brother Selby, who, in correction of this error, gives us the statement from Dr. Dickey, which came as a rift, or rainbow in the cloud, enabling us by faith to see the "silver lining."

In a recent issue of the Advocate, we are pleased to read the article by J. A. Lewis, who expresses the sentiments of not a few. Have the members of the Joint Commission considered the possible fatality of the members of our body who are opposed to the union, who through grief and discouragement are liable to fall into apostacy? He who notes the sparrows' fall, and affirms that "not one of them is forgotten before God," also adds, "Ye are of more value than many sparrows." Who can estimate the influence of one life for either good or evil? What about such men as J. A. Lewis, S. A. Steel and others, who shine as beacon lights, together with the lesser lights? Are they to be ignored, not considered? Were they to unite with other churches, would the gain exceed the loss? Hon. H. H. White, of Alexandria, writes thus: "If the Southern Church decides to concede the principle * * * I shall abide by the decision, but personally I am opposed to it." We do not feel that way—we would rather go into some other church.

God wants the whole heart, and half-hearted service is surely not acceptable to Him. So much time is spent and lost. The revival campaign seems to have been lost sight of. Soul-saving is our principal aim. Think on these things. Lord, save us from peril.

IN OPPOSITION TO THE PROPOSED NAME.

Dear Advocate: Allow me to express myself through your columns regarding unification of the two branches of the Methodist Church.

1. I would not eliminate "Episcopal" from its name, because our episcopacy is the heart of the church. John Wesley lived and died in the Episcopal Church; some of our parents and grandparents were M. E. and M. E., South. To change the name would make it appear as if we had severed all connection with them and organized a new church.

2. There would be an effort to change to a congregational form of church government, which would mean the neglecting of the poor churches, depriving many of the poor of the gospel.

3. If changed, let it be Episcopal Methodist. It would not then lose its identity. This, I believe, will give satisfaction to a greater number.

4. If the North and South wish to unite their churches for the benefit of the whole, then we should not object, because they have made provision in their Constitution for the negro that seems to be just to all. Sectionalism should not have any part in adjusting an agreement between Christians who wish to unite in peace and Christian brotherhood.

CENTENARY MILLIONS AND THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

By Rev. W. W. Pinson, D.D.

It is cause for common rejoicing that the Centenary has had such great success. The financial drive resulted in pledges that went far beyond what was originally asked. The campaigns of Stewardship and Intercession have been a great and permanent blessing to hundreds of thousands of our people. The increase in pastors' salaries alone has been one of the most significant forward steps in our history. Most significant of all is the Evangelistic Movement that is now at its height throughout the church. This is the crowning glory and final justification of all that has gone before. The Centenary without this could not have heen considered a real success. Then, too, more than $6,000,000 has been paid in on pledges alone in less than one year from the drive.

It is not to he forgotten, however, that even success has its dangers. Not only the dangers that come without threaten the success of a good cause, hut also those that come from within. Chief among those is the excessive optimism and underestimation of certain bed-rock facts that always lie along the way. The Centenary cannot plead exemption from these dangers. It is to call attention to some of these facts that this article is written—not to deny mistakes, nor minify shortcomings, nor to boast of our achievements. Either of these would be poor business and a waste of time and energy; besides it would get us nowhere.

Instead of reading over the log-book of yesterday, let us sweep the mines from the course of tomorrow.

It should be frankly admitted that we are in danger of over-estimating our financial success, when taken in the light of certain serious and outstanding facts. In the first place, it is pretty clear now that earlier estimates from the reports hurriedly sent in at the close of the Big Drive will he considerahly reduced. The exact figures will soon be published, and it is only necessary to state the evident fact at this time. This was natural, not to say almost unavoidahle, under the circumstances. For the report that the total reached fifty-five millions, or thereabouts, none of us are responsihle. Patient and thorough-going processes have heen used to secure and tabulate the exact results, as far as this can he done. It has taken more time and lahor than one who has not undertaken such a task would have supposed. One fact which stands out, challenging our gratitude and thrilling our hearts with encouragement and hope for the future, is that while we set out to ask for thirty-five millions as a minimum, the church swept far and away beyond this in its hearty and enthusiastic response.

It would he unfortunate should there be created a feeling on the part of the church that the causes related to this movement have been enriched heyond all their needs, and that they are going to he emharrassed hy a large surplus. Let us take a look at the facts. These will show clearly that when every cent that has heen pledged is paid, the Board of Missions will not be ahle to cover its original Askings in the surveys. These Askings were made up on the hasis of the purchasing power of a gold dollar in 1917. It is well within the fact to say that the purchasing power of the dollar has fallen as low as sixty per cent of what it was when these estimates were made. In other words, it would require more than fifty-eight million dollars to cover the items involved in the Asking for thirty-five millions. Nobody supposes that it is possihle for us to reach anywhere in the neighhorhood of this amount of income.

But the case is even worse than this makes it appear. In China we asked for $2,995,711. The gold dollar was at that time in China worth more than twice what it is worth now in silver. Hence, when our Dr. Rawlings and Miss Howell were in China they found it necessary to face the missionaries and state to them the heart-breaking necessity of cutting their Askings to half of what they had expected, leaving them under the hope that a part of the delayed Askings may be provided out of a surplus in the end. But this is not the whole story. The price of building material, real estate, labor and all the necessities involved in the missionary program have doubled and trebled since 1917 in China. This cuts still further the purchasing power of even the one-half left to the Mission hy the decreased price of gold. It would not he at all extravagant to say that not more than forty cents in actual results will be realized from each dollar of Centenary money provided for China unless there is a great change in finances in that country. Thus, at the best we can do, we are face to face with the necessity of disappointing the expectations of our missionaries and of discouraging our native workers and churches.

While I write a letter comes from Sunkiang, China, saying it will now require $13,500 to build a church for which only $4,000 was asked originally. A single illustration from Japan will show a somewhat similar situation. We had asked several years ago for $7,000 to build a church in Kobe. A friend in Texas offered to increase his Centenary pledge to $10,000 to build this church, understanding that at least $3,000 more would be needed under the high cost of material and labor. Investigation showed that at least $19,500 would be required. I communicated this fact to this friend, and he promptly agreed to furnish the money and sent it. We have already sent to the field $16,500 of this money, which pays only for the lot, leaving but $3,000 for the building. We are told in a recent letter from that field that huilding has gone up at least two hundred per cent in the last two years. In the end this church, under present conditions, will cost three times what it would have cost when the original estimate was made. It would he tedious to go into all of the fields for similar illustrations and similar, if more moderate, results.

What is true of the Foreign fields is in its measure true of the Home fields also. Needless to say it will be impossible to do what we set out to do in our Home Mission program without an immense advance in income over what was included in the Centenary Askings. In addition, we find that $1,500,000 contained in the original estimates for our City Mission Work was omitted in the original summary of the thirty-five million dollars and must be provided for as an additional sum. Our City Mission needs are so outstanding and urgent that to omit them from our program at this time would he almost criminal, and it will not be done.

In short, instead of a feeling of exultation and an attitudes or quiescent satisfaction, only disturbed by perplexity as to how we are to spend our surplus, the problem that demands our united prayer and effort is to find a way to save our great cause of Missions from failure and supply the equipment for which it has so long waited and for which this great hour cries with such insistency and urgency. It is no less important that we should save our workers at home and abroad from the depressing disappointment and discouragement that will come to them if we fail to meet the moderate and reasonable expectations they have so hopefully entertained.

In the light of these facts, which are stubborn and moderately stated, we must urge upon our people the necessity for full collections of their Centenary pledges. We must hold the line steady to our slogan—"No shrinkage but an increase."

We face a more critical situation than most of us realize. It is a new world since 1917. The estimates them made were made without the remotest dream of the world facts as they exist today. The real issue before us as a challenge to our united and hest efforts is not how to dispose of a surplus, hut how to make ends meet and redeem our long delayed promises to a lost and needy world.

SIGN SEEKERS.

By Rev. H. W. Bowman.

It is with wonderful tenacity that the human mind will cling to signs, without ever stopping to study the great law of cause and effect. Here are some that I have known all my life, which recently were expressed:

"If you milk a cow on the ground, she will dry up."

"If you kill a toad, the cow will give bloody milk."

"If you see the new moon through brush, you will lose money."

"If, when you see the new moon first, you hold a purse over the left shoulder, you will receive a gift of money."

Now I know the value of these signs, for in times past I have tried them. But now I have put away such childish things.

I ask this question: Is there some magic relation between money and the gift of God? We do read in the early history of one who thought he could purchase the gift of God with the offering of money. He was a unique character, typical of many since his day. He had the power of deception, so that the people thought he was some great one; and hecause of his deeds he was held to be in direct touch with God.

When this man saw the true deeds of the apostles, he desired the gift, and thought it could be purchased with money. He had discovered the difference between the real works of the apostles, and the imaginative, deceptive works of his own.

The present age is full of many notions, and the notion that the gift of God can be purchased with money has considerable hold upon the minds of many.

Faith cures, prayer cures, and varied other cures, without any thought of the law of cause and effect, are accepted by many, but—the money to bring the cures must he paid. People will listen to the puerile statement, "There is no sickness," then go and pay their money to be cured of something that does not exist. Then others are anxious to talk with the dead, and if they will pay the price, they hold the conversation, and go away satisfied that the millennium is at hand. Truly the old adage, "A fool and his money are soon parted," holds good to-day.

"We are on the eve of a great revival." What is the sign? "The people are turning their attention to the church and paying their money as never before, and the revival is on." There must be some magic in the gift of money. But its greatest magic is seen in the markets where we go to buy the necessaries of life. It is magical in its deceptive powers.

I read in the papers, "Our church has made great increase in the contributions for the support of the pastor." I am glad to hear it, for it is certainly needed everywhere. But what relation does this hold to a revival? The increase in support was a necessity. But is it true as it is stated? Let us look at the facts in the case.

The real truth is, there has been an increase in the volume of money, but no increase of the support in many cases. It looks good on paper, and sounds good to the preacher, that his church is paying three thousand dollars, and it makes him feel good, till he goes down town to buy what he needs for the family, and the magic of money is seen. He went to town with a full pocketbook, and came home with a handful of goods. Where has it gone? The figures on paper and the cash over the counter do not halance. He has received no increase of support at last.

If a church has tripled its contribution to the support of the ministry since 1912, it has held its own, hut has not advanced in support. The preacher under these conditions must remember, he "has looked at the new moon through the brush, or he has milked his cow on the ground, and she has dried up."

I am not placing much confidence in this sign of the higger flow of money. There is a law of cause, and the effect is seen. It does not necessarily mean that the revival is on. There is a sign that has not yet appeared.

The Home Circle

GOOD MANNERS.

One day a plain, black doggie
Had strayed in some one's yard,
And then, alas! the gate had shut—
And he was safely barred.

A neighbor saw his troubie
And let him out of jail—
Do you suppose the dog ran off
With careless wave of tail?

He went directly to his friend
With thanks in his brown eyes,
And laid his nose against her hand
With grateful little sighs.

Then, having thanked her prettily,
He trotted on his way;
He'd done his best to be polite.
Were you polite to-day?

A WAYSIDE FLOWER.

By Mrs. George S. Brown.

Did you know little Lillian Aniau? Well, of course not; that is, unless you attended the Mary Werlein Mission over on Tchoupitoulas Street, for Lillian was a modest little violet hidden under the leaves. She was just a crippled little hunchback; but, somehow, one always forgot her deformity, for she seemed never to think of it herself. If her little back ached, she did not say so, and if it was a trial not to be able to hop and skip and jump like other children, she made no mention of it. Rather one thought of sunshine and flowers in her presence, because she was so full of sunshine. In her heart Lillian had what all of God's children do not possess—a love so strong for Him that her only desire was to serve, and this she did, first of all, in her home. It was a shabby little place, not boasting of anything but the plainest furniture, and without any ornamentation; but when the tired mother came home at night from the mill, it was clean and bright and cheerful. The little children were neat and tidy because Lillian had made them so, and though she had to crawl around to do it, the floors were scrubbed and the meals were ready. And not only that, but Lillian had found time to amuse and interest the little brothers and sisters and for many weeks she worked painstakingly on a playhouse for them, building it from old cigar boxes and using only a toy hammer, saw and hatchet. It was really a wonderful little house, with stairs and windows and doors and tiny little furniture, with bed and wind coverings made of scraps. It was placed in a show window down-town and many thought that if Lillian only had the chance she might become an architect or wood carver; but the chance did not come and cheerfully Lillian turned to something else. She had a natural gift for music, and one day we found her at the Mission playing the hymns by ear. It was her ambition to learn to play so she could be pianist at the Mission which she so dearly loved, having been led there by Mrs. Lily Meekins, "the Angel of Tchoupitoulas Street," as she was sometimes called. We so hoped that some philanthropist would see the need and give Lillian a piano and have her taught music, but no one seemed to find the little violet hidden down under the leaves; and again she cheerfully laid aside this ambition. It did not sour her or make her sad. Instead, she brightly turned to sewing, and with her nimble fingers made many garments for the children to wear. She was given a hand machine and made use of it for years, but after awhile she had so many orders for dresses and shirts that she made sufficient money to buy a good sewing machine. When she told us we asked, "How do you run it?" knowing she could not use her foot. With sparkling eyes she looked at us and said, "I have an invention. I put a stick on the pedal and bring it up through the place where the band goes in the machine and then work that with one hand and my sewing with the other; but some day I am going to get a motor and then I can whiz off the work."

A plea was made for the motor by The King's Daughters and interested readers responded readily until more than the necessary sum was realized. Lillian knew nothing of it, but went about her daily tasks, radiating sunshine and proving a blessing at home, at the Mission, and throughout the neighborhood where she lived. At last the motor was installed and radiantly she set to work; but only for a day, for there came by that little attic room a strange guest. He saw the crooked little back, the twisted feet, the tired body, the willing hands that in a few short years had labored so faithfully, the great big heart overflowing with love for her Savior, and He said, "It is enough, my child. The few short years you have lived have been filled with noble deeds and the Master has need of you."

The father and mother, the children, the neighbors and the workers at the Mission used to say, as they watched Lillian at work:

"Wonder how she can do it;
Mothering all with her care;
Brave in her daily struggle
And guarding us from despair;
Smiling amid the shadows,
Singing amid the dearth,
Brightening her little corner
With love and a gentle mirth.

Wonder how she can do it!
Well, there's a secret sure,
And maybe the answer is, trusting,
And keeping her own heart pure,
And never a selfish moment,
And always a thought of those
Who find in her spirit of patience
The life of the song and rose."

Ah, yes, that was it—no thought of self—living for others always. The loved ones stand stricken, blinded with tears, their hearts crying out for the life and light of the home, but little Lillian has gone to live with God. Strong is her back, straight are her limbs, we think we see her as she stands by the side of Mrs. Lily Meekins, who showed her the way, singing the praises of the Lamb that was slain.

HELPING TO PULL.

It was cold weather, and the street had become coated with ice. This made it very hard pulling for the horses, especially up the hill near where Robbie lived.

"Papa," said Robbie, when his father came home that evening, "I helped a horse pull a load of coal up the hill to-day."

"How did you do that?" inquired his father.

"Why, it was just this way," answered Robbie. "The hill was covered with ice, and the horse was slipping all around; but I went and got some ashes and sprinkled them under the horse's feet, and all the way to the top of the hill. The driver thanked me, too, and said that I had helped to pull that load up the hill."

"Well, I think you did, myself," was the reply; "and I'm very glad my little boy is ready to help in a case like that. Keep that up as long as you live, Robbie; for it's a noble thing to help poor dumb animals."—Apples of Gold.

A BOY AND THE BOOK.

I was a farmer boy and knew so little that it was lovely, and I never enjoyed anything more than the little I knew, because every day I learned a lot more, and at the end of the day I did not know much, but a little more than in the morning. So every day in the year was a kingdom of prosperity in the kingdom of my knowledge. I was a farmer boy, and I kept the New Testament in my back trousers pocket. And when the horses would stop to consider at the end of the row—horses are great on ruminating and considering—but when they would stop to consider at the end of the row, I would take the Book of God out, and I would read a little Scripture, and then I would parse it, for I had no grammar. Yes, I would parse a little Scripture and learn my grammar. What happened to me was this: I did not understand the things very much. I did not have to be rectified in my theology. When I got to be theological and became a D.D. and an LL.D. I did not have to change it very much, but I know that it was beautiful, and the farmer lad, knowing nothing but the west and south wind in his face and the blowing to and fro of the tasseling corn and the growing of the corn and reading of God's book of out-of-doors, that is how he became matriculated to literature and history and nature and astronomy and the wide world and the world to come—just because he had the Bible.—Bishop Quayle.

Where you are working honorably, the word "prosaic" ought to be banished from your vocabulary. It is the way, and you are the wayfarer. It is a way of holiness; you are being trained for unspeakable things in the far future.—Selected.

WHAT HATH GOD WROUGHT!—A THREE-MINUTE TALK.

The subject of this talk is not a question, but an exclamation. As we come to realize the actual results of the Centenary Movement in our church and in the religious life of the world, the exclamation above spontaneously rises to our lips. It is a marvelous thing that He has done in these wonderful days.

The church has come to a new conception of its responsibility and of its power. Its faith has been increased to the point where difficulties are only incentives to greater activity. Instead of lamenting the shortcomings of the past, it has set itself determinedly to fulfill its high mission. At home and abroad its work has been strengthened and enlarged, and a new era—a splendid era of progress—has been entered. We can but rejoice as we behold what has been accomplished. Look at these facts:

The League of Intercession has enrolled 250,000 members; 100,000 tithers have accepted the principles of Christian stewardship in their financial support of the enterprises of the church; the mission charges of our Conferences have received $400,000 through their Mission Boards; relief and missionary work in Europe have received appropriations amounting to $750,000; ten colporteurs have been sent to the Holy Land; mission work has been opened in Belgium; various foreign mission fields have been strengthened by the addition of 45 missionaries; city missions have been helped to the extent of $1,500,000; new missionary enterprises have been launched in Japan, Korea, China, Brazil, Mexico, Cuba, Africa; a great revival movement has swept over the church at home and abroad. These are only a few of the things that have been accomplished that can be expressed in figures—other results no man can tabulate.

Much has been done—much more will be done if we are faithful to our trust and to the pledges we have made. We must not "rest upon our oars," but go forward to still greater things. God has blessed our labors as we bave tried to do His will. He will continue to bless us as we continue our work for Him.

BRINGING UP THE COURSE OF STUDY.

We sincerely trust that every undergraduate in our three Conferences is diligently at work on the prescribed course of study. Once in awhile a young preacher may have a valid excuse for doing the thing that is a prerequisite to his receiving the full commendation of the church whose obligations he has voluntarily assumed, but it cannot often be so. To study the books designated is the duty, and one of the first duties, of every man who is admitted on trial into an Annual Conference. There are other things he has to do, of course, and the church expects him to be faithful in all his work. We know something of the calls that come to the pastor in these days, be he young or old, and we know how difficult it is to compress the performance of all these things into one's waking hours. But study is not one of the things to be left out. If time cannot be found to study, time for other work will not be most profitably spent. Study is an investment, not a useless expenditure of energy, and he who fails to engage in it will find himself poorer and poorer as the years go by.

Let it not be forgotten that the law of the church now requires that the course of study be taken through the Correspondence School. The Conference year is more than a third gone and the busy season of revival work is at hand. There is still time to complete the course satisfactorily, but that time will have to be diligently employed. The young preacher who has already finished much of the prescribed work is to be congratulated upon his faithfulness and determination.

DEATH OF BISHOP KEY.

Bishop Joseph Staunton Key passed to his reward on Tuesday, April 6, from his home at Sherman, Texas, where he had lived since 1889. We have no information concerning his death except the press dispatch which announced the sad event. Bishop Key was born in LaGrange, Ga., July 18, 1829, being, therefore, at the time of his death in the ninety-first year of his age. He was elected bishop in 1886. Although he never sought to be looked upon as one of the outstanding leaders of our Methodism, his charm of manner and his saintly life made him one of the most greatly beloved of our chief pastors, and many a heart will be made sad by the news that he is no more. Quietly and calmly he passed away, borne down by the weight of increasing years. His memory will live in the church to which he gave all the years of his life.

A VALUABLE VOLUME.

We are under obligations to the distinguished author, Bishop H. C. Morrison, for a copy of his volume of sermons, "The Simple Gospel," recently issued from the press of the Pentecostal Publishing Company, Louisville, Ky. Those who have heard Bishop Morrison preach are aware of his power in the pulpit. In addition to his charm of manner and his unusual oratorical gifts, he has the power of lucid utterance and compelling persuasiveness that bring the truth home to the hearer and turn his heart to the ways of life. Thousands of men and women have been helped to a better life by sitting under his ministry.

It is not always, however, that the printed discourse has the same charm and power as the spoken message. The impassioned words that fell from the lips of the speaker too often seem cold and lifeless when reduced to writing; not so with this volume; the messages—fifty of them—are brief, simple, stimulating, powerful. As one reads, one thinks, and the heart is stirred to desire and to seek for better things. It is a good book to read.

We should like to commend this volume especially to our young preachers. In addition to the stimulus it will give to their own spiritual life, it will be tremendously suggestive of themes for their own thinking and preaching, and it will furnish a model for the development of orderly, well-arranged sermons. Too much of our preaching is homiletically faulty. Form is not everything, but it is something. Bishop Morrison knows how to make a sermon as well as how to preach one. His method is worth studying.

We believe we are doing our readers a real favor in calling their attention to this volume. We do not recall its price, but it is moderate. It may be had of the publishers at the address given above.

INEVITABLE.

Smith and Lamar, the publishers of the Nashville Christian Advocate, have announced that on and after May 1, 1920, the price of the general organ will be $2.50, instead of $2, as heretofore. The increased price is due to the fact that the cost of labor and of all material used in the manufacture of the paper has increased enormously in recent months.

We do not wonder that our Publishing Agents have found it necessary to take such action—it was inevitable if a large net loss was to be avoided. It takes only a moment's reflection to show that the subscription price of many of our church periodicals is altogether out of keeping with the present level of prices generally.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. John W. Ramsey will begin a ten-days' meeting at State Line, Miss., on April 21, assisted by Rev. T. J. Norsworthy.

We thank Rev. R. I. Collins, of Shannon, Miss., for an invitation to visit his splendid little city during the session of the district conference this year.

Mr. G. E. Allen, a member of the Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., honored the Advocate office with a call while in the city on Tuesday of last week.

Rev. A. J. Bonnette, of Cotton Valley, La., writes that plans are being perfected to build a $6000 church at Spring Hill, one of his appointments, in the near future.

Rev. T. L. Oakes, of Saliis, Miss., writes us the good news that his beloved wife, after undergoing a severe operation about a year ago, has fully regained her health.

A telegram from Rev. C. A. Battle, received just before going to press, announces that the Easter offering of the church at Mansfield, La., for the Orphanage was $1250.

The Sunday school at Oakdale, La., where Rev. J. Lambuth Evans is pastor, raised $412 for the orphanage on Easter Sunday. The Men's Bible Class contributed $200 of this amount.

Rev. T. B. Winstead, of Carthage, Miss., has been greatly handicapped in his work by bad weather and the "flu," but conditions are improving, and the outlook for a good year is promising.

The young people of Rose Hill, Miss., gave a fine Easter program at the evening service on Easter Sunday, which was greatly enjoyed by a large congregation. Rev. M. R. Jones is the pastor.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. C. P. Jones, the wife of our faithful pastor at Fayette, Miss., is at home and rapidly recuperating after a serious operation at the Baptist Hospital, Jackson, Miss., recently.

Rev. H. E. Carter, of Iuka, Miss., writes that the reports at his second quarterly conference, held recently, were encouraging. His presiding elder, Rev. W. W. Mitchell, preached two very helpful sermons.

Rev. W. W. Moore, of Bogue Chitto, Miss., brightened the editor's sanctum while passing through the city last week on his way to the Mississippi State Sunday School Convention at Gulfport, Miss.

Rev. R. E. Rutledge, the pastor, requests us to announce that Bishop Jno. C. Kilgo will dedicate the church at Lake, Miss., at 11 o'clock, a. m., May 11. All former pastors are cordially invited to be present.

We do not know of a paper that has a finer list of long-time readers than has the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Mrs. J. T. Reynolds, of Wyatt, La., has been reading it regularly for more than fifty years.

Bishop Matthew Simpson Hughes, one of the most distinguished chief pastors of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died of pneumonia, at Cleveland, Ohio, on Easter Sunday. He was a brother of Bishop Edwin H. Hughes.

We are glad to learn that Rev. B. E. Meigs, our pastor at Picayune, Miss., is rapidly improving in health. His work is making good headway. The services are well attended, and 66 members have been received since Conference.

The prayer meeting attendance at Franklin, La., last week was 62. The Easter offering for the orphanage was $158.15—a record-breaker for that church, according to our information. Rev. Jno. F. Foster is the cultured and scholarly pastor.

Rev. E. M. Shaw, of Houston, Miss., reports fine services on Easter Sunday. The children and young people of the church, under the direction of Mrs. W. L. Hill, had charge of the evening service, which was both interesting and profitable.

Rev. D. M. Floyd, of Waterford, Miss., is planning to build two churches on his charge, which he hopes to have completed by summer. He writes that he serves a fine people who are interested in their pastor and the work of the church.

Rev. C. A. Battle has recently closed a splendid meeting at Mansfield, La., where he is the efficient and popular pastor. Rev. J. B. Grambling, the assistant pastor of Noel Memorial Church, Shreveport, led the singing, a form of service in which he is eminently successful.

Bishop C. B. Cottrell, of the C. M. E. Church, will be in New Orleans next Sunday in the interest of the work of his church in this city. He will preach at Felicity Methodist Church at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, and at the Algiers Methodist Church at the evening hour.

Easter Sunday was a great day at Okolona, Miss. The Ivanhoe Commandery, No. 10, Knights Templar, joined in the morning services, and a beautiful celebration "in song and story" was given by the choir in the evening, Rev. J. H. Brooks, the pastor, speaking at both services.

Rev. Geo. A. Baker, North Mississippi Conference evangelist, recently closed a two-weeks' revival meeting at Pepper Memorial Church, Memphis, Tenn., of which Rev. Otis G. Andrews is pastor. The church was greatly revived, several family altars were established, and about thirty persons gave their names for church membership.

A note from Rev. A. H. Williams, of Anniston, Ala., informs us that the meeting conducted by Rev. Bob Jones in that city was a great success. Thousands of people attended the services, and several hundred committed themselves to the Christian life. The Oxanna Methodist Church, of which Brother Williams is pastor, received several members as a result of the meeting.

Mrs. R. D. Norsworthy, widow of the late Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, for fifty years a member of the Mississippi Conference, is now making her home in Meridian, Miss. She is another long-time friend of the Advocate whose kindly greetings and good wishes we greatly appreciate. She began reading the paper in childhood, and she still finds pleasure in its weekly visits.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, the presiding elder of the New Orleans District, has tabulated the results of the evangelistic campaign which closed on Easter Sunday. While most of the additions to the membership were secured during the two weeks of revival effort, the figures include all additions since Conference. The total is 420, of which 149 are on profession of faith, and 171 by certificate.

Dr. W. S. Shipley, of Nashville, was the speaker at the Centenary "Making Good" meeting in New Orleans last week. We greatly regretted that absence from the city prevented our meeting him when he called at the Advocate office. In company with Mr. Stephen S. Thomas, the Centenary Secretary for Louisiana, Dr. Shipley is making a tour of the State in the interest of the Centenary work.

The Clarksdale Daily Register of April 2 carried a full-page advertisement of the services to be held in all the churches of the city on Easter Sunday, with a beautiful exposition of the Easter message. Our own church, of which Rev. E. Nash Broyles is pastor, was given a prominent display along with the others. The advertisement was "offered as a humble Easter contribution to the churches of Clarksdale" by a prominent business firm.

Rev. C. H. Ellis, our pastor at Camden, Miss., writes that Saturday, April 3, was set apart to secure $2000 to rebuild the Methodist church which was destroyed by fire in 1909. The campaign was conducted by Mr. W. A. Maxwell and Prof. P. W. Berry, and it was successful beyond expectation, more than the amount being secured. It is confidently expected that at least an additional $1000 will be secured—a munificent offering by the local church and community.

Rev. A. A. Bernard reports from Longville, La., that the reports at the second quarterly conference, recently held, show an encouraging outlook for the year. Several members have been received since Conference. A Woman's Missionary Society has been organized at Elizabeth, with a membership of more than thirty. Under the leadership of the secretary, Mrs. A. J. Osterlond, an effort will be made to put the Advocate into every Methodist home in the community. Fine!

We learn from a note from Rev. Harry W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, that an active evangelistic campaign is being carried on in that district. Rev. B. H. Sheppard has just closed a meeting at Merryville, resulting in 16 additions to the church. Rev. H. T. Young recently assisted Rev. W. F. Hunter in a meeting at Woodworth, and Rev. D. B. Boddie spent two weeks with Rev. H. B. Vandenburg in revival services. Brother May himself is actively engaged in the work of the district.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, president of Whitworth College, is planning to leave for Europe some time in July, to be gone at least three months. During his absence the college will be under the management of Miss Janie Howard Drake and Miss Lois Wadsworth Cooper. It will be in safe keeping in the hands of these accomplished ladies. The contract for the new dormitory and the gymnasium and swimming pool will be let this week. The "Y" Hut is already in course of construction. In spite of increased facilities, President Cooper is of the opinion that all rooms for the next session will be engaged by July 15.

Rev. J. A. Moore, presiding elder of the Newton District, Mississippi Conference, requests us to call attention to the fact that the date of the Sunday school institute for that district has been changed from May 25 to June 15, and the date of the district conference has been changed from May 26 to June 16. Both these gatherings will be held at Walnut Grove.

Rev. R. T. Pickett, of Collins, Miss., recently held a good meeting at Williamsburg, Miss., being assisted by Rev. J. V. Bennett, one of the Mississippi Conference evangelists. In spite of unfavorable weather, the people attended the meeting in large numbers, and much good was accomplished. There were six additions to the membership of the church. The old parsonage for this charge has been sold and a more convenient one bought. This is Brother Pickett's fourth year in this appointment.

It is with very great sorrow that we record the death of Mrs. W. T. Holland, wife of Brother W. T. Holland, the editor of the St. Helena Echo, at Greensburg, La., on Easter Sunday. The end came suddenly while she was engaged in an Easter egg hunt with the children of the community. Brother Holland is one of the best-known newspaper men in the State, and his wife had attended with him for many years the meetings of the State Press Association. Our sincere sympathy is extended to him and his family in their bereavement. We are sure many prayers will ascend in their behalf in this dark hour.

Rev. W. B. Hogg, the pastor of Winfield Memorial Church, Little Rock, Ark., is assisting Rev. Jno. W. Robertson in a ten-days' meeting at Rosedale, Miss. Brother Hogg has made a remarkable record at Winfield Memorial. Two hundred and fifty-six applied for membership in that church on Easter Sunday, 103 on profession of faith. There have been 361 additions since Conference. Five young people of this congregation have accepted the call to life service this year, two of them for the ministry, and three for reconstruction work in Belgium. Brother Hogg was formerly a member of the Mississippi Conference.

The many friends in Louisiana of Rev. W. H. Coleman, formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, will be interested to know that the great church in Memphis, Tenn., of which he is now pastor—St. John's—is experiencing a remarkable period of growth. It has a growing membership that is loyal to all the interests of Methodism. In the approaching "drive" for $750,000 for the Methodist Hospital—$400,000 of which is expected to be raised in Memphis—it is estimated that St. John's will contribute in the neighborhood of $150,000. It has recently been announced that Brother Coleman will preach the Commencement sermon for the Memphis Conference Woman's College, at Jackson, Tenn., on May 16.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE PORT GIBSON DISTRICT.

Dear Brethren: It is important that the delegates to the District Conference, to be held in Vicksburg, beginning May 5, at 2:30 o'clock p.m., be elected and their names sent to me in time to make up the official roll before the opening day of the Conference. A list of the delegates should be sent to Rev. N. B. Harmon, Vicksburg, Miss., in order that entertainment may be provided.

Pastors will please urge their delegates, lay leaders, Sunday school workers and all local preachers to attend the Conference and Sunday School Institute.

Let the local preachers be reminded that the Discipline requires of them a written report to the Conference.

This is a time when all services of our church, conferences, etc., should be spiritual and evangelistic. Then let us pray for an outpouring of God's Spirit upon our District Conference, that all who attend may be revived, and that the spirit of evangelism may fire our hearts with a zeal for the salvation of men and women from sin.

In these days of stress, not to say strife, there are many things to hinder and almost block the operation of God's Spirit among his children. God is the need of this hour in the Port Gibson District. Let's tarry in the secret place till he comes to the altar of every heart and every church in our district.

JAMES RALEY CHADICK was born at Coden, Ala., July 7, 1852, and died at his home in Meridian, Miss., March 5, 1920. He moved to Meridian thirty-three years before his death, and lived in and about Meridian the remaining part of his days. He was married to Miss Catherine Steward in 1885. To this union were born six children, Mrs. Ila Thompson, Mrs. Florence Taylor, W. E. Chadick, Ira Chadick, Miss Lela and Miss Lena Chadick. The good wife and five of the children still live to mourn the loss of a good and affectionate husband and father. He was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, but united with the Methodist Church some years before his death. He lived a good, true, consecrated life. We miss him very much, but the bereaved wife and children will miss him most. In this sad experience it is very comforting to know that he walked humbly before the Lord in life, and died in the faith of a Christian.

Meridian, Miss.

WILLIAM IRVIN CROOK, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Crook, of Lumberton, Miss., was born May 24, 1915, and departed this life, June 30, 1919, after twelve days of suffering. All was done for him that skilled physicians and nurses could do, but all in vain. God saw fit to take him to live with Him and His angels. Will Irvin was a bright, beautiful child, possessing such a lovely disposition that he was the joy of the home and everybody's pet. It was indeed hard to give him up, but we have to be submissive to God's will, knowing that He doeth all things well. We weep not as those who have no hope. We know where to find him and we will meet him in the sweet bye and bye, if we live the life of the righteous. One by one we will soon be gathered on the other shore, there to meet and part no more.

HIS LOVING AUNT.

REBECCA ELEANOR EMERY was born in Connorsville, Indiana, July 8, 1827, and died in Columbia, Mississippi, March 6, 1920, aged ninety-three years and two months. In 1850 she was happily united in marriage to Mr. C. F. Emery, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and they made their home in Yazoo City, Miss., until his death in 1892. At the beginning of the Civil War, Mr. Emery responded to the first call for volunteers at Yazoo City and entered the service of the Confederacy as corporal. He was severely wounded at the battle of Shiloh, but served until he was mustered out at the close of the war in 1865. He was promoted from time to time for conspicuous bravery, and retired as captain of cavalry in the regiment of General Wirt Adams. Having served faithfully his God and his country, he died at the age of seventy-one years, an elder in the Presbyterian Church in Yazoo City. In early youth the subject of this sketch gave her heart to Christ and joined the Baptist Church; later she united with the Presbyterian Church, in which communion she lived a consecrated Christian life. For several months she suffered greatly from the infirmities of old age. On the night of March 6, after the Scriptures had been read to her, for which she expressed her comfort, she said that she wished she might die. Within an hour her wish was gratified, after the physician had eased her suffering. This couple had no children of their own, but her youngest sister dying soon after the birth of her babe, they legally adopted this child and reared and educated him as tenderly and lovingly as if he had been their own. After the death of her husband she made her home with the son of her adoption, who, with his devoted companion, as best they could, have ministered to her in her declining years. The funeral services were conducted in the Methodist Church by the pastors of the local Presbyterian and Baptist churches, assisted by Rev. R. H. Barr, of the Mississippi Conference, and a large number of friends followed her remains to the cemetery in Columbia. "I heard a voice from heaven saying, Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors."

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved Sunday school worker, Brother J. M. Butler; and whereas, we feel that in the death of this noble character the Alabama Sunday school and church have sustained an irreparable loss; therefore be it resolved:

1. That we cherish the memory of Brother J. M. Butler, whose memory will ever be a benediction.
2. That we desire to express to the bereaved wife and son, loved ones and friends, who, with tearful eyes and aching hearts, yearn

"For the touch of the vanished hand,
And the sound of the voice that is still,"

our deepest sympathy, and commend them to the care of the loving Father who has promised, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

3. That in his death the community and our work have lost a faithful Christian character.
4. That the example of this consecrated member, true friend and unselfish helper may prove a guide and a daily inspiration to his loved ones and members of our church.
5. Be it further resolved that a copy of these resolutions be given the family, a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, a copy be put on our church record, and that it be published in our home paper.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you —Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twings, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

WHAT MAKES A MAN.

Man is not fully man apart from God. It is the sense of God in the personal life that makes any man an effective man at all. Let him feel that he is in league with Jehovah, working out his work on earth, fighting under his leadership, warring against his foes, moving with and advancing the purpose of the Eternal, and he is invincible. He wins though he falls, for his battles are the battles of God, who never fails; and he rises to triumph, even though he dies; but let him lose that, and all is lost. The sense of his guilty departure from God haunts him, fills him with timidity, and makes him the prey of the first captors that come his way. He is no longer master of himself; for the girdle that binds up the man's powers into unity is the conviction that he is a God-called, God-sent, and God-accepted spirit, a man with a divine mission to his fellows, with a truth he must utter, a work he must do, a cause he must make victorious, a goal he must reach; but that gone, that girdle cut, he is limp and helpless. Languor is in his heart, weakness is in his word, weariness is on his brow. He cannot help anybody.—J. Clifford.

ALL FAGGED-OUT

When it looks dark to any weak or ailing woman, if she asks the advice of her neighbor, ten chances to one that good neighbor will tell her that she was dragged down by the pains and ailments of her sex, and was completely cured by a prescription which Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y., discovered and made its ingredients known to the public many years ago, namely, "Favorite Prescription." When a woman complains of backache, dizziness or pain—when everything looks black before her eyes—a dragging feeling or bearing-down with nervousness she should turn to this "temperance," herbal tonic, known as

Favorite Prescription

This is what many women write Dr. Pierce at the Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y.:

Baton Rouge, La.—"It is a pleasure to me to recommend Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. In my younger years I had considerable inward trouble, irregularity and pains. I don't believe I would have reached my present age had it not been for the 'Prescription.' As it is, I have lived twenty years of good health without the slightest form of inward trouble. For women at various stages in life, 'Favorite Prescription' is unequalled as a tonic, but I especially recommend it for women at middle life."—MRS. MARION SEAMAN, 242 13th St.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Sardis has reached Third Rank Standard; so has Shelby.

Dundee enrolled five teachers with the Teacher-training Department. Shelby has a class of seven enrolled to take the course.

Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, Shelby, Miss., has consented to become Conference Superintendent of Young People-Adult Department.

Have you received your Sunday School Day programs? You may have failed to order them. There is every reason to expect a general observance of the day this year. We must have at least 60 per cent of the churches that will give the children this opportunity of learning and serving.

Do you know, many people are saved after they become 25 years of age? How many are saved after 40? How long will it take us to learn that people ought never to be lost?

Would you like to have a district institute held in your charge this summer? Would you not be glad to have a standard teacher-training school in your charge? How about holding a Federation of Wesley Bible Classes? These institutions are needed, but we must desire them enough to ask for them.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

The fourth Sunday in March was spent at Silver City. Brother King is a hard worker. The rain, the high water and the "flu" have tended to disorganize the work and prevented getting together more than ever before, but in spite of everything there are many signs of life. May God continue to bless the charge and its workers.

The first few days of April were spent at Camden, Miss. Brother Ellis starts the new year well. Many difficulties have surrounded the work, and there are still difficulties to be overcome. Brother Ellis put on a drive Saturday for $2,000 for a new church building. The rain eliminated the drive, but the workers went out Sunday and the pledges amount to $2100, with more to follow. This was a great victory and will be a great help to the progress of the church at Camden. If any one would like to nelp in a worthy cause, certainly this is one. We had several professions of faith Sunday night, and altogether it was a most enjoyable visit.

Don't forget about the District Institutes. The Newton District Institute has been changed from May 25 to June 15. Take due notice thereof.

It is gratifying to know that Miss Kennedy continues to improve. On account of her illness the meeting of elementary superintendents has had to be postponed from April 7-8 to April 27-28.

Our Elementary Conference Superintendent, Mrs. Sue Stuart Brame, has been suffering from an attack of influenza for the past two weeks, but is very much improved, and hopes to be back at the office in a short while.

Correspondence Course.

The Mississippi Conference Sunday School Board desires to help in every way possible, and wishes to co-operate with training workers for the church, and is prepared to give as a correspondence course The Training Course for Leadership of Church Workers.

This will entail some extra expense and much extra labor, but we hope to be helpful to those who care to avail themselves of this service.

A fee of $1 will be charged for postage and incidentals. This fee will be the same for each course. For information write us.

In finishing a course, you will receive credit for the work done by the Department of Teacher Training of the church.

Don't forget the Elementary Conference at Jackson, May 4-5.

Pray for the work and the workers.

JNO. C. CHAMBERS,

BROOKHAVEN DISTRIT SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE.

The Sunday School Institute of the Brookhaven District will be held at Summit, Miss., April 28 and 29, 1920. All the Sunday school workers of the district are urgently requested to attend, as matters of vital importance to the work will be discussed.

FIRST CHURCH, GREENVILLE, MISS.

The evangelistic campaign has certainly proven a valuable thing with us. We made only a partial survey, though it was pretty thoroughly done within the Sunday school membership. This campaign was preceded by a membership campaign for the Sunday school, which netted 150 new pupils. At Easter our attendance and our interest reached high-tide. We had the greatest attendance within the memory of our oldest members, and at the 11 o'clock hour the church was packed. The pastor received 39 into the church that morning, 23 of them being on profession; 72 have been received since Conference.

One remarkable thing about our ingathering on Easter was that of the 23 who joined the church on profession of faith, all came from the Sunday school membership, with one exception. The Sunday school people ought to come into the church. We are all very happy because of the good results from the campaign.

Texas Lady Storekeeper, Who Carries Black-Draught In Stock, Has Found It "Best Liver Medicine" Obtainable.

Barker, Texas.—Relating her experience with Thedford's Black-Draught, Mrs. A. L. Fromme, of this place, says: "I had for some time used * * * and other liver medicines, which would nauseate and make me feel bad. We have a store, and our customers called for Black-Draught so often I decided it must be good, so thought I would try it myself.

"I began its use and found it just fitted my case. It neither griped nor nauseated me, was an easy laxative and not hard to take.

"I had had headaches a great deal, no doubt from torpid liver. The Black-Draught would cure them. The best way I find to take Black-Draught is to take one or two good sized doses until the liver begins to act, then taper the doses to just a pinch after meals.

"It will insure good digestion, do away with the gas or bad taste in the mouth, and is without doubt the best liver mericine in the market. I have found it so. I can recommend it to my friends, for I believe it will do them good."

You Will Write a Letter Like This

I wish I knew which one of the thousands of letters I receive would have the most weight with you, my friend. I can't quote all of them here, but I am going to ask you to read these carefully and then give me a chance to renew your health and make you write me one very much like them:

Barnard St., Savannah, Ga.
Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.

Dear Sir: I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft-boiled eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantity as possible for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

C. A. CROSBY, M.D.

These are not selected cases, nor are the results unusual. I receive thousands like them from physicians, ministers, lawyers, merchants, farmers, manufacturers and every conceivable profession. I want the satisfaction of receiving such a letter from you. No matter what your complaint may be, dyspepsia, indigestion, nervous headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, or any curable ailment that has not responded to drugs. I invite you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If the water fails to benefit you simply say so, return the empty demijohns, and I will promptly and willingly refund your money—every cent. Sign below:

Shivar Spring,
Box 17 C, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:—I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and, if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

NOTE.—"I have had the pleasure of serving the little church at Shivar Spring as Pastor for years, and am therefore well acquainted with Mr. Shivar and his associates, whom I gladly commend as an honorable business man and worthy of the confidence of the public. I have personally derived great benefit from the use of the Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA Pittman.

A GREAT DAY AT MANSFIELD, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We are happy to report that the Mansfield church has had a good series of services during the past week with the pastor, Brother Battle, doing the preaching and Mr. Jas. Grambling leading the music. Thirty-one have been received into the church—seventeen young people and adults, and fourteen children.

During the quarter fifty have been received; and since Conference a total of eighty-two.

Yesterday was a great day in our church. The Sunday school was quite large, though not as large as on some other occasions; but we had a record-breaking contribution to the Orphanage. The amount reported was $968.41, with a probable addition of enough to make the amount above $1000, while to this will go the contribution at the preaching hour, and the grand total may reach $1,200.

The congregation at 11 o'clock filled the house, and at the close the communion was administered to more people by far than at any other occasion in the history of the congregation.

At night the house was crowded to hear the rendition of the cantata, Victory Divine. Other churches of the city called in services, and thus permitted their members to come and enjoy this beautifuliy rendered service in song; and we can truthfully say we have never seen a more reverent spirit at an Easter service.

R. E. BOBBITT.

EASTER AT MINDEN, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: Just a word about our Easter services at the First Methodist Church of Minden. The attendance at Sunday school was good. The offering for the Orphanage maintenance amounted to $1,122.50. At the 11 o'clock church service, the ushers had to bring in seats for every available space, and the auditorium was filled to its utmost capacity. The music was splendid. Thirty-one members joined the church.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE NOTES.

Shreveport District Meeting, Woman's Missionary Society.

The Shreveport District Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society will be held at Mooringsport, Louisiana, on April 22. This date will fall on Thursday, and will be the second day of the regular District Conference.

The "Woman's Day" program will begin at 9:30 a.m. and close about 4:30 p.m.

The District Secretary hopes to have delegates present from each auxiliary in the District, and begs that women will come from the charges that have no active society. Some of those who will be present and take part in the well planned program will be: Mrs. Key, Conference Superintendent of Young People; Mrs. Elmer Drew, Superintendent of Junior Work; Mrs. Finch, of Shreveport, will speak on Mission Study, and Mrs. George Sexton on Social Service. These meetings are held to give information and inspiration to the workers: you can not afford to miss the opportunity without losing something for yourself and to your work. MRS. WOOLSWIRTH,
District Secretary.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE,

Annual Conference Held at Jackson.

What was thought to be one of the most pleasant and, at the same time, profitable meetings of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference was held in the Galloway Memorial Church at Jackson, March 2-5.

The President presided with an enthusiasm for the work that encouraged all. Her message to the Conference was full of praise to God for the success of the past year, and for the many blessings that have come to us as individuals and as a body of workers in His name.

Mrs. McCleskey, the wide-awake Corresponding Secretary, gave a good report of the work, showing an increase along most lines. Her message was full of large plans for 1920.

The Workers' Conference, conducted by Mrs. Z. D. Clark, Superintendent of Young People's Work, was held Tuesday afternoon, the opening session of the Conference. This proved a profitable hour to those who had labored for the cause and were still anxious that the work go forward.

At night, Rev. J. M. Morse, presiding elder of the Jackson District, conducted the devotional exercises. He was followed by Dr. W. B. Beauchamp, who addressed the Conference on the Centenary. Dr. Beauchamp spoke again Wednesday morning. Those who heard him were glad to get this message.

Mr. W. D. Hawkins, the newly-elected Mississippi Conference Secretary, also presented his work, pledging his support to the Woman's Missionary Society, and asking the co-operation of the organization in the new work he is trying to do.

Reports from the District Secretaries were read, after which a few delegates from each district were heard regarding the work of last year and their plans for this year.

Miss Ella Wayne Ormond had the honor of organizing the largest number of new societies last year. She organized nine after our Conference was held in March.

The Junior Work has been well cared for by Mrs. Bradley, Superintendent of that department. No mother could have heard her appeal to them in behalf of the young life of our church without resolving to give more time to that part of the work.

Mrs. McQueen, Superintendent of Supplies, was on hand, looking well after the work of her office—the interests of the Wesley Houses and superannuate preachers will not suffer in her hands; she has the interest of both at heart as well as the many other duties resting upon her.

The work of Mission Study is growing, as was shown by reports; our women are realizing more fully the need of missionary education if we would succeed in this world-wide work we have begun. Mission Study seems to have gained a permanent place in the Society from the splendid work reported by many of the organizations. The course of study is so attractively prepared that both teaching and study are a pleasure.

The Superintendent of Social Service was unavoidably detained at home.

Mrs. Bennett, Secretary of Port Gibson District, was unable to be present because of illness; her report was made by Miss Porter.

Miss Porter, our new Recording Secretary, has taken hold of her duties with that business-like air with which she handles everything else. She is very quiet and unassuming, but we all know when she speaks we will hear something worth while.

Mrs. McCoy, who was expected as the Council guest, could not be present, but we found a splendid substitute in Mrs. J. W. Perry, Superintendent of Young People's work. Her charming manner won the admiration of the Conference. Her knowledge of the work was fully demonstratetd in her interesting and instructive talks. She is a woman well fitted for the position she holds.

We were fortunate in having two deaconesses present—Miss Lois Linsley, of the Biloxi Wesley House, and Miss Maude Fail, of the Meridian Wesley House. Both gave interesting reports of their work.

A motion was made and carried that we request a whole page in the New Orleans Advocate, one column to be devoted to each of the three Conferences, and the other to general information. It was also decided that we publish quarterly a Bulletin of our work in this Conference.

We are justly proud of the Mississippi girls at the Scarritt Bible and Training School. Splendid reports come to us of them. A letter from these girls was read, telling of the Mississippi room in the school, after which a collection was taken to buy furnishings for the room, each District Secretary assuming the amount she thought her district would pay. This subscription amounted to about $300.

The time for taking the Pledge was full of interest and enthusiasm, as it always is. The amount for 1919 was so much more easily raised than ever before that our women did not hesitate to advance with a greater faith and determination. As the names of the different auxiliaries were called, those present made their pledge, some raising it 100 per cent, some 50 per cent over last year's subscription. All present subscribed, but a number of societies not yet reporting their pledge to their district secretary were not heard from. The amount pledged was $7913.

The goal for 1920 has been set at 25 per cent increase along all lines. With the record of the closing year, we have no reason to fear we will fall short of this mark.

There were a number of visitors introduced to the Conference. Notable among these were Mrs. W. B. Lewis, Mrs. E. D. Jones, and Mrs. Sallie Smylie Ferguson, all pioneer workers in the Woman's Missionary Society of this Conference.

The noon hour devotions, conducted by Rev. C. W. Crisler, are not soon to be forgotten by those who heard him.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. W. C. STURDIVANT.

On the evening of March 15, 1920, while this busy, restless world was lulling itself to sleep, mother quietly slipped away from us and passed over that silent river, there to rest and wait awhile on that other shore. SALLIE A. CLARK was born April 23, 1854; she was married to W. C. Sturdivant on Feb. 2, 1871, and for forty-nine years they walked along life's way, sharing alike its joys and sorrows. To this union were born eleven children, nine of whom, with her beloved companion, survive her—Carrie, a sweet, young Christian woman, and an infant son having preceded her to that brighter home. The others are: Mrs. Mary Lewers, Alma, Ark.; Edwin C. Sturdivant, Tyro, Miss.; Henry Sturdivant, Looxahoma, Miss.; Ivy, Joe, Willie, Mrs. Willie B. Taylor, and S. L. Sturdivant, of Como, Miss.; and Glenn Sturdivant, of Okolona, Miss. A more devoted companion and family of children could not be found. As I looked into the face of those splendid Christian men, and thought of the two gentle Christian daughters, I could but exclaim in my soul, "O, little mother, if rearing, and giving to the world this family of noble men and women were, indeed, all you had done, surely you had not lived in vain!" But this was not all; as a wife she was faithful and true; as a mother, kind, loving and self-sacrificing almost to a fault; as a neighbor, not only those at her new home where she had lived a few years prior to her death, but those at the old home where she was born and lived for a half-century, said she was almost unequaled. For every act of kindness shown her by these friends, for each smallest gift of remembrance, she expressed her heart's gratitude, for she loved devotedly her friends, and was ever loyal to them. During the years before she became so feeble that she must needs submit to hired help, one of her greatest delights was to serve to her family and friends the very best repast her dear hands could prepare, and when admonished for doing so much toward this she would gently say, "I enjoy doing this for you"; and many hundreds have partaken of her hospitality. Early in life she united with the Methodist Church, and in her own quiet way lived her Christian life. She never neglected her Bible or her church paper; to her church she was faithful until ill-health compelled her to stay away. One of my earliest recollections is seeing her coming in the old Mount Vernon Church day after day, followed by her little children. She was always in her place, modest, quiet, little woman, no time for jesting or careless speech, no undue demonstration, and yet there was that under-current which has manifested itself in the sons and daughters she has left as a legacy to the world. The funeral services were conducted by Brother R. P. Nehlett, of Como, and Brother F. H. McGehee, of Tyro. She was laid to rest at Mt. Vernon, and there we left her sleeping beneath a wealth of beautiful flowers. While I stood there and looked at the freshly-made mound, covered with those fragrant blossoms, I wished that in some mystic way the veil that intervenes could be drawn aside that her eyes, too, might behold them, she loved them so much. Adown the fast receding years, hither and thither we are tossed about upon the bounding billows of joy and sorrow, and to our short-sighted human nature it seems more of sorrow—one is scarcely quieted until another is crowding fast upon it and we are won't to wonder why—but O, what a blessed thought, "At eventide it will be light," then the consoling thought, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away;" and as the late Mrs. Kennedy so beautifully said:

"The end of life is but the opening wide
Of some shut door through which there flows
The muted music of the universe—
The breath of Eden perfumed like a rose,
The onward journey is not long nor lone,
The Realm of Rest lies nearer than we think."

Comb Sage Tea in Faded or Gray Hair

If Mixed with Sulphur It Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, at very little cost. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful.—Adv.

ARKABUTLA CIRCUIT.

Dear Brother Carley: May I say that the lines have fallen in pleasant places all along to us, and we are still in the good old way? We have a great field over here, and a great people to serve, as great as any pastor's in the world. We feel the spirit of development along the lines of church life. Our congregations are growing; the Sunday school life and interest show a marked increase. Dr. R. A. Meek, our much loved and efficient presiding elder, was with us, and at his best, March 27 and 28, in our second quarterly conference, and he brought to us and our people two great and helpful messages. The official board raised the pastor's salary $100 over last year, and some want to reconsider now and give it another tilt upward. The Woman's Aid Society has been adding to the furniture of the parsonage home, and are planning to do more.

We are praying and hoping for a great year. We accept our quota of 28 new subscribers asked for by our district stewards, and are doing, and will continue to do our best for the Advocate. We feel that the Arkabutla charge is soon to advance to its proper place, and take its position where it belongs in the front line. Let us always say, the M. E. Church, South.

WINONA DISTRICT NOTES.

Rev. S. L. Pope, presiding elder of the Winona District, called the preachers and lay leaders to meet in Moorhead, Tuesday, April 6. Several laymen and all but two pastors were present. The preachers were afraid of an ecclesiastical spanking, so they came—they were told in the notice sent them that they might find it embarrassing if they did not come. Then, too, they were not told why they were wanted, so their curiosity brought them. The laymen must have "smelled a rat"—they must have known that another D-R-I-V-E was coming, for they did not drive up. It did prove to be another drive, and one that should rest heavily upon all hearts. It is to be for OUR Methodist Hospital in Memphis, Tenn.

At last, we are to get down to business and take hold of this great enterprise, if the interest in other sections is like that manifested by this conference. The sentiment was that we should finish up the job, or quit playing with it as we had been doing.

The Savior spent two-thirds of his time ministering to the bodies of men, and when he said, "Greater things than these shall ye do," I think he looked down the vista of time and saw the great hospitals ministering in his name. Our people everywhere should realize this and pour out their wealth for the Master's sake, and humanity's cause.

Brother L. D. Patterson, of Alabama, has just closed a successful meeting for Brother Randolph at Winona. Thirty were received into the church.

Rev. S. H. Caffey and his good people at Moorhead are to be commended, for they have just completed a financial drive and paid off their church debt.

Many of the pastors of the Winona District are arranging for their revivals after the district conference, which meets at Indianola, April 20 and 21. We will report the results in this space as the information reaches us.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY

He seemed to be at his best for this occasion. The reading of Scripture and the message brought in song seemed to swing us far from the business of the Conference and open the floodgates for the pouring in of the Holy Spirit so manifest by his words.

The cordial welcome extended this body of workers was appreciated by those in attendance. Officers, members and visitors all spoke in high praise of the hospitality; every comfort seemed provided for, even to the minutest detail. After the first night, when we met together in a "get-acquainted" meeting, we no longer felt that we were among strangers.

On Wednesday afternoon a reception was given at the Governor's mansion, which proved a most enjoyable affair.

Thursday evening "tea" was served at the orphanage; of course this was a double treat, for every loyal Methodist is intensely interested in this institution. Rev. B. F. Lewis, manager of the Home, with his corps of able assistants, has the work well in hand. The "tea," though prepared by the girls and served by them, would have passed well as the work of well trained and experienced housekeepers.

To Mrs. Tolle, the wife of our pastor at Capitol Street Church, we are indebted for several treats. The first was the bringing of a troop of boy scouts to sing for us. The song composed for the Conference was thoroughly enjoyed as was the scout song, "We are out to win," and "The Old-time Religion." At another time three girls from the Deaf and Dumb Institute gave us in motion the song, "Will there be any stars in my crown?" Another rendered "Whispering Hope." The expression with which these girls gave the songs in motion is nothing short of marvelous.

It seemed each day she had something ready as an innovation for us. Two of the young girls from the Blind Institute furnished us splendid music; with one at the piano, the other sang, "Lead kindly Light" in a most effective manner.

The several pastors of the different churches contributed their share to the pleasure as well as the success of the meeting.

Rev. M. M. Black, Agent for Millsaps College, was often with us in the meetings, and helped by his presence and encouraging words.

What are Christians put into the world for except to do the impossible in the strength of God?—Gen. S. C. Armstrong.

For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that

POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effects on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

20 per cent MANURE SALT

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big Cotton Crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three

Standard GERMAN Potash Salts

that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

A CHANCE TO MAKE GOOD.

"I will not prosecute. You owe me nothing—except that you make good," said a man who had been defrauded, to a young man who had already served six years in prison and was being held to answer the charge that haunted him as a ghost from the past. We wish that we might follow the career of this man far enough to learn what use he makes of the opportunity thus given him. We hope and pray that he will "make good" in every sense of the word. If we pause for a moment to think, all of us must realize that it is due to the mercy and goodness of God that we have a chance to "make good." Suppose He should hold our transgressions against us forever! Suppose He had never said to the penitent and sorrowing soul, "Go, and sin no more!" Justly we have brought condemnation upon ourselves, but through the atoning merits of Jesus Christ we have been given another chance. No human heart could be so grieved over the grossest ingratitude of a trusted friend as our Heavenly Father will be if we relapse into the ways of sin. Are we "making good?"

PRIZE FIGHTING AND PREACHING.

A man's value to society ought to he measured by the contribution he makes to its welfare. While such contributions cannot always be measured in terms of dollars and cents, the world at large is prone to express its appreciation hy such standards. If this be a real test, the prize fighter is worth a good deal more than the preacher. We read the other day that a successful pugilist of the light-weight division has received for the eleven contests he has engaged in within the last 3 months the sum of $21,945—an average of $1995 for each fight. We know of a good many preachers who do not receive so much for a whole year's work, and we do not know of a one who receives $20,000 a year for his unselfish and devoted labors in behalf of the religious life of a community. When it comes to money, it is evidently worth more to smash a body than it is to save a soul. Poor world!

THE ETHICS OF ADVERTISING.

As we look over the advertisements in the daily newspapers, we cannot fail to be impressed by the fact that most of our enterprising business firms seem to have the idea that the success of their appeal to the buying public depends upon their ability to convince the prospective purchasers that in their particular store they can buy goods below actual value. "A lucky purchase," "a delayed shipment just received," "an anniversary celebration"—these and other circumstances are cited as reasons why the public is being given great price concessions. These concessions may be real—or they may not be; but it would be positively refreshing for some advertiser to say that he has bought his goods as cheaply as possible, that he expects to make a reasonable profit on his investment, and that the quality of the goods is as good as could be expected for the price. If we cannot have this, we wish the "ad" writers would at least invent some new excuses for inveigling the people into their places of business.

WOMEN AND CIGARETTES.

We have previously called attention to the fact that there is good reason for believing that the habit of cigarette smoking is increasing among the girls and young women of this country. It is reported that the consumption of cigarettes increased 47 per cent in the United States last year. We have heard it said—we cannot vouch for the truth of the statement—that it is a common thing for the women to smoke at a good many social gatherings, especially in our larger cities. We hate to believe that it is possible for such to be the case, but we cannot blind ourselves to the facts. So serious does the situation seem to be that Surgeon-General Cumming, of the U. S. Government, has recently issued a statement in connection with it. He says: "The cigarette habit indulged in by women tends to cause nervousness and insomnia, ruining the complexion. If American women generally contract the habit, as reports now indicate they are doing, the American nation will suffer. The physical tone of the whole people will be lowered. * * * The habit harms a woman more than a man. The woman's nervous system is more highly organized than the man's. The reaction on a woman, therefore, is more intense." It may be that the habit is not gaining a hold in the South—we pray God that it never will—but this warning is enough to put us on guard. Maidenly modesty and cigarettes do not go very well together.

MORE THAN THAT.

Lady Astor, of England, in a speech advocating the purchase and control of the liquor business by the State, is reported to have said recently: "I am for prohibition, but Britain is not ripe for it yet. I am fully aware that I am prejudicing my future career. People want to drive me out of politics because I speak the truth. The world would be five times better and happier if there were not a drop of liquor in it." We are not sure that we can state exactly the degree by which the world would be improved by the abolition of the liquor traffic, but we are thoroughly convinced that it would be more than five times better. However, for the sake of argument we are willing to let it stand at that and trust that the time will soon come when England will he ready to join with the most powerful and progressive nation on earth in promoting world-wide prohibition.

ANOTHER CHANCE FOR THE PROFITEER.

"Overall clubs" have been organized in a good many places for the purpose of combating the high cost of clothing. High government officials, university professors, ministers and professional men have agreed to wear the homely, but comfortable and durable garments of the manual lahorer until the price of their usual habiliments is lowered. A fine idea!—hut the profiteer will, as always, seize the chance to make a dishonest profit. We have just read that the price of overalls in one city has gone from $2.75 to $6.75 in anticipation of the increased demand. We suppose we shall have to leave the punishment of the profiteer to the good Lord in the world to come—the Government does not seem to he able to do anything with him here. We know some people who, instead of wearing overalls, are getting at the matter in another way—they are continuing to wear their old clothes. It may he making a virtue of necessity—but we can testify to its being a practicable expedient. Patches and darns may come into style yet.

A BAD BEGINNING.

According to the newspaper accounts of the occasion, the initial meeting of the National Congress of Social Work, which has heen in session in this city for the past week, was followed by a dance for the first time in the forty-seven years of the organization's history. We have not the slightest disposition to criticise harshly this body of devoted men and women who are vitally and intensely interested in the social welfare of the nation, many of whom have done heroic service in the betterment of the appalling conditions that exist in many of our social ahd industrial centers; hut we think it exceedingly unfortunate that they should have countenanced an innovation that cannot fail to meet the disapproval of a great many good people who have believed in the purposes of the Congress and supported its work. While its study of social questions may he altogether from the scientific standpoint, it is impossible to overlook the fact that all constructive social work is essentially moral in its implications; the moral tendency of the modern dance is too well known for it to become a part of the program of a social welfare organization. This was a bad beginning of what has proved to be a noteworthy gathering.

THE "REVIVAL" IN MUNICIPAL LIFE.

Now and then we hear some objection to the season of revival effort in the work of the church on the ground that such effort has a tendency to hring about a state of emotional excitement that is followed hy a hurtful spiritual reaction. We know, of course, that such reaction does sometimes follow a certain type of revival meetings. But it is perfectly natural and normal to set apart a given time for the renewal of the spiritual forces that make religion a happy experience and an aggressive force. Various municipalities have recognized the value of the "revival" effort in their attempts to develop and maintain the "city beautiful." This headline in a New Orleans newspaper caught our attention the other day: "Spring Clean-Up Campaign Now On;" and the statement followed that the initial steps of the campaign would he measures to prevent the throwing of junk, ruhhish and other refuse into vacant lots. Nobody will find fault with such a campaign, and much good will result from the energies expended in it. A morally clean community is infinitely more beautiful than a physically clean one, though the latter is pretty sure to follow the former. A real revival is one of the best things in the world.

THE BOATMAN.

By Willie C. Page.

Methought I lay near the River of Death,
And its waters were dark and chill;
A boatman came from the opposite shore,
With his oars all muffled and still.
"Where is my Savior? I see not His light!"
I cried, as the bark drew near:
"Tell me, boatman, must I go to-night?
And leave my loved ones here?"
He answered not—but an angel came,
And tenderly whispered low:
"The Master has yet a work for you,
So back to the earth you must go."

I opened my eyes and the sunshine was bright;
Loved ones waited, anxious and sad;
I looked up and smiled: "The boatman has gone;"
They were so happy and glad.
I must hasten my Father's work to do,
With all my might and main,
For I know ere long to the river's brink
The boatman will come again.
I will not fear, though the night is dark,
If His glorious light I can see,
For I know when I cross the river at last,
My Savior will pilot me.

THE RELATION OF CHILDREN TO THE CHURCH.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

In my recent articles on "The Spiritual Status of Children," I think I succeeded, despite diversity of supposedly authoritative opinions and the subtlety of the transparent inventions of Calvinism to evade the logically inevitable sequence of its own creed, in establishing, beyond all reasonable controversy, the fact that all children, from the moment of their birth up to the period of discretion, are members of the kingdom by virtue of the atonement of Jesus Christ. Having established this comforting and satisfying truth, I now propose the discussion of the kindred subject indicated by, and involved in, the caption of this article, viz.: "The Relation of Children to the Church."

In proposing the discussion of this topic, I am not entering upon a problem difficult of solution, because the answer to the whole question is easily discoverable in the relation of children to the kingdom. If, as I have previously shown, children are members of the kingdom, it is demonstrable that they should also be allowed their heaven-born right to membership in the organized and visible church. The purpose for which Jesus Christ came into the world is revealed in the proclamation of the fact that he came to establish on earth not a material kingdom in accordance with Jewish anticipation, but a spiritual kingdom, and he expressly said that the citizenship of his kingdom should be composed of two classes: children, and men and women who had become child-like through conversion. Yet, after all these centuries of progress in Christian thought, there are those to-day who, because their thought processes are obsessed by prejudices engendered by the teachings of Calvinistic churches and their powers of spiritual perception obscured by the narrowness of denominational affiliations, would exclude children from the church. Their conception of the relation of children to the church is anachronistic. They are out of joint with the age in which they live and hurl anathemas in the direction of those whose convictions lead them to espouse the cause of the children and to contend for their right to membership in the church. Their prototypes existed among our Lord's early disciples, whose training had not as yet been sufficiently thorough for them to understand or know the mind of their Lord. It will be remembered that some of these insufficiently taught disciples on one occasion forbade the mothers to bring their children to Jesus, but he administered to them a stinging rebuke which they never forgot, and which should have taught not only his ignorant, mistaken disciples, but all the world in all ages that children belong to his kingdom and that all others were to be excluded unless they became as little children—"Except ye be converted, and become as a little child, ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom." While our Lord on other occasions rebuked his disciples about other blunders, it is observable that he never again had to do so about their attitude toward the children. If some of his present-day disciples need one thing more than another, it is to have their Lord's rebuke repeated to them in some authoritative way, so that, like those earlier disciples, they will never forget it. If they will not hear, if they pesist in their present indefensible, if not reprehensible, attitude toward the children in their relation to the kingdom, and ultimately awake to a realization of the fact that they have defrauded their own children of the blessed privileges that belong to them in Jesus Christ, the blood of their children will be on their heads. "I believe, therefore have I spoken;" others before me have spoken; Jesus himself, with the supreme and absolute authority that belonged to him, has spoken in no uncertain words: "Suffer the children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for they belong to the kingdom."

Either, children are born into the world inside the kingdom, or outside the kingdom. If they are born outside the kingdom, dying in infancy, they are lost world without end, and the inventions of theology, such as "all infants dying in infancy are elect" and the "dying grace" theory, cannot save them. If they are born into the world inside the kingdom, dying in infancy, they are saved without the interposition of theological subterfuges; living, they have a right which cannot be denied them by men or devils to membership in the organized, visible church. He who denies them this inalienable right, be he preacher, Sunday school teacher, or parent, does so at his own peril and, at the same time, imperils the salvation of the child. I shall never forget an exceedingly sad illustration of this fact which came under my own observation. It was the case of a small girl twelve years of age. When I became pastor of the church in the community where her parents resided, she was even at that early age not only impervious to all religious appeal, but had also become a scoffer. Upon enquiry, I learned that just two years previously she had expressed a desire to unite with the church and her mother had refused to let her do so, saying, "She is too young to know what she is doing." From the moment of her mother's refusal, as I was informed, she turned a deaf ear to all appeals and, while I do not know the later story of her life, I have no doubt that no change has occurred in her attitude toward a religious life. Nearly all pastors have known similar instances in their experiences and can tell of fathers and mothers who kept their children out of the church and, later, suffered inexpressible humiliation and anxiety when their sons and daughters turned from the church and drifted into sin. How many preachers who teach that children are born into the world outside the kingdom and therefore lost, and have no right to membership in the church, could relate, if they would, experiences of intercessory prayer and spiritual battles fought to win back young men and women whom they have driven from the church and Christ in their early childhood by their teaching! Let all, parents, other individuals, and certain preachers, beware because the Judgment Day is coming, and Jesus said, "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea."

Let me remind all who interpose objections to children coming into the church that God is responsible for opening the doors of the church to the children. I have neither the time nor the disposition here and now to produce all the scriptural proofs of this assertion; nor shall I attempt to trace, in Old Testament history, the rise and progress of the church of God through successive ages, changing the form of its ritualistic service and ceremonies with the vicissitudes of the mutable years, and adapting itself to the varying circumstances and conditions of men, till it finally culminated in its Christian form on the day of Pentecost, and there endued with that new spiritual power which has brought it victoriously down through the wide sweep of the centuries to the present hour. Suffice it to say that God established his covenant with Abraham, the father of the faithful, saying, "I will establish my covenant with thee and thy seed after thee, and it shall be an everlasting covenant," at the same time giving to him circumcision for himself and his posterity as a token and seal of the everlasting covenant. The Abrahamic covenant, which God declares shall be an everlasting covenant, still binds man to God and God to man, and it includes the children. "Thy seed"—that is the key with which God unlocked the door of the church and let the children in. This covenant has never been repealed; indeed, it cannot be repealed because it is everlasting. No new commandment was ever given in any period of the church's history annulling this ancient and everlasting covenant. If God later decided that he had made a mistake in admitting the children to membership in his church, or for any reason thought best to revoke his covenant, he would have said so; but there is no record in the Bible to show that he has ever revoked his covenant with man and the children of men. So far from annulling his covenant, on the day of Pentecost he inspired Peter to reiterate his covenant with Abraham verbatim. On that day, when men were crying, "What must we do to be saved?" Peter arose and said, "The promise is unto you and your children." If children were not to be allowed membership in the Christian church as they had been in the Jewish church, at the very inception of the history of the former the Jews, who had been accustomed to their children coming into the church, should have been informed of the fact, and Peter should have said, "Brethren, the promise is unto you, but I am sorry to say that your children are not included." That children by the commandment of God were admitted into the Jewish church is incontrovertible, and the burden of proof is on the shoulders of those who would exclude them from the Christian church to show that God, who first admitted the children, has since excluded them. I am firmly convinced that I would be perfectly safe in issuing to the world a challenge to point out the time and place of God's revocation of his everlasting covenant. It is a well known principle that the legal enactments of legislative bodies, State or national, remain in force until repealed. The same principle must be applied to the commandments and covenants of the Almighty, who is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. There can be no question but that children were admitted to membership in the church of the Jews by the commandment of God, and that order, issued in the days of Abraham, has never been revoked. If so, there is no record of it in the Bible. Therefore, by all the compelling force of logical reasoning, children must be allowed membership in the church of God now. The argument is conclusive. Hence on the day of Pentecost, while under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, Peter opened the door of the church in its Christian form to the people of all nations and to their children as well, saying, "The promise is unto you—and your children."

There is no reasonable philosophy by which any man can vindicate his attitude toward children when he raises a harrier hetween them and membership in the church of God. I rejoice that I belong to a church which teaches that children are saved by grace when they enter the world; and if they are saved hy grace, they helong to the kingdom, and if they helong to the kingdom, they have a right to belong to the church, which is the visible expression of the invisible kingdom. Furthermore, if children are horn into the world saved by grace, either it is possible or impossible for them to remain in a saved state, growing up in the kingdom and the church. If we say that it is impossible, we make sin a necessity and we must assume that there is a period of life when the plan of salvation is ineffective—when, in fact, it breaks down. If we say it is possible, then it is evident that children can always remain in the kingdom and should helong to the church.

From the very inception of her glorious history, the Methodist Church has always found a place in her fold for the children, and I am glad that I am an insignificant representative of her ministry, her doctrines, and her polity so that, in the administration of her wise and scriptural policy for the conservation of childhood, when children present themselves for membership in my church, I can take them by the hand and, in the words for the reception of members contained in our Book of Discipline, say, "We rejoice to recognize you as members of the church of Christ, and bid you welcome to all its privileges; and in token of our brotherly love, we give you the right hand of feilowship, and pray that you may be numbered with his people here, and with his saints in glory everlasting."

THE CHURCH AND PRESENT-DAY CONDITIONS.

By Rev. Meilville Johnson.

The church is the oniy institution that exists for the sole purpose of redeeming men from sin and fitting them for the glorified Kingdom of God. Other institutions have for their goal social betterment, political purity, and moral uplift, hut none of these can succeed apart from the church, nor are they together equivalent to the church.

If the church fails to accomplish her spiritual mission, no other institution, organization, or movement can carry on her ministry. Education without redemption is criminal power; social uplift without redemption is cultured animalism; spirituality without redemption is unfettered fanaticism. Bolshevism, Anarchism, Socialism, and Spiritualism are the fruits of some of the hest efforts and energies apart from the redeeming power of Jesus Christ; and what a poor failure is each!

While every one is awake to the fact that this era furnishes an unprecedented opportunity for the church, there is difference of opinion as to the kind and scope of this opportunity. The task of the church is never to adjust her Gospel to the age, but to adjust the age to the Gospel. The same Commission which reads, "Go preach to every creature," impiies in profound silence that all peoples and all eras must be brought to the Gospel. Humanity will never be redeemed through a continuous process of shaping the Christian message to match the fancy of an unawakened, cold, conscienceless world; but redemption must ever depend upon the Gospei of Christ to transform men.

If these things he true, it follows that this era calls for well-defined evangelical dogma. They are wrong who say that the church has failed in the past because of adherence to permanent and inflexible doctrines. Such failures as may be pointed out, have occurred on account of the practice of bigotry rather than from the preaching of doctrine. And we look with suspicion upon some who would surrender doctrine in behalf of any sort of fusion or union of sects. Better for a church to preach and practice a half-gospel, than to surrender the fragment she preaches for a mutilated whole! This world needs to gaze upon a militant church, spiritual to the point of uncompromising attack upon sin, advancing in an unbroken coiumn of positive Christian doctrines, which will answer the spiritual needs of men for this world and for the next. If there is a conscious salvation, a conscious assurance of fellowship with God, a type of true Christian character attainahle on earth, these things ought to be preached and defended to the death. The world is "fed up" on probably's and perhaps's. If any saving and regenerative power is to accompany Christian preaching, authority and conviction must be behind the message.

Thls era cails for magnificent sacrifice upon the part of the church. "Ye shall be hated of all men," was the prediction of our Lord. As long as the church witnesses for Jesus Christ, she shall be unpopular. The demand of the Cross cannot be met by a world crazed with selfishness. It is to be expected that unawakened, sinful men will rebel at the preaching of the true Gospel, and at the difficult way and stringent demands of New Testament Christianity. We should not be astonished at the shafts of criticism hurled at the church by irresponsihle and sinful men. While some criticism is just, the major portion is simply the ejaculation of some disgruntled sinner, or the thrust of some ambitious ecclesiastic. Consider some of these criticisms as overheard in certain quarters: "I'll never join the church until denominations are done away, and strife between Christian sects ceases." "The church isn't broad enough in her present form for one of a modern type of mind." "The church needs reorganization." Now, some zealous churchman, overhearing these remarks, sets about at once to agitate the matter of adjusting the church to meet the needs of this body of worldly critics. Herein is the explanation of much of the unrest in church circles to-day.

Our Lord thought more of His redemptive work than that it should become a fad or fashion, about which the world would go mad. The cost of redemption has made it too precious for a soul, unenlightened hy the Holy Spirit, to grasp its value. And that institution which is commissioned to bear the hiessed Good News to a sinful world must undergo much suffering of rejection, much scoffing, much long-suffering, because of the unbelief of the world. The church must ever continue to drink of the cup that was bitter to His own lips, if she continues to witness for her Lord, and behold the travail of men's souls that marks the approach of new-hirth. The Gospel of Jesus Christ can never be altogether popular until sin and the devil are eliminated from society. Likewise, the church of God must needs remember that her glory will never be heralded on this earth by the songs and shouts of the multitudes, but that her giory and crown await her in the great Consummation. While so much is being said and done to bring the Christian forces together into an invincible army, let it be remembered that success in the Kingdom of God cannot be measured hy worldly estimates.

A SUPERANNUATE WONDERING.

By Rev. T. W. Adams.

Rev. J. M. Morse's announcement in the Advocate that Rev. T. B. Holloman, D.D., had been appointed in charge of Lake City set me to wondering. What does it mean? I am almost persuaded that some men don't know a good thing when they have it. The Conference toid Tom that he had done enough hard work; that henceforth he might rest and he happy. It seems to me that he is constitutionally and conscientiously opposed to rest. I don't helieve that he could sing "There is rest heyond the river" with any relish whatever. How some men do love to work! I am not that way, Henry. I was born tired, and have been tired ever since. I have worked mighty hard all my life, hut it has been a case of pure and real necessity. I have had to work or starve. I object to starving so seriously that I made up my mind to work My mind once made up to that, I have not had much trouhle to keep myself going. But Tom loves to work, and won't rest at all. That beats me. I don't know what to make of it.

I was restless all iast year. I was inclined to he envious of Tom Holloman. I thought he didn't treat me exactly right. He ought to have told me that he was going to superannuate. I would gladly have gone out with him, and we could have had happy fellowship in the Veterans' Camp. I am eleven months older than he. He hegan in the Conference one year ahead of me. We went to Madison College, Sharon, Miss., together; studied and recited Latin and Greek and mathematics together under Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt and Bishop Galloway. Then we roomed together at Emory and Henry College, Va. We have been working together in the Mississippi Conference harness for more than forty years. We were presiding elders together. I was his presiding elder when he was at Port Gibson and Crawford Street, Vicksburg. No pastor and presiding elder ever had more soulful comradeship than we. I love Tom like a hrother. There is no more lovable and better Christian gentleman in the world.

When he dropped out of the active ranks, I felt shocked. I made up my mind to join him on the "honor roll." I did so. Now in three months Tom deserts the camp, and leaves me wondering. I have made up my mind not to try to follow Tom any more.

Tom's going to work has broken up a cherished pian of mine. Too had! If Tom would get Sam Steel to visit him at his fine country home in Yazoo County, I would join them, and we could have a fine time running a tripartite affair—Sam Steel to quote poetry, Tom to write interesting letters to the Advocate, and I to write insurance. Wouldn't that have been fine? We would have recessed occasionally for Tom to explore the lofts and bring in the eggs. Then he could take Sam with him into the beech hills to hunt for turkey eggs. They couldn't expect me to engage in such business, for a man of my shape cannot function well in practical gymnastics. Just to think of a man 29 leg and 44 waist measure trying to keep up with such little fellows as Tom and Sam, climbing ladders and steep hills! It wouldn't do at all. I want Sam Steel to know that "Susanna" would never scare at a skeleton if I were to ride her in a "peerade."

Rev. J. M. Morse is to be blamed for this breaking up of my fine plan. He seems to be always looking for an opportunity to checkmate plans. When he agreed to release Brother McVey from Lake City, he came to me and said: "Adams, I must have Holloman or you for Lake City." I told him Holloman was the very man for the place. Holloman had rested a full year and more. I hadn't made a good start in my rest. I was mighty glad for Lake City to get such a good preacher and pastor as Tom Holloman. If they are as sensible as I think them to be, they will keep him indefinitely. I expect to visit Tom in the spring and talk and fish.

But Morse scared me. I do hope no other preacher in the Jackson District will drop out, and that none will die. If such a thing should happen, my rest would he gone. I would have to go to work. I don't want to do that. I hope the brethren will remember me in their prayers.

I am suspicious of Morse's motives. It appears to me that he is thinking about lifting hurdens from the Joint Board of Finance. Three-fourths of Tom Holloman's allotment is saved to the Board. Morse is afraid that the munificent stipend to the poor old, worn-out preachers of the Conference will bankrupt the church. Morse is mighty careful.

I am still waiting for the brethren to write me to come and insure their lives.

Brookhaven, Miss.

The religions of the world are the evaporations of their dead founders. Christianity is the life of Jesus Christ in the life of the regenerated man. Christianity is Christ in action; consequently, it is the only dynamic which gives power, force, and permanence to one's life.—Dr. Matthews.

SOUTH AMERICA: THE UNDEVELOPED CONTINENT.

By Rev. A. C. Millar, D.D.

II.

The Ancient Inhabitants of South America.

When the Spaniards and Portuguese first came to South America they found the fierce Caribs along the northern coast. They were warlike cannibals, and were the natives described by Defoe in Robinson Crusoe. Further down the east coast were the Arawaks, who were milder and more civilized, being able to weave cloth and work metals. Then there were many different kinds of Indians living on the pampas. They, too, were warlike and resisted the coming of the white man. In southern Chile dwelt the brave and hardy Araucanians, who followed agriculture, built houses, maintained a military aristocracy, and kept up a perpetual warfare against the European invaders.

In the north of Chile and in Peru, Bolivia, and Ecuador, various peoples, classed together as the Incas, had developed a really wonderful civilization. Some four hundred years before the discovery of America, other Indians, who had also developed a somewhat advanced civilization, were subdued by the more aggressive Incas. It is greatly to be regretted that the records of these ancient civilizations are so scanty, as, from a material standpoint, the achievements rivaled those of Babylon, Egypt, Greece and Rome.

The Incas engaged in intensive agriculture, building terraces and irrigation ditches and using fertilizers, and producing potatoes, corn and cotton. They had domesticated the llama and used it both for its flesh and its labor. From the alpaca they obtained fine wool with which they fabricated cloth and blankets. Skillful artificers in metal, they manufactured iron, copper, silver, and gold into utensils and ornaments and used the precious metals as money. They built military and commercial roads and erected great buildings, cutting huge stone blocks with accuracy and laying them securely without mortar.

Cuzco, their capital city, located near the middle of Peru, when captured by the Spanish four hundred years ago was one of the most magnificent cities of the world, having glorious temples and massive fortifications, with fabulous treasure of gold and silver and precious stones. The city gates were of colored marble and the palaces were spacious and beautifully decorated and elegantly furnished. The marvelous Temple of the Sun was roofed with gold, and in the surrounding gardens were figures of men and animals and trees and flowers, all curiously made of gold, and a cornice three feet wide was wrought of the same metal. The temple was elliptical in shape and a golden image of the sun was placed opposite the entrance, where it was kissed by the first beams of the rising orb of day. The head was crowned with golden rays and the sunlight falling upon this glittering figure produced a splendor which caused the nobles who viewed it to fall prostrate before it. Work on this wonderful edifice was begun under the first royal ruler and each successor contributed something to its completion. At death the bodies of these emperors were embalmed and placed on golden thrones around the image of the sun-god. Another portion of the temple contained a silver image of a female face and was dedicated to the moon. In this chamber the embalmed bodies of the queens were arranged around the sacred image. There were many other halls for various religious purposes, and in all, gold and emeralds and turquoise were used for decorating. Near by was the House of the Virgins, who, of royal blood and 1500 in number, tended the sacred fires and spun wool and wove the royal garments. Each emperor built a splendid palace and around all were almost impregnable fortifications, entered by the holy gate near which every Indian of the Incas looked forward or backward, as he was entering or leaving the city, so as to have the first or last glance at his sacred temple. At the height of its glory Cuzco had 400,000 inhabitants and was the center of an empire which stretched from far down in Chile to the equator and from the Pacific to the pampas. Its emperor could lead great armies, and he employed ambassadors to treat with neighboring States.

Quito, near the equator, had been the capital of an earlier empire, but it finally yielded to the military prowess of the Inca emperor, and at the coming of the European divided honors and authority with Cuzco. Other fine cities through the central Andean region were built by these great people.

While we have all read of these things, it is difficult for us whose civilization originated in Europe and Asia to realize the magnitude and advancement of this Indian empire developed far from the recognized sources. Its story is one of the most enchanting romances of history. If without most of the instruments and appliances of Europe such achievements were possible, what may be expected in the same favored region when all the best elements of modern life combine, as they some day should, to develop and organize the natural resources of a greater and better civilization?

FINANCIAL DRIVES.

By Rev. J. R. Countiss.

When the World War was on, Americans surprised themselves and astonished the world by the way they poured out millions for the relief of the starving peoples of the stricken areas and for the welfare of their own armies. Later, great church drives were put on, and again and again the people "went over the top." The giving was large, generous, hilarious. Giving was fashionable, popular, contagious. Those who refused to make donations for benevolence, or to subscribe for Liberty Bonds were discounted, shamed, almost ostracized.

Now, another spirit prevails. The fashions have changed. The psychology of it is that the people are tired of the game; the theology of it is that the "old Adam" of selfishness has reasserted his sway. Editors, writers and speakers have grown critical toward the "drive." It is taboo. Everybody grumbles about the high cost of living, groans to live higher, and wants the other fellow to cut his prices.

A good word for the drive: It saved America from becoming a very Sodom of selfishness. German triumph and tyranny could hardly have been a greater calamity than that Americans should have hoarded their billions of war profits for selfish ends, or have squandered them in sinful extravagance. The drive kept the milk of human kindness flowing when it was about to dry up. It preserved the spirit of altruism from perishing in the catastrophe. Blessings on the men and women who had vision and courage to put on drives for hundreds of millions! And the time has not come when we can safely shut up our "bowels of compassion." We have not yet given to hurt. We are richer than before our first giving. There is dire need in many quarters. Evangelistic agencies have scarcely received a tithe of what is immediately needed for meeting the greatest crisis in the history of Christianity. Christianity must here and now prove its right to be the religion of humanity, or become merely one of sundry human creeds for generations hence. Men and women of God, let us be discriminating in our giving, but let us give and give and GIVE. It is not time for united, organized, church-wide and nation-wide drives to cease. "There is that scattereth abroad and yet increaseth." God will forsake us the day we forsake our sinful, suffering, stricken fellow-beings.

THE WORK OF THE REPRESENTATIVE CHURCH.

By Thomas H. Daniel.

Although the population of Washington has diminished considerably within the past year, due to the closing of many war activities and the demobilization of thousands of "war workers" who had been in the city for two or three years, there has been no decrease in attendance upon the services at Mount Vernon Place, the Representative Church of Southern Methodism in the Capital City. This statement can be made most positively, because the attendance on the services is always measured by the capacity of the church. Some one had the curiosity, a few Sundays ago, to count those who were standing throughout the sermon, and those who stood or sat in the foyer. There were 183 standing in the aisles, and 92 in the foyer. This, it should be remembered, was after a row of folding chairs had been placed in each aisle and inside the channel, and eight chairs had been placed on the platform on either side of the pastor's seat. It so happens that this count was made on Sunday, January 25; but the result would have been practically the same on any other Sunday, regardless of sleet or snow or rain or other untoward weather. If there has been a reduction in the numbers seeking admission, it has been reflected only in a reduction of those turned away; for every Sunday morning scores and sometimes hundreds arrive as late as 11 o'clock, and are forced to leave because unable to get into the building.

These statements are sufficient to show that the Representative Church is succeeding wonderfully. Indeed, one frequently hears the opinion expressed that it is the most successful church in American Protestanism, taking everything into consideration.

There is ample basis for such a view. Measured by the standard of dollars and cents, it is not the most successful Protestant church in the country, but it is taking care of its current expenses with ease, notwithstanding an increase in those expenses of considerably more than 100 per cent in the past two years. One big item of this increase has been the advertising bill, for Dr. Chappell believes strongly in advertising, and his use of it here has more than justified his faith in its efficacy as a means of aiding the work of the church. Another additional expenditure is represented in the employment of an assistant pastor. It is already apparent, however, that these two items are not really expenses—both are paying investments.

Tested by the spiritual results achieved, however, there is little doubt that the Representative Church is doing the biggest things in America. The secret of this success lies very largely in the wonderful power of the pastor, Rev. Clovis G. Chappell. He reaches the average man—and there are many whom that description fits. He is a man well versed in literature, sociology, and theology, but better than all, he is well versed in human nature, and it is plain to all who come in contact with him that he maintains constant contact with the spirit of Christ. He does not preach theology, but pleads for right living and loyalty to the plain and simple principles of Christian duty. His plea is always for recruits for a fighting army of Christians, and few of his appeals are fruitless. After every service he opens the door of the church. At first this method seemed a little out of place in staid old Mount Vernon Place, but it was not long before it began to be apparent that "staidness" is not an asset in a live church. New members were rapidly recruited, the activities of the congregation began to increase, and a revival of religion seemed to animate the whole church. Unlike many such revivals, this is not temporary, but the zeal of the church continues to grow apace with the membership. There are now nearly 1,700 on the rolls of the church—more than twice the number when Dr. Chappell began his wonderful work in May, 1918.

The assistant pastor, Rev. M. Leo Rippy, began his service in December, fresh from more than two years' work in various army camps and cantonments. The insight into the hearts of young men which he gained in this work is one of the valuable parts of his equipment for the duties that fall upon him at Mount Vernon Place. He is one of the livest propositions in Washington. The good results of his faithful work are becoming more and more apparent every week, though his service has covered less than two months at this writing.

There is no doubting the fact that the Representative Church is attracting the attention of thinking people from all parts of the world, for representatives of the best Christian thought of the world are to be found in Washington. As is well known, it has become the most important Capital of the world, and it is no mean distinction that Southern Methodism can claim in her Representative Church. It is the only church of its kind in the city, and besides, it is the best attended and most active Protestant church in the Capital, if not in America.

Recently the Baptists of America, emulating the exampie of Southern Methodism, have undertaken the raising of funds for the erection of a representative Baptist church in Washington, to be called the Roger Williams Memorial. It is understood that they are meeting with success, and that construction of the building may be expected to begin within the near future. Mount Vernon Place will of course welcome this addition to the Christian forces of the National Capital, and hopes that the fullest measure of success will crown the efforts of the Baptists.

These lines are written, not with any idea of boasting of the success of the Representative Church. Far from it. The undertaking is that of the church at large, and to those generous and larsighted Southern Methodists who have given of their means toward the enterprise the credit is due. The members of the local congregation feel that they are, in a sense, the trustees of the enterprise, and that an occasional report of its work is not only of interest to the church at large, but is due to those who have made possible this great work in the Master's name.

SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL, 1920.

The programme for the 1920 session of Seashore Divinity School will be ready for announcement in a few days. Again our committee has provided a rich and rare treat, and fortunate indeed will be the preachers who can attend.

The date of the session for this year is Juno 22 to July 1. The morning and evening hours will be full of instructive and inspiring platform addresses. The afternoons will be free for sweet fellowship, recreation or rest.

One of the interesting features will be the lecture, or sermon (as the appointee may elect) from a representative of each of the three patronizing Conferences. Representative men have been chosen. They are fully acquainted with our section, and thus will have a fine opportunity to speak their minds.

The undergraduate instruction will be the very best that it is possible to provide. Every preacher taking the course of study should make a determined effort to be present and have the advantage of the splendid lectures of these competent instructors. Examination will be given and certificates and diplomas conferred as heretofore. Let all undergraduates remember that these certificates and diplomas are as good as those from the Correspondence School, the General Conference being the judge.

Comfortable lodging and boarding quarters at reasonable rates will be provided for all who attend. Ample cottages on the grounds and boarding houses conveniently near will be engaged to care for all. Everything will be done to make one's stay a delight and have him form a fixed and steady purpose to be a regular participant in the privileges of the school.

Let every preacher make careful note of the date—June 22 to July 1, 1920—and begin at once resolutely to shape his plans for sharing the life-enlarging potencies and influences of the Seashore Divinity School.

ON WHICH SIDE DO YOU STAND?

By Richard H. Edmonds, Editor Manufacturers Record, Baltimore, Md.

The liquor traffic has wrecked more lives than war. It has brought more sorrows and sufferings to women and children than all the other curses which the devil has fastened upon mankind.

Its prosperity has been fertilized by the tears of womanhood; it was founded on broken hearts, on wrecked bodies and eternally damned souls.

It has been the creator and upholder of rotten politics.

It has helped to fill the dens of vice, and it has encouraged immorality that it might thereby increase its accursed profits.

It was upheld by and its influence upheld houses of ill-fame as instigators of liquor consumption and all other body and soul-destroying agencies of hell.

It fed the fires of lust that it might fatten on the sin it created.

It filled the land with saloons, the hotbed of personal and of political corruption, which were the doors that led straight down to ruin and to hell hereafter.

Indeed, it turned millions of homes into hells.

It brutalized its agents and damned its followers.

It stretched out its slimy, stinking, rotten hands into the political life of the nation.

It browbeat or bulldozed or bribed legislators and business men alike.

It sought to destroy even the banks whose officials were opposed to its hell-born power.

The slave trade of olden days, in its vilest forms, when in order to destroy all evidence the miserable wretches were dumped overboard to drown when the slave ship was pursued by British cruisers, was angelic in character as compared with the liquor traffic.

If every slave ever held in capitivity had been treated as inhumanly as were some by brutish masters, the sufferings of all would have been mild as compared with the monster of the liquor traffic.

Germany's vilest crimes were no worse than the work of this hell-born, hell-directed liquor business.

And yet when the nation had loosened its clutches, when its strangle-hold on the morality and the political safety of the country had been almost broken, it once more lifts its tiger-like spirit that it may again suck the nation's morality and political honor.

Once more the harlots, the whoremongers, the liars, the touts, the race-track gamblers, the licentious of all classes unite to restore the reign of this king of death who gloats over ruined bodies and wrecked souls.

And to their everlasting shame some men who profess to love honor and virtue, men who do not want to see their sons and daughters the victims of this licentious power, are standing on the side of the evil forces arrayed against individual and national morality. Surely they must be ashamed of their co-workers and co-partners.

When in the great judgment day they stand with uncovered souls before Almighty God, how many of them will be forced to see pass before them in awful agony the long procession of souls eternally damned because of their influence in behalf of the liquor traffic! How many through eternity will hear the wail of broken-hearted women and the cry of suffering of the starved and dishonored children whose husbands and fathers were led to ruin by the work of these so-called men of respectability! Of some it shall be said, "And in hell he lifted up his eyes."

BUREAU OF EVANGELISM.

A Bureau of Evangelism has just been organized under the Department of Home Missions. This Bureau will serve as a clearing house for evangelists and churches. It will keep a chart with the slate of all the evangelists upon it. The Bureau will know at all times when evangelists have open dates. As changes are made in dates the evangelists will keep the Bureau informed. Churches desiring the help of evangelists can communicate direct with the evangelists or with the Bureau. After a pastor has tried two or three evangelists and finds their slates full, he may become discouraged; if he will correspond with the Bureau he can find out at once who is available at the time he desires help. It will be the pleasure of the Bureau to furnish such information at all times. Address,

AS THE EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION SEES IT.

At its recent meeting the Educational Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, did more than deliver addresses and listen to the deliverance of addresses. It went on record as favoring certain courses of procedure with reference to the approaching educational campaign and other questions which vitally affect our entire educational program. There were present at the meeting one hundred and twenty-five educational leaders representing our universities, colleges, academies and Annual Conference Boards of Education. Believing that the church should know and would like to know the matured convictions and judgment of such a body of men, I am here presenting certain resolntions which the Association adopted.

Amount of "Askings" Should Be Increased.

The judgment of the Association with reference to the amount for which the campaign should be made is clearly set forth in the following resolutions which were adopted after a full and free discussion:

"Whereas, we, the members of the Educational Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, recognize that a great opportunity for serving our day and generation, and all days and generations, is now within our grasp and that our church and country are now ready and waiting to hear the call of Christian Edncation; and

Whereas, the conditions obtaining when the universities, colleges and academies made a statement of their financial needs before the session of our last General Conference have so changed that the needs then stated are found wholly inadeqnate to meet present day needs; and

Whereas, our bnsiness men will want to know if the amount apportioned to each university, college, academy, if paid will put it upon a permanent basis and enable it to give the quality of edncation equal to the best in our country; and

Whereas, we feel that our people ought to have the judgment of our leaders in the work of Christian Education as to the amount necessary to properly equip and endow our institutions of learning; and

Whereas, other Christian denominations have planned large and liberal things for schools, and have thereby aroused the interest and enthusiasm of their people;

Therefore, be it resolved (1), That we ask the Commission to make such an apportionment to each university, college and academy as will pnt it upon a permanent basis and will enable it to do the quality and extent of work demanded by its rank and classifications; and (2) that if any Conference has more schools than can be thus cared for, we recommend such consolidations, correlations or classifications as will render the duplication of work impossible and will prevent the competition of one school with another. (3) We declare it as our conviction that our great church is now ready for an advance movement along the whole of our "far-flung" battle line, and call upon our leaders to give the command to "go forward."

The Committee on Resolutions.

On the first day of the meeting a Committee on Resolutions was appointed and instructed to prepare a statement expressing the sentiment of the Association upon the educational work of the church. At the last session of the meeting this committee's report was adopted as follows:

"Your Committee on Resolutions begs here to submit the following report:

We wish to express our high appreciation of the work of education which the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has already done under conditions which have not been altogether favorable. The time has come, however, when circumstances demand a great forward movement in the educational work, if we would meet the demands which are upon us and measure up to our great responsibility as a part of the church of our Lord Jesus Christ. When we consider the fact that other institutions in onr country are in campaigns for millions of dollars we realize that we, too, must be supplied with adequate funds or else be greatly handicapped in our work.

We, therefore, resolve that we hail with satisfaction the Educational Campaign about to be inaugurated in our church whereby we hope to see all of our institutions put upon a solid financial basis.

That we express our gratification at the faithful and impartial work being done by the Educational Campaign Commission in charge of the campaign and pledge to them our hearty and united co-operation in carrying out the plans submitted to us, and

That with confident expectation we look forward to the loyal and enthusiastic support in this great work of our beloved church by the faithful pastors and the devoted people of Southern Methodism.

That we desire to emphasize the intention of the General Conference that the Educational Campaign have the complete right of way in the church during the ensuing two years and the full co-operation of the entire membership, lay and official, and that the Campaign be productive of increased interest in our educational institutions and also productive of a strong spiritual nplift among the people."

The Annual Conference Boards of Education.

Annual Conference Boards of Education are eligible to membership in the Association on exactly tho same basis as the educational institutions of the church. Twenty-nine Conferences were represented at this meeting by thirty-eight delegates chosen by their Boards of Education. These representatives of the Conference Boards held a sectional meeting at which they discussed problems peculiar to the Annual Conference Boards of Education, particularly the Conference Secretary of Education. The views of these Conference representatives upon certain educational questions are set forth in the following report of this section to the Association:

"The Committee on Findings of the Conference Boards of Education Section presents the following resolntions as embodying the views and sentiments expressed in the meeting of that section:

Whereas, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is projecting a great campaign for the purpose of strengthening its educational system, and

Whereas, we fully realize that in the present educational crisis more adequate provision must be made for the support of our schools and colleges, and

Whereas, we steadfastly believe that without those institutions the church cannot continue to fulfill the teaching mission committed to her by her Master, and that these institutions are not only essential to the life of the church, but are also vitally essential to the highest interests of society; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That as Conference secretaries of education and members of the Conference Boards of Education we do hereby assure the Educational Campaign Commission and the General Secretary of Education of our whole-hearted and enthusiastic support in this great undertaking.

2. That we recommend that, in accordance with tho provisions of the Discipline, the Annual Conference Board of Education be recognized as the unit of organization for the Annual Conference in this campaign.

3. That realizing that the office of Conference secretary has in the past too often been regarded in the light of a nominal appointment and a mere sinecure of Conference preferment, we desire to say that we believe the time has come in the history of our church when the Conference secretaries must play a very important part in the advancement of our educational interests. The Conference missionary secretaries have had much to do with the magnificent progress of our church has made in missions during recent years. There is no reason why the Conference secretaries of education might not render equally effective service in the great forward movement in education now being contemplated. We would, therefore, urge upon all our Conference secretaries of education the careful performance of the following duties as being of vital importance in this year of preparation for the campaign.

(1) To visit the district conferences and to deliver before them an address on Christian Education and the Educational Campaign. In cases where a secretary cannot attend all the district conferences in his Conference, he is urged to see to it that some well-informed substitute shall represent him in his absence.

(2) To see to it that the Educational Anniversary be properly magnified at the Annual Conference session.

(3) To distribute educational literature among the preachers and laymen of his Conference.

(4) To seek to bring the high schools of his Conference into closer relation with our church schools. During the month of June he should make an effort to secure from the pastors of his Conference the names of all pupils graduating from the high schools in their several charges. The names of Methodists and of those inclined toward the Methodist Church should be properly designated on these lists. All names thus secured should be furnished to our colleges located in that territory. He should also urge upon our pastors and others who may have opportunity to do so, the duty of seeking opportunity to address high school students in order to present the advantages offered to them in our colleges.

(5) To seek out promising candidates for the ministry and to help them to secure financial assistance for their education in cases where such assistance may be needed. This work is to be done in co-operation with the Department of Ministerial Supply and Training.

(6) We would suggest to Conference Boards of Education that the usefulness and efficiency of a Conference secretary may be largely increased by a proper appropriation for the necessary expenses of the office, such as postage, printing, stenographic work and traveling expenses."

Recommends That Campaigns Be United.

The Association's attitude towards a united campaign for education and for the Superannuates is shown by the resolution adopted as follows:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Association that it would be to the best interests of the church if the two proposed campaigns for our educational institutions and for the Superannuate Endowment Fund were combined into one campaign, and that we, therefore, request the Educational Campaign Commission and the Board of Finance to combine their campaigns, if such a combination is found to be practicable and wise after a careful consideration of the whole question."

Support of College of Bishops Sought.

As it did at Memphis last year, the Association again passed resolutions requesting the active support of the bishops in the approaching educational campaign. These resolutions are as follows:

"Resolved, That we urgently request the College of Bishops to give the movement their active support and that they prepare for the church a message on the Educational Campaign.

Also, That we express our appreciation for the services of Bishop Cannon and that we ask his continued co-operation in completing the campaign, and, if necessary, we request the College of Bishops to grant him such time as may be necessary to carry out the Educational program."

JIM'S EASTER LILY.

Jim had been "one of the boys" and a favorite, because he was always so cheery and on the lookout to "help a fellow." Every newsboy in the crowd would swear by Jim. Many times when he had sold his papers he would help one of the "midgets" as he called the smaller boys, by crying his papers for him, and being bright, quick and pleasant, trade usually came his way.

There were many sides to Jim's character. He was a hard worker, a good fighter if it was necessary, a fine story teller between working hours, and in his soul was a great love for flowers.

When he was missed from the usual corner some one would say: "Jim? Oh, he's likely looking at the posies in the flower store," and every Saturday night would find him with a blossom of some sort in his buttonhole. He longed to see the country with its stretch of hills and fields, its clear sky and the wood where the violets grew.

"Just think," he said to his little friend Bob, "you can pick 'em right off the ground without payin' or even askin.' Mother said so."

Jim had no anticipation of seeing the outside of the busy city streets, but he did, and it all came about in this way:

There was a large fire and the boys were rushing headlong after the engines, when a little fellow stumbled and fell in front of a moving car. Jim saw the danger and made a hurried leap to his rescue, fairly throwing the child from the track, but he had no time to save himself, and when he opened his eyes again it was in the hospital ward.

The weeks went by and Jim was sadly missed. He said to one of the boys: "Seems to me if I could get to the country I'd be well again," and then his voice grew husky; "but I couldn't sell papers there, could I?"

Easter was very near and Jim began to ask the boys how the flower stores looked.

"Lots of fine lilies, ain't there? I'd have one this year, and all my own; been saving up for it for a long while, but now I'll forget it."

There was a special meeting of the boys that night and it was decided that Jim was to go to the country, but how?

The boys had planned to buy an Easter lily for him, but it had not entered their minds that they could do more, but when the heart is in the work it usually wins, and it did this time. They decided to tell Jim's story to his old customers. They knew many of them by sight and were sure they would listen, for they had often asked for him. One old gentleman was especially interested in him, and after asking many questions he said if one of the boys would go with him he would go to the hospital to see Jim.

Bob was chosen to go, as he had been there the oftenest, living not far from the hospital. When Jim saw Bob and the old gentleman his face brightened with pleasure.

"It's very kind of you, sir, to come to see me."

"I have missed you, my boy; you have sold me my evening paper for a long time."

He then talked of many things, drawing out the story of Jim's life. He promised to come again soon, and when he and Bob were alone he said earnestly: "Jim is a worthy fellow and I will help you to get him into the country, but you must do your best first."

The boys did their best and their fund grew steadily, nickel by nickel, and sometimes a dime found a home in the box. The day before Easter they again counted their money and the old man stopped on the corner.

"Well, boys, what have you by this time?"

"Five dollars. Will that pay his fare, do you think, sir? We could send him more after a while."

"You're a plucky lot of boys, but what about the lily you were going to buy? That will cost you something."

"Oh, we've bought it."

Inquiry told that the boys had gone without their dinners many days to buy Jim's lily.

"Well, boys, to-morrow morning, if you will all come to my house and bring the lily along, I will contribute my share to the fund."

The boys were puzzled and yet they believed in the old gentleman, and Easter morning, with as clean hands and faces as they could muster, they wended their way to the beautiful house on Lowell Street.

A colored servant opened the door and treated them as politely "as if we were real gents," Bob said afterward. He led them upstairs and through a long hall and opened a door into a beautiful, sunny room.

"Come right in, boys," the old gentleman called, cheerily, but they stood motionless in the doorway. There sat Jim in a big wheel chair.

Bob nearly dropped the lily, but Jim put out his hand and said: "Oh, boys, did you bring it to me? How good of you!" And then such a visit as they had!

The old gentleman slipped out of the room and then Jim told them how he had been to see him each day and finally had brought him here.

"He lives here alone, boys, and hasn't a child in the world," and here Jim broke down, but the old gentleman was there to finish the story.

"Yes, Jim is to be my boy now, and he has you, his true, staunch friends, to thank for what has come to him in the time of his misfortune, and the sacrifice you have made for him will some day be rewarded."

The boys' faces were radiant and no jealousy found a place in their hearts, for, as said before, they would swear by Jim.

He shook their hands warmly and some color stole into his face. "You're bricks, boys, every one of you, and I thank you for the lily and all the rest."

With lighter hearts the boys went out into the world again.

Jim's lily nodded and the Easter bells rang on. —Exchange.

HEARTS TO LET

For our guidance Jesus tells us of a man whose garden of the heart was to let. The occupier had swept and cleaned it. The weeds were gone, the stones were cast out, the trees pruned, and the hedgerows sheared. Every bit of the garden of the heart was in excellent preparation for a good tenant, but that tenant was not forthcoming. The owner of it grew tired of making improvements and advances. So he simply neglected it and invited back the things he had cast out, and offered it with free tenancy to seven other evil spirits, so that after they had done their wicked work the last state was worse than the first. Naturally, there is a wise tenancy and a false one of the human heart; but the great peril is when the heart garden is waiting for the tenant. That was the peculiar danger of the man in Jesus's story. His peril was the peril of the empty heart. His soul lay vacant, that was the pity of it. There was room for the ousted devil to return. "Some men are tempted because their hearts are full," so says Dr. G. H. Morrison. "Life is so rich, so strong in a thousand interests, there is no room in it for Christ at all." But many are tempted because the garden of their heart is empty, and the old ways creep back again to stay. It is not sufficient to expel the wrong; we must fill the emptied heart-garden with noble things. A tenantless heart-garden—a soul that is to let—is a standing invitation to the devil. But there is always a wise tenancy, and it is that for which Christ makes his earnest appeals. And why a wise tenancy? Because the wise tenant will produce under the Master gardener's instructions the best that his allotment of life will produce. How then, is the garden of your heart tenanted? What is it really producing? When the Master gardener comes will he find fruit, healthy and good, in it? Will he find the roses of character and conduct there? Will he find the fruits of the spirit there in rich abundance? Or will he find merely the weeds of sin there? There is no doubt that the ideal heart-garden is that wherein there is enough of the best and to spare.—W. Christie.

ARE YOU ONE OF THEM?

How many Christians are commonly spoken of with a "but." "She is a real 'Christian woman, but she is a terrible talker." "That is a good sort of man, but he can drive a very hard bargain." Another is "a very worthy man, but he has such a bad temper." What do these "buts" arise from? From allowing ourselves to think lightly of little things; and so we do not walk circumspectly or accurately; and thus we bring disgrace, so far as it is possible to bring disgrace, upon God and his service.—W. Hay Aitken.

Editorial

THE SWORD OF THE SPIRIT—A THREE-MINUTE TALK.

The Word of God—the Bible—contains the truth that arms the Christian against all the attacks of the evil one. It is, indeed, the "sword of the Spirit" which puts to flight the enemies of the soul. Its use by Jesus himself is a demonstration of its power in the most dangerous and critical situations.

But the Word of God is more than a weapon of defense—it is the surest means we have of making a successful attack upon the strongholds of personal indifference to moral issues and the social antagonism to things spiritual. In a strange way the mere reading of the Word sometimes seems to strike the deepest chords of spiritual need and to satisfy the unuttered longings of the heart. The following, related by a Christian worker in Mexico, is merely one of thousands of such instances: "A Mexican came to my door to wish a conference with me. He was the foreman of a group of workmen in the neighborhood. Hearing that I was a friend of the Mexican people, he came to me and in broken English told me his story. He had been a foreman in the mines, had been the interpreter at the steel works, and foreman in many places over workmen. He had been selected to conduct the Red Cross work among the Mexicans. One of his men brought a book one day to the mines which he did not understand. He showed it to the priest, and the priest told him it was a book he should not read; and told him to burn it. My caller, the foreman, prevailed on the man not to burn it, but to give it to him. Then he became very earnest after I had told him to teach it to others among his fellows. I had explained some passages to him. He said: 'No man tell me before so much as you about the book. I read it to myself. I was a bad man—I drink and gamble. I read the book; I don't know why it make me better man. I was better son for my father, a better man for my wife, a better father for my children. Now I like to help other men, not hurt them. I am foreman of all the Mexicans; you come to my house. I have them all there—you teach them the Bible.'" We can have no doubt but that this "sword of the Spirit" wrought as effectively in the lives of some of those others who were brought in reach of its flaming blade.

If we would fortify ourselves against evil, and equip ourselves for a successful warfare against the forces of wickedness, we need the Bible every day of our lives.

THE SEACHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL—A CORRECTION.

Our attention has been called to the fact that we were in error in our editorial last week, "Bringing Up the Course of Study," in the statement, "Let it not be forgotten that the law of the church now requires that the course of study be taken through the Correspondence School." We acknowledge our unfortunate lapse of memory for the moment and hasten to do all in our power to correct the wrong impression that was given by that erroneous statement. THE WORK OF THE SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL, AND OF ANY SIMILAR PREACHERS' INSTITUTE, RECEIVES EXACTLY THE SAME RECOGNITION BY THE CONFERENCE EXAMINING COMMITTEES THAT IS GIVEN TO THE WORK OF THE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL. The law governing the matter is found in paragraph 778, page 312, of the Discipline of 1918, as follows:

"In the case of English-speaking Conferences, the course for undergraduates shall be taken with the Correspondence School, or at a Preachers' Institute having the Conference courses of study as part of its work, and in each case an official statement testifying to the fact shall be presented to the Conference Examining Committee; on presentation of such statement; the Examining Committee shall test the applicant's knowledge of the course of study and shall report on the same to the Annual Conference."

We do not hesitate to urge the undergraduates of the three patronizing Conferences of the Seashore Divinity School to take advantage of the opportunity to complete their courses of study under the favorable auspices of that institution at the Seashore Camp Ground—its session this year embracing June 22-July 1. An admirable faculty will give instruction in the various courses, and the examination will be held under the most favorable circumstances.

Apart from the advantages offered the undergraduates, we do not know of a more delightful place for combining recreation with the opportunity for mental and spiritual development than is to be found at the Seashore Divinity School. We ourselves have missed only one or two sessions since its beginning, and we can bear personal testimony to the great value of the program that has been offered each year. It is worth all it costs to spend ten days at this delightful and profitable gathering.

A LASTING MONUMENT.

Money can do many things, but it cannot make a man. Manhood is composed of finer materials than are minted into the coin of the realm, and it is attained only by those who cultivate diligently the spiritual qualities of mind and heart.

Money itself is a poor memorial of him who has left little else. It may cause a day's wonder that Mr. So-and-so accumulated a vast fortune, which he left to his family at his death; but vast fortunes are often soon dissipated and those who possessed them fall back into the mass of those who have always walked in the common ways of life.

But money transmuted into an institution is an everlasting monument to the memory of him who had the ability to accumulate it and the wisdom and grace to expend it for the good of humanity. Men profess to be happy in the pursuit of wealth because its possession gives them power; but their real power is in the use they make of their wealth, rather than in its possession. If happiness is the goal of their efforts, let them put their money into forms that will endure forever, and succeeding generations will rise up and call them blessed.

There are scores of men and women in Louisiana and Mississippi who could enshrine their memory in the hearts of children yet to be born if they would invest only a part of their wealth in the institutions that stand for the betterment of all the people. Our orphanages, hospitals, schools and colleges, and our chartered funds for the relief of those who have a just claim upon our great material resources, furnish a magnificent opportunity for the building of monuments that will never crumble.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

"I have been reading the New Orleans Christian Advocate for about 46 years, "writes Rev. G. W. Huff, of Biloxi, Miss.

"Things are going well with both pastor and people on the Mantachie charge," writes Rev. T. G. Adair, from Ratliff, Miss.

Rev. H. J. Maddox, of Silver Creek, Miss., reports that his work is moving along nicely. He is preaching regularly to large and appreciative congregations.

Miss Olive Watson, of Pelahatchie, Miss., is another friend of the Advocate who dates her acquaintance with it to childhood days. "It was the first paper I ever read," she writes.

Miss Pagie Bailey, of Lexington, Miss., is still another of our highly-valued long-time friends. She has been reading the Advocate from her earliest recollection, and it holds a high place in her esteem.

Mr. Homer E. Turner, son of Rev. A. W. Turner, Superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, is one of the prohibition inspectors connected with the office of the Prohibition Director for Louisiana.

Mr. D. A. McKinnon, of Pachuta, Miss., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, speaks in very high terms of his pastor, Rev. M. R. Jones. We appreciate greatly his kindly words concerning the paper.

Rev. P. H. Howse, the pastor, reports that the second quarterly conference of the Prentiss charge was a most helpful occasion. The presiding elder, Rev. W. B. Jones, preached two inspiring sermons, and all the reports were encouraging.

Rev. Harry W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, writes that all the work of the church is prospering in the bounds of his district. "I am in the midst of one of the very best years of my life," he says.

We regret to learn that Rev. F. R. Power, our energetic and successful pastor at Texas Avenue Church, Shreveport, La., has had much sickness in his family this year. He himself was ill during most of the month of March. We are glad to know, however, health conditions are improving.

We learn from a personal note from Bishop H. C. Morrison that he has the material ready for a second volume of Gospel messages, similar to the volume already issued. We are sure the church will look forward to its appearance with heightened interest because of the value of the first volume.

Rev. M. L. White, of De Kalb, Miss., has sent us fifty new subscriptions and one renewal from his charge this year—a fine record. We are not surprised to learn that all his work prospers. The Sunday schools are taking on new life, the stewards are well organized, congregations are growing, and preacher and people are happy.

We thank Rev. V. C. Curtis, presiding elder of the Greenville District, North Mississippi Conference, for a printed copy of the program for his district conference, in session this week at Rosedale, Miss., accompanied by a cordial invitation to be present. We should greatly enjoy the privilege of attending. Bishop Kilgo was announced to preside.

The Easter service at Jackson, La., where Rev. F. B. Hill is pastor, was attended by the largest congregation since the days when Centenary College was located there. Nine persons were received into the membership of the church on profession of faith. The Easter offering for the orphanage from the charge will exceed $80.

We greatly enjoyed a call from Dr. D. M. Key, of the faculty of Millsaps College, on Friday of last week. He was returning to Jackson from Baton Rouge, La., whither he had accompanied the baseball team for a series of games with Louisiana State University. We were glad to hear from him encouraging reports of the work of the college this year.

Mr. Geo. Mead, of Siloam Springs, Ark., honored the Advocate office with a call while passing through the city one day last week. He had been leading the singing in a meeting in Mobile, Ala., conducted by Rev. C. Norman Guice, one of our general evangelists. Brother Guice was formerly a member of the Mississippi Conference, where he has many friends.

The meeting at Biloxi, Miss., in which the pastor, Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, was assisted by Rev. Jas. V. Bennett and Rev. Jas. M. Lewis, has been rich in results. On Sunday, April 11, twenty members were received on profession of faith, and a considerable number have applied for membership since then. The meeting will continue through next Sunday.

Rev. B. F. Lewis, superintendent, Mrs. S. F. Riley, field secretary, and Mrs. Ida G. Terry, lady supervisor, of the Methodist Orphanage, Jackson, Miss., were in the city last week attending the meeting of the Louisiana State Sunday School Association and the National Congress of Social Work. They honored the Advocate office with a call on Tuesday morning.

We do not wonder that Rev. T. J. Holladay, of Plain Dealing, La., has a smile on his face and in his heart. He serves a fine people who love their pastor, and he has butter and milk, chickens and eggs, and an abundant supply of vegetables fresh from his own garden. He brought a smile to the faces of the editor and the business manager, too, by sending us a fine list of subscribers recently.

Mr. Stephen S. Thomas, Louisiana Conference Centenary Secretary, has succeeded Mr. C. F. Niebergall as Conference Centenary Treasurer, so that all Centenary business will hereafter be attended to from one office, 327 Carondelet street, New Orleans. Mr. Niebergall, one of the leading business men of the city, rendered splendid service to the Centenary cause during his incumbency of the treasurership.

The latest report of the offering for the Orphanage by our church at Mansfield, La., on Easter Sunday, places the amount at $1242.56, instead of $1250, as reported in our last issue. The discrepancy, which is not serious, of course, was due to a slight miscalculation of the returns when the offering was taken. The good people of Mansfield have done nobly in making this splendid contribution to the support of this worthy institution of the church.

We have just received the sad news from Mrs. Pauline Randle Tharpe, through Rev. A. S. J. Neill, that her mother, Sister T. S. Randle, has been seriously ill at her home in Yoakum, Texas. While she was a little better at the time of writing, Sister Randle desired that request be made through the Advocate for prayer in her behalf. We are sure her many friends in Louisiana will earnestly pray that she may soon be restored to perfect health.

Rev. A. C. Holder, presiding elder of the Holly Springs District, North Mississippi Conference, is somewhat of a record-breaker, according to the South-Reporter. On a recent Sunday afternoon he left Holly Springs in his car at 3 o'clock for Pine Mountain, five miles away, where he organized a Sunday school, preached a sermon, received a member into the church, administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, held a quarterly conference, and was back at home before 6 o'clock. He evidently believes in the strenuous life.

Mrs. M. E. Hawkins, of Hattiesburg, Miss., widow of Rev. Gabriel Hawkins who, at the time of his decease in 1885 was an active itinerant of the Mississippi Conference, in renewing her subscription, states that she has been a reader of the Advocate since the beginning of its publication; for it has been in her home, not only during all the sixty-two years since her marriage, but also during her girlhood days, as her father, H. N. Lawrence, of Crawford, Miss., was a subscriber to the paper from the beginning of its publication.

The South and East McComb charge, Mississippi Conference, under the pastorate of Rev. W. A. Terry, is making splendid progress. The ladies of the South McComb church entertained the ladies of the East McComb church on a recent Thursday afternoon. An interesting program was rendered and delightful refreshments served. In connection with the meeting, the parsonage was given a heavy "pounding." The reports at the second quarterly conference, held on April 4, were encouraging. The congregations are growing at each church.

Dr. J. B. Mitchell, pastor of First M. E. Church, South, Jacksonville, Fla., was one of the principal speakers at the meeting of the National Congress of Social Work, held at the Athenaeum on last Sunday evening. Dr. Mitchell is a native of Mississippi, an alumnus of Millsaps College, and a distinguished minister of our church. It was a signal honor for him to be selected to represent Protestant Christianity in its relation to social work at this gathering of distinguished social workers from all parts of the world. Needless to say, his message was forceful and inspiring.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Psychology, as a science, is a study in itself. Its teachers and exponents are as varied as the phases of the moon, so far as their ideas of mental phenomona are concerned. Yet every appeal for final judgment must be made to consciousness. This is the Ultima Thule. Beyond this lies the unknown so far as human power of thought may reach. "To know is to live," cries the sage and "To believe is to know," says the Master. Faith, then, is the crowning glory of Christianity. It teaches men to believe that they may know, and this faith finds its ultimate in what Jesus taught and did. Beyond the Alps lies Italy, with its sunny plains and terraced, vine-clad hills; beyond the heights of faith lie sunnier plains, and hills of everlasting verdure aglow with light of immortal radiance. Communion and fellowship with God in Christ, through the ministry and presence of the blessed Spirit, is the ultimate reach of human consciousness. It is soul knowing. In this, and beyond this, lies heaven.

Yesterday I saw a flock of robins gather for a winter's feast in a holly tree growing in a neighbor's door-yard. What a striking combination of color! The dark green foliage and crimson berries of the tree, the burnished slate on wing and back of the birds and the brilliant shields of red on their breast were interesting to any lover of nature. "Doth God care for birds?" He who made nature's beauties and nature's scenes a revelation of divine life asks this question. No storehouse and barns for them, yet the winter green, the haw and holly glow with scarlet berries; field and forest hold in store abundance for these creatures of His providence. He guides them in their flight from other lands to this; he stores their winter food in close-sealed shields of brown and red; then, anon, clothes the trees with rustling covering of leaves to hide their nests. No wonder they sing—the poet says—His praises. He cares for you, doubting one—you are of more value. Bryant wrote this. Read the entire poem again. It will do you good.

"He who from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone
Will lead my steps aright."

I heard a story of a certain fellow who was making extensive boasts of his prowess to beat mightily any adversary, from county, State, or the entire country, who was laid low by a well-aimed blow from a doughty little Irishman. He won and apologetically complained that he had "covered too much territory." Now "covering territory" is what many men of many minds are endeavoring to do, with varied movements, plans and purposes, in the religious world to-day. These adventurers, like the navigators of a past century, claim all by right of discovery, and forthwith begin to subsidize and exploit the same. No man or men, can conduct a great religious movement successfully from behind office doors and through sending circular letters among churches. The world is the field and is white to the harvest, but reapers must enter this field and bear the heat and toil of the day. The "personal touch" can neither be hired nor bought. Come on, friend, the field is wide, but you can't hire the busy reapers already in the field. There are empty churches, empty hearts and hands, empty lives all over this country. Go fill them.

On Friday evening, January 9, 1920, the angel of death entered our home and took the gentie spirit of our precious mother home to the City of God. Mrs. SALLIE (SUDDUTH) WATSON was born Sept. 21, 1850, and was married to C. F. Watson in 1870. To this union were horn four sons and six daughters. She united with the Methodist Church in childhood, and lived a consecrated life. For many years she was a subscriber to the Advocate, and in the declining years of her life she kept in close touch with the church that she loved through the columns of her paper. Her life was spent in doing good and in trying to rear her children in the ways of truth and righteousness. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Pelahatchie by the side of her husband. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. W. Chisholm. The beautiful flowers that covered her grave were a fit emblem of the purity that characterized her life. She leaves five daughters, two sons, a number of grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. But we do not grieve as those that have no hope, for we know that she is waiting for us on the other shore.

HER DAUGHTER.

Sister SUSAN MISSOURI BROWN was born in Newton County, Mississippi, July 17, 1837, and departed this life December 6, 1919, making her at the time of her demise eighty-two years, four months and nineteen days oid. She came to Louisiana with her parents when she was ten years old, and located in what is now Lincoln Parish. On November 16, 1875, she was married to James Samuel Brown, with whom she lived happily until September 21, 1900, when he was called from labor to rest. Sister Brown was converted in early life and joined the M. E. Church, South, at oid Wesley Chapel church, one of the oldest churches in Lincoln Parish. She was a devout and consecrated Christian from the time that she joined the church until the day of her death. The writer served as her pastor for two years, and can testify to her heing one of God's true and faithful children. For several years she had been faiiing in health and could not attend the services of the sanctuary as often as she had done in former years; but her mind and heart were always there. She leaves one brother, one sister, several stepchiidren and a number of relatives and friends who will mourn her going away. Her body was laid to rest in the Wesley Chapel cemetery on Saturday, December 6, 1919, the writer conducting the funeral services. We feel sure that she has gone to claim the eternal home that has heen prepared for her. H. J. BOLTZ, Pastor.
Clay, La.

On January 28, 1920, Mrs. CHAS. A. REDDING, nee Sallie A. Linfield, entered into the restful abode of the righteous. She was the daughter of the late Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, D.D., of the Mississippi Conference. She was converted and joined the church early in life. She possessed many Christian graces, which developed into strong characteristics of a deeply consecrated life. Her natural endowments of heart and mind were large personal assets which entered largely into the formation of a matured life that was characterized by trueness, sincerity, and integrity; while modesty, the crowning virtue in her life, was enthroned upon her hrow, clothed in the beautiful emblems of purity. In her young womanhood she was married to Chas. A. Redding. She became the mother of seven children, one of whom went to heaven in her infancy. The remaining six are left to inherit all the wealth of a life consecrated to the service of God. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor in the church at Terry, Miss., where she had spent so many hours in sweet communion with her Heavenly Father. Her remains were laid to rest by the side of her husband in the Terry Cemetery, to await the resurrection of the just. B. F. JONES.

L. B. HORTON, son of the late L. M. and Mrs. Lucy Horton, was horn, August 7, 1861, and departed this life, March 21, 1920, aged 58 years, 7 months and 14 days. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Conehatta, Miss.; in early life and lived a consistent member until his death. The home of Brother Horton was always a place of large welcome to the servant of God. It was a pleasure to be there. He succumbed to a second attack of pneumonia following an attack of influenza. We laid his body to rest in the cemetery at Conehatta church. We expect to see him clothed in white in the morning of the resurrection. His wife preceded him to heaven only a few years. Two daughters, three sons, one sister and four hrothers have lost a dear father and brother. May God's blessings richly abide with all the hereaved.
His Pastor, R. E. RUTLEDGE.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from our midst our faithful president and friend, Oliver Caruthers; and whereas in his death we feel that the League of the Sardis Methodist Church has lost one who was aiways true to duty, always trustful and helpful, always taking willingly the hard places where others shirk; and whereas the League will deeply miss his presence and leadership; be it resolved:

1. That we how in humble suhmission to the loving Father's will.
2. That we should strive to emulate his example of righteousness and unselfish service, and that the memory of his correct Christian life may he a daily inspiration to his loved ones and the members of the League.
3. That we wiil ever hold in remembrance the useful life, the splendid Christian character and the unseifish service of this dear one whom we had learned to trust and love.
4. That a copy of these resoluticns be sent to his hereaved family, to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, to the Southern Reporter and that a copy he spread upon the minutes of the Sardis Epworth League.

Sage and Sulphur Darkens Gray Hair

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Restore Color, Gloss and Attractiveness.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.—Adv.

LOSS OF APPETITE

Pimples and Other Eruptions—Mental and Physical Weariness.

They are all common at this time of year, and are all indications that the blood is wanting in the power to defend the body against infectious and contagious diseases, because they are all indications that it needs cleansing, enriching and vitalizing.

It is important to give them attention—it is in fact hazardous to neglect them.

Get Hood's Sarsaparilla today and begin taking it at once, regularly after eating and if convenient in a little hot water.

Remember, this medicine has given satisfaction to three generations, for the blood, stomach, liver and kidneys. It builds up the whole system. It makes food taste good.

For a gentle laxative or an active cathartic, take Hood's Pills. You will like them.

NUXATED IRON

For Red Blood, Strength and Endurance

THINK of the strong, healthy men and women you know—people who are prominent and who are doing things worth while and you will find that they usually possess remarkable force, vim and energy—the kind that simply brim over when the blood is filled with iron. Iron is red-blood food—it helps put strength and energy into the veins of men and roses into the cheeks of women. Nuxated Iron by enriching the blood and creating new blood cells strengthens the nerves, rebuilds the weakened tissues and helps to instill renewed energy and endurance into the whole system.

If people would only keep their blood filled with strength-giving iron by taking Nuxated Iron when they feel weak, run-down and nervous, they might readily build up their red-blood corpuscles and quickly become stronger and healthier in every way. Unlike the older inorganic products it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of weak, delicate people in two weeks' time. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Rev. W. C. Owen, General Superintendent of the Young People-Adult work, was with me last week helping in institutes at Dundee, Shelby, Boyle, Gunnison, and Greenville. The people appreciated the strong messages and other helpful services rendered at all these places.

Boyle is using an effective method of increasing the attendance in the Methodist and Baptist schools of the town. These enterprising schools have secured the wagons used in bringing the children to the consolidated school, to go each Sabbath for the children and bring them into the Sunday schools. The children and parents like the innovation and enjoy their Bible study. If you are using a method that gets better results, tell us about it.

The Greenville school is rapidly taking its place with the best in the Conference. Brother Lewis made his campaign for members, used the evangelistic studies, and as a result has the largest attendance and is receiving more additions to the church than in the history of the church. The one thing that embarrasses this church is a lack of room to care for the growing membership of the school. The needed room will be supplied in due time.

Revs. J. M. Wyatt, of Shelby, C. A. Northington, of Boyle, and E. E. McKeithen, of Gunnison, ordered the Evangelistic literature to give to the teachers of their respective schools. They mean to help train up a soul-winning church and a soul-nurturing church. There are many church members who have the impulse to lead others to a saving knowledge of Christ, but they do not know how. The man that puts the proper estimate upon the value of a soul will find time to teach others the art of this highest calling.

Do not forget to state to the people when you observe Sunday School Day, that the entire offering is used for the benefit of our own children and young people. The law says that one-fourth of the amount is to be sent by the Conference Treasurer to the General Board, but the General Board gives back to us that amount and often more than our Board remits. Also state that ten per cent of the amount raised in each district is to be used in making the district organization more effective. If our people only knew how badly we need money to extend our Sunday school work, and if they knew how carefully every dollar is expended, they would make an offering worthy of the cause. Send the entire amount of the offering to Rev. J. E. Stephens, New Albany, Miss.

The Sunday schools of our Conference have accepted 19 Centenary Specials. The amount paid on specials up to date is $4,447.69. There are one hundred other schools that would prefer a special to any other object for their contributions, if they only had some one to explain to them. If you are interested, write Mrs. W. T. Boswell, New Albany, Miss.

The following is an extract from a letter recently received from a teacher in the Tupelo school: "My Sunday school class decided to take the half share ($25) in the Girls' Dormitory in Havana, Cuba. When I presented the matter to them I was agreeably surprised at the expressions I got from them. One girl had been to Cuba and knew the godless Sabbaths characteristic of the land. For that reason she thought they needed to be taught the gospel. Another had heard a missionary from Cuba speak and had had her interest aroused in the Cubans. I was ashamed of my own lack of faith when I heard them speak."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

The Training School at Heidelberg, conducted by Rev. O. S. Lewis, was a success. A full report has not come in; but if the first reports are indicative, we will hear of many good things coming from this school.

Last Sunday was spent at West End, Laurel. This school, with what they promise to do, grades 80 per cent on the Standard of Efficiency. And they have pledged themselves to make their school 100 per cent. Brother Beasley starts well, and there are many indications of life and growth. The Sunday school attendance has almost tripled since the Annual Conference, which is a mighty good sign.

Brother Alford is building a beautiful church. The plan is the prettiest I have ever seen for the money. First Church is growing, too. Brother Roberts reports a men's class which he is teaching. This class seems to be getting hold of men who have been irregular in their church work.

I spent a while at Ellisville. Brother Moore is delighted and the people have received him kindly. I trust that this will prove a great year's work at Ellisville.

Sunday School Day is the last Sunday in this month or as near thereto as practicable. If you have not received your Sunday School Day programmes, write to me and we will send them to you. Programmes have been sent to all pastors. In the changing of the charges, it may be that some did not get enough. Let us know what you want and we will try to serve you.

Don't forget to elect delegates to go to the District Institutes.

We have just gotten complete files in our office of the Wesley Bible Classes. There are several interesting features about it. I will give you in concrete form a report on the standing of the districts.

Newton District leads the Conference with sixty Wesley Bible classes—thirty-five Young People-Adults, sixteen Seniors, and nine Intermediates.

Hattiesburg District follows with fifty-three classes—twenty-nine Young People-Adults, twelve Seniors, and twelve Intermediates.

Jackson District has forty-nine classes—twenty-four Young People-Adults, eight Seniors, and seventeen Intermediates.

Brookhaven District, forty-four classes—twenty-four Young People-Adults, eleven Seniors, and nine Intermediates. There will be thirteen classes to add to this, which will put Brookhaven second when these classes have been reported.

Seashore District, forty-one classes—twenty-one Young People-Adults, twelve Seniors, and eight Intermediates.

Meridian District, twenty-nine classes—twenty Young People-Adult, three Seniors, and seven Intermediates.

Port Gibson District, twenty-nine classes—seventeen Young People-Adults, five Seniors, seven Intermediates.

There are 457 Sunday schools in the Conference. There are only 300 organized classes. We will find that some of these have been inactive for years. I trust that each superintendent will help the district officers, so that they may use this branch of Sunday school work for the advancement of the cause of Christ.

Pray for the work and the workers.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

Special Notice.

The Conference-Wide Elementary Conference has had to be postponed indefinitely, much to our sorrow. I trust that we may be able to have a Conference-Wide Elementary Conference in the fall.

FROM STANDARD, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: Please allow me space to report our two weeks' meeting just closed last Sunday night at Standard, La. The leading people of Standard say that it was the best meeting held here for years, viewing it from any standpoint. Some of the results are: 22 accessions to the Methodist Church, a number of conversions, 2 tithers, several family altars, and a spiritual uplift to the Christian people who attended. One man who, with his wife and daughter and son united with the church, sent word to the bookkeeper of the mill plant to place his name on the subscription list for support of pastor for $10 per month.

The Easter offering for our Orphanage during the meeting was $70, and the people made up a purse of $174 for Rev. D. B. Boddie, who assisted in the meeting. We owe much to the fine class of men who are standing by our church here and making it possible for progress. The old-time Methodist doctrines were stressed, people surrendered their lives to Jesus and were saved. The outlook for the year seems good. We give God all the praise. H. B. VANDENBURG, P. C.

JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Jackson Conference will meet at D'Lo, Miss., May 10, at 7:30 p.m. (Please note change of date.) The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. S. F. Harkey, followed by the Lord's Supper.

The following committees are appointed: License To Preach—C. W. Crisler, C. C. Evans, G. G. Yeager.

For Admission—H. F. Tolle, C. H. Ellis, J. W. Chisholm.

The Sunday School Institute will be held May 11-12.

Renwar vs. Rheumatism.

It is certainly a pity that so many people suffer year after year the intense pains of rheumatism when it can be so easily expelled from the system by the simple treatment of taking Renwar Rheumatic Salts. Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood; and in order to effect a complete cure, it is necessary to entirely eliminate this acid from the blood. Renwar is guaranteed to relieve or your money is refunded. It contains no injurious drugs. It is the one sure remedy, and it does not in the slightest degree injure the stomach or affect the heart. Mr. Joseph L. Boehmer says, "One 50c bottle has done me more good than all sanatorium treatment, and what it did for me, why should it not do the same for others? Should any one doubt the virtue of Renwar and the certainty of curing this malady, refer them to me." For sale by druggists, price 50c; or by mail on receipt of price from WARNER DRUG COMPANY, NASHVILLE, TENN.—Adv.

REVIVAL AT WINONA, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: We closed a successful revival meeting of two weeks' duration on Easter Sunday. We were assisted by Rev. L. D. Patterson, a returned missionary from China. He did some great preaching, and much good.

There were thirty accessions as a result of the meeting, making fifty-seven accessions here since Conference. Our popular presiding elder, Rev. S. L. Pope, led the music. We had both a senior and junior choir. Our capable and faithful organist, Mrs. N. V. Hutchinson, played the pipe organ.

Brother Patterson will make Menlo, Ga., headquarters for the next several months. He and this pastor were classmates for three years at Vanderbilt University in the time when we thought the church owned the institution. Brother Patterson has spent the past seven years in China and did a great work as a missionary.

These are excellent people in Winona and they know how to take good care of a preacher and his family. Your friend and brother,

J. B. RANDOLPH.

GOOD REVIVAL NEWS.

We have just closed a good revival at Standard, La. The pastor, Rev. H. B. Vandenburg, is doing a good work there. The people all love him and he is planting Methodism deep in that section of the State. We had one of the best old-time revivals that I have seen in a long time. There was deep conviction and repentance, and these always bring results.

We had three family altars established, one to begin as a book-keeping tither and several others seriously considering tithing. We had twenty-two accessions to the church by vows and on profession of faith. Our church at Standard is in good shape.

I am going to-day to Trout, La., to sing for Brother Shaw in his meeting there, which is already under way and will run till the 25th. Pray for us.

My work is going well here at Rochelle and Selma. We have had sixty-three accessions since Conference, and are planning a great revival soon, which, we hope and believe, will put us ahead of anything in the district.

Brother May is well loved in these parts and is doing a great work on the Alexandria District. Look out for this district in her reports from time to time. She is going to lead the Conference if you don't "get up and hump." D. B. BODDIE.

A LETTER FROM A FRIEND.

Dear Brother Carley: Here comes a new writer, but an old reader of the Advocate. I have been a constant reader for a long time, and it comes next to my Bible. I love the Advocate and look forward to its coming. I read its pages with delight. It is inspiring to read from the pens of great men. I love to read Dr. S. A. Steel's letters, and I have had the pleasure of hearing him preach.

Our pastor, Brother D. H. Crowson, has given his people some inspiring sermons since he came to us, which have been very beneficial to us. We need soul-food that will steer the inner life, and to have this rich experience we must have this mountain-top prayer life.

Peter never could have won such a number of souls, had he not been under the anointing of the Holy Ghost. Isaiah felt his weakness until God anointed his lips with the oil of fire. Oh! how we need to be in earnest about the King's business!

Now, for fear I make my letter too long, I will close with best wishes to the Advocate and all its readers. May the Lord prosper the work of his servants as they labor from day to day. My prayer is that God will give them an ingathering of souls.

MRS. SUE PARKS.

FROM DE RIDDER, LA.

Dear Mr. Editor: Just a word from De Ridder. One of our presiding elders told me he regarded De Ridder as one of the important appointments of the Louisiana Conference. He was right in considering it as such. The town is steadily growing. People are coming and going. About their only reason for going is that they haven't house-room to remain.

We recently put on a campaign to clear all church indebtedness and to finish the church. We succeeded, due largely to the splendid efforts of a number of our consecrated laymen. We had as one objective $7500. Final reports may exceed this amount. So in the near future we expect to have our church dedicated.

Brother F. M. Freeman will preach for us in our revival meeting beginning on the 25th of this month. We believe things are in good shape for the revival, and we are praying for a great awakening. The fields are still white unto harvest, the laborers, comparatively speaking, are still few; but our gospel is still "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Brethren, pray for us.

C. E. FIKE, P. C.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Methodist Women of Baton Rouge Reorganize into One Large Body.

Instead of three organizations as have formerly existed in the First Methodist Church, the women met on masse Monday afternoon for the organization of one society. The new society starts with an enrollment of 130 members.

Until the election of a temporary chairman, the pastor, Rev. N. E. Joyner, presided. After the usual devotional exercises, he spoke of the campaign and efforts for evangelism which Methodism is putting forth this Holy Week for the evangelization of the world, and congratulated the women of First Church that in the very beginning of it they should take this step for unification and centralization of efforts in their own church. He paid a beautiful tribute to the work accomplished by the labors of each organization in the past, and their willingness to make the sacrifice of severing ties which have become dear to them through the association of years, that they might more fully meet the greater demands of the time. The Ladies' Aid has been an active organization for more than fifty years.

The women of Southern Methodism, through their Missionary Society, have accomplished great things in both home and foreign lands, in the maintenance of evangelistic work, schools and other educational work.

At the close of the meeting, Rev. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, congratulated the women on their forward move and spoke of the effect it would have in bringing the district forward. He said there was not a plan advanced in the late Centenary move which had not already been incorporated in Women's Missionary work.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. N. E. Joyner, president; Mrs. Goodale, vice president; Mrs. Bauer, recording secretary; Mrs. Johns, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Stearns, treasurer; Mrs. Lower, assistant treasurer.

Tuesday was decided upon as the regular meeting day.

Miss Iles was consecrated at the very recent session of the Council. It will probably be of interest to all to know that Miss Iles will be regarded as a Centenary Missionary, supported by Centenary funds.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Capitol Street Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., held special services in the ladies' parlor on Good Friday at 3:30 p.m. An interesting and appropriate program was given, the subject being, "A Call for Volunteers," with Mrs. Marley, our president, as leader. Among the ladies who gave splendid talks were two mothers of missionaries—one, Mrs. McNeil, who has a daughter in Africa (Mrs. Poynter), working there with her husband; the other, Mrs. Branstetta, whose daughter is still at Scarritt Bible and Training School. These two noble mothers of the two equally noble young women told us what it means to their lives to have their daughters giving themselves as missionaries for Jesus.

Their talks were interesting and inspiring, causing the hearers to resolve to do more for the coming of the Kingdom.

CENSORSHIP OF MOVING PICTURES.

There is no question before the public so important and perplexing as the censorship of moving pictures. Is the national board of censors adequate? Who shall censor the plays? Shall all censorship be abolished and the public be the sole judge of what shall be exhibited?

Four States (Ohio, Kansas, Maryland and Pennsylvania) have State laws; many of the other States have laws, such as our own, which allow each city or town the privilege of enacting their own laws for censorship. Justice W. H. Keller, of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, commends the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors "as the best instrument extant to curb the flood of indecency and immorality which the motion picture industry would let in upon us if not restrained." The motion picture is the fourth largest industry in the country—we export enough films each year to circle the globe at the equator.

No one doubts that the motion picture has its place in the world and that it is doing a great deal of good. One has only to look at the splendid work done by Miss A. Maris Boggs to see the benefits to be derived from the movies. Miss Boggs sends the moving pictures to the frozen north—Alaska—Dutch and British West Indies and South Sea Islands, bringing many of the dwellers in the isolated parts of the world in direct touch with the rest of the world and showing them how they live. Miss Boggs works through the Bureau of Commercial Economics, founded by Dr. Francis Holly. Dr. Holly became blind for years, during which time he realized how valuable eyes really are. One night he dreamed his sight has been restored. This affected him so that he vowed that if his sight were restored he would devote the rest of his life to making the world see more with its eyes. Dr. Holly regained his sight and in order to keep his vow founded the Board of Commercial Economics, of which he is director. Educational moving pictures were the medium Dr. Holly selected to make the world see more. Calls for its films come from all parts of the world; even the missionaries in China use them.

But not all pictures made and shown to-day are of this type. Mr. Frank Dyer, President of the General Film Company, asserts that it is doubtful if there are any indecent or immoral pictures, in violation of the law, being shown and that he has yet to find any one refusing to patronize a picture theatre because of any objections to the morals of the plays. Is this true in your community? I wish it were in mine. In St. Louis, on one street the advertisements of thirty shows dis-

Rheumatism and Indigestion

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. All of these diseases are probably related and all are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver and Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant of Savannah writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time I was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes of Virginia writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam of South Carolina writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter of Virginia writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

AN APPEAL FROM KOREA.

By Miss Ellasue Wagner.

There was a decided feeling at the last session of the Korea Annual Conference that the time had come when an attempt should be made to focus the eyes of the church somewhat more closely upon the work in Korea, especially with reference to the need of more workers. This need has now become acute, one might almost say alarming. For the past several years the number of workers, especially in the evangelistic branch of the service, has been gradually decreasing. For various reasons several workers have been compelled to leave the field, and their places have not all been filled. Instead of growth in the strength and personnel of the mission there has been a loss. This would be disconcerting under any circumstances, but just at this time it is disastrous.

On all sides come reports of eagerness on the part of Koreans to hear the Christian message, and there are not lacking those who believe we are on the ovo of a great revival. Many factors seem to be preparing the way, the one of outstanding significance being the national awakening which the Koreans have experienced during the past year. They want something better than they have known heretofore, and among those better things toward which they are reaching the best of all is Christianity. Then the Centenary most fortunately provides the funds for an expansion of the work to meet tho opportunity that is presenting itself.

But when we turn to our force of workers, we cannot but feel that it is time to appeal to the church for help. At this time we have on the field under the General Board elght evangellstlc workers; two of these are new men who have not mastered the language sufficiently to do full work, one appointed to Theological School work, one a recruit from the medical ranks, and one leaving the field within a short time not to return. This is the force with which we are manning four stations and attempting to open a new one in a section of our territory which should have had resident missionaries years ago. Under the Woman's Council there are now on the field seven evangellstic workers, two of these giving part time to school work. Double this number would not meet the need that confronts us to-day. In the medical and educational branches of the work our force is also below what it should be. In all of these branches of the work we thus face a shortage of workers; and to make the situation more unfortunate we realize that it cannot bo readily relieved. If it were within the power of tho Board of Missions to place a dozen new workers in Korea within the next month, there could still be no speedy relief, for long months and even years must elapse before those workers could acquire a sufficient knowledge of the language and customs of the people to enter fully into the work. But this fact, disconcerting as it is, makes all the more urgent the need that these new workers should be sent out as speedily as possible.

The Korean nation has experienced a rebirth during the past year. Potentialities have sprung into evidence whose existence was never dreamed. The Korean is eager, virile, determined, dissatisfied with his present lot, and willing to dare, to suffer, and to die that his people may come into a better heritage than they ever have known in the past. Something bigger than has yet been attempted must be done to teach that overwhelming majority which as yet has not come under the influence of the Gospel. And this is the appeal we make to the young manhood and womanhood of the church to-day, to come over and help us do something bigger and better than has yet been done to reach these millions of Koreans, new Koreans we may say, as they reach out eagerly and bravely for a new and better social and political life.

GOLDEN RULE.

Children, do you love each other?
  Are you always kind and true?
Do you always do to others
  As you'd have them do to you?
To do to others as I would
  That they should do to me
Will always make me kind and good,
  As children ought to be.
The Golden Rule! The Golden Rule!
  O, that's the rule for me!
To do to others as I would
  That they should do to me.
—Selected.

We are told that an artist once drew a picture of a wintry twilight, the trees heavily laden with snow, and a dreary, dark house, lonely and desolate, in the midst of the storm. It was a sad picture, indeed. Then, with a quick stroke of yellow crayon he put a light in one window. The effect was magical. The entire scene was transformed into a vision of comfort and good cheer. The birth of Christ was just such a light in a dark world.—Exchange.

FAT ENOUGH

By L. W. BOWER, M. D.

A man weighing 150 pounds has fat enough in his body to make a dozen good sized candles. That's "fat enough." Too much fat or too little indicates a disordered physical condition. The average American has too little fat. He is gaunt and spare. Americans are known to the world as a nation of dyspeptics. That is the price they pay for a success which does not take time to eat properly. No man can be stronger than his stomach. The man with a "weak stomach" will be a weak man. When the stomach is "weak," the food is imperfectly digested and the body as a consequence, is insufficiently nourished. No fat can be put on the body until the nourishment derived from food exceeds the daily requirements of the body in wear and waste of tissue. When the stomach is "weak," the nutrition falls below the daily requirements of the body.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts directly on the stomach (and the nutritive and digestive system), removing obstructions to its activity and health, and enabling it to supply the body with the necessary nutrition. "Golden Medical Discovery" is not a cure-all. It is a medicine for the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition. The "Discovery" increases the blood supply. It contains neither alcohol nor narcotics. Has been sold by druggists for over 50 years. Send 10c for trial package to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. Consultation by letter free.

closed seventeen pictures which had been condemned by the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors.

We must not fail to realize, as was acknowledged by one man of authority in the motion picture business in New Orleans, that if it were not for the patronage of the children the shows could not exist. This is one of our arguments in favor of clean, wholesome movies. To quote from Mr. Dyer again, he asserts that if children go to see pictures which are improper, it is the fault of the parent and not the State; that when improper pictures are shown, all parties responsible for same should be punished; we hold that if the law is to step in at all, how much better to have it step in before the picture is ever shown and the indelible impression left on the mind of those seeing it, especially the child.

We don't think it necessary to argue that some "cleaning up" in the movies is needed, but the question is how best to do it. We would ask, first, for the child's sake, that special children's pictures be shown at certain specified hours, these pictures to be such as would leave no suggestive evil thought in the mind of the child, but would prove educational and inspiring. Ask the movie man of your town if he will not arrange for such a regular performance.

We have a national censorship, but this is not adequate. Mr. Randall has introduced into the last Congress a splendid Federal bill and Cannon Chase advises us to write our congressmen and senators urging them to favor this Randall Motion Picture Bill. Till that is secured, State censorship is the best remedy. Pennsylvania has a splendid board of censorship composed of three persons, two males and one female. These are appointed by the governor to serve a term of three years. They and a competent staff of helpers are well paid for the services rendered. Before any picture can be shown anywhere in Pennsylvania, it must bear the stamp of the official seal of this State Board of Censors. We realize that it is not an easy thing to secure such a State Board of Censors. Miss Woods, in the Literary Digest, tells us that last year twenty-four States filed bills with their legislatures asking for some form of governmental control. Members of the movie industry boast that these bills have all been killed and that their organization is pledged to kill any attempt at State control and have resolved to repeal the laws in the four States which now have censorship.

Dr. Clifford Grey Twombly, D.D., of New York, in the Literary Digest, points out to us one way of combating this opposition. He says: "No organization can arouse public opinion so thoroughly and efficiently and quickly as the Christian church, if it will. If twenty-five of the leading clergymen of New York City could be furnished with the real facts in regard to the present standing of the moving pictures (and that is easily possible); and if they would all agree to preach on a certain Sunday a sermon based upon these facts, and publish it; and if they would follow up their preaching by organizing committees in their churches to make this fight for the purity of our American youth and homes (for it is a fight, I am convinced, of very critical importance), there would soon be a change in the situation, and New York would soon have a State Board of Censorship worthy of the name."

Following out the suggestion of Cannon Chase in a personal letter, our committee would urge that we not only get our preachers to preach on the subject, but we endeavor to interest every woman's organization in the State, every church society, including the Catholic women, and also the school teachers, so that we as one body may work to the end that Louisiana may soon be added to those States having a State Board of Censorship. For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effects on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

KAINIT

20 per cent MANURE SALT

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big Cotton Crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three

Standard GERMAN Potash Salts

that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

A CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAM.

It is frequently true that a destructive process is necessary before a great constructive program can be undertaken, but it is seldom wise to continue the destructive process indefinitely. The work of elimination and correction must be going on constantly, of course, but after the way has been cleared of outstanding obstructions, a definite movement toward reconstruction, development and improvement should be begun. We can never be sure that all evils have been cured at any moment, but we can be sure that enough of them have been overcome to make it possible to put something better in their place. The farmer who spends all his time killing grass and never plants his seeds or cultivates his crop, is not likely to gather much of a harvest. We must not only destroy, but also build up.

GOOD NEWS—IF TRUE.

Attorney General Palmer announced a few days ago that reports to the Department of Justice show that there is a distinct downward tendency in prices as the result of the Government's campaign to lessen the cost of living. We have not heard very much of the campaign except through newspaper accounts of friendly interviews between "fair-price" committees and retailers, and we have not personally observed any decrease in the prices of things we occasionally have to buy; if the Attorney General says, however, that prices are falling, we "take courage and press forward." In the meantime, we note with interest that various corporations have declared dividends at a rate that make the "Dutchman's one per cent" look puny in comparison.

THE DIVORCE EVIL.

A recent writer has made the assertion that the divorce evil is a worse plague than the saloon ever was. We are not prepared to say that we agree with him, but we are convinced that the nation is face to face with one of the most serious problems in its history in the growing number of broken up homes as the result of legal separation of man and wife. Apart from the fundamental moral principle involved in the abrogation of the marriage vow, we are facing a social demoralization that bodes ill for the State. Marriages of convenience and inclination are the prolific source of much of the marital unhappiness that flaunts itself in the face of the public through the newspapers, and a contemptuous disregard of the sanctity of the marriage relation is polluting the minds and hearts of a great many of our young people. We have never believed that people can be made good by law, but we know that in many cases they can be deterred from evil by stringent legal restrictions. If men and women will persist in entering into matrimony carelessly and thoughtlessly, they should be made to realize that they will have to suffer the consequences of their ill-advised action. As the situation is now, it does not seem to be much harder to secure a divorce than it is to get married.

WHAT SHALL THIS CHILD BE?

The most beautiful, the most wonderful thing in the world is a little child. In its chubby hands it holds the heartstrings of father and mother, as well as the destiny of its own immortal soul; in its wondering eyes is the light that shines with a golden radiance that must come from some far-off land of the blest; its cooing voice makes the sweetest music that was ever wafted to the shores of time from the enchanted islands of melody; its bright face is the picture of innocence that made the world a Garden of Eden in the days long gone, as it is a prophecy of the beauty that shall be in another world beyond the River. It was made to be loved with a love that swells the heart into an ecstasy of pain, and to be cherished with a passionate devotion that makes sacrifice a joy. All the hopes of the past are centered in this bud of an eternally struggling race, and the infinite possibilities of a redeemed soul are wrapped up in this atom of God-created humanity. In its presence, evil thoughts perish from the mind, and foul lips become clean; the harsh voice takes on the accents of tender solicitude, and the rough hand rests as lightly on the dimpled cheek as the wing of a dove on her nestlings. Coarse men imprint a kiss on the innocent brow, as pure as a sacrament of love, and a gentle smile lights up the faces that have grown hard with cruelty and hate. So a little child makes holy the home and steals its way into the hearts of good and bad alike. What shall this child be in the days that are to come?

FAIR PLAY.

In the world of amateur sport, the cardinal sin is "dirty" playing. Ungentlemanly conduct on the field, or unfair tactics in the game is sure to bring reproach upon those guilty of it. It is a sportsmanlike recognition of the fact that a victory dishonestly won is worse than an honest defeat. Life is a contest, and the same principle of fair play should be operative in all its struggles. A "win-at-any-price" policy is ethically wrong and morally indefensible.

ILLITERACY.

We came across some statistics recently that are indicative of an appalling situation. Of the 13,000,000 foreigners in this country, 5,000,000 can neither read nor write English; of the soldiers recruited during the war, 29 per cent of the whites and 75 per cent of the negroes were illiterate; while the average percentage of illiteracy in the United States is 7.7, in some States of the South the percentage is as high as 14—nearly twice the average. No thoughtful man will, for a moment, suppose that education can take the place of morality; but practically everybody is ready to admit that ignorance is a curse that blights civilization. It is probably true that a great many people who can read never take the trouble to look at a book or a newspaper; but it is a tragedy that so many thousands could not read if they would. Our educational policy is evidently fatally weak at some point.

OBEDIENT TO THE CALL OF DUTY.

We read this simple incident in a press dispatch a few days ago: A French doctor living near Geneva, Switzerland, received a telephone call from a neighboring village informing him that a patient was in a serious condition. He started immediately, but his carriage was overtaken by a messenger who said the doctor's 17-year-old son had fallen into a ravine and fractured his skull. The boy's condition was described as critical. The doctor, after hesitating a few moments, drove on to his patient. On his return, he found his son dead. Without discussing the delicate point as to what really was the doctor's duty, we cannot refrain from commending him for his strict adherence to what he conceived his duty to be. His professional honor was involved, as he viewed it, and he maintained his honor through the most trying ordeal imaginable. Duty is one of the noblest words in the human vocabulary, and the sense of duty is one of the most powerful forces in human life. No price is too heavy to pay for the reward of self-consciousness of rectitude.

NO COMPROMISE WITH EVIL.

We assume without argument that gambling is economically and morally wrong. That it has a fascination for those who have become addicted to the habit of getting something for nothing, we do not doubt. That the operation of a race track brings thousands of visitors to New Orleans every year, we do not question. That many business concerns of the city are financially benefited by the influx of gamblers and race track followers, is, we suppose, a matter of record. But we cannot find any justification in any of these things for the enactment of a law by the General Assembly that would permit gambling, which is economically and morally wrong, under certain "restrictions." We are not willing to make any compromises with evil as a matter of choice. The law-abiding, moral citizenship of the State should insist upon the passage of a law with "teeth" in it that would eliminate from its one great city or from any part of its territory the "sport" that has been pronounced a curse by numerous prominent individuals and civic organizations. We do not want, and we should not have foisted upon us, a law that will make possible a continuance of the demoralizing conditions that exist in this city during every racing season. We have no objection to the adoption of measures that will make difficult the dissemination of information upon which betting is largely dependent, but that is not sufficient of itself to accomplish the desired result; the thing itself must be condemned and outlawed. The pollution must be removed from the spring before the stream will run pure; and gambling itself must be prohibited if we would be saved from the evils that follow in its train. We should fight for what we know to be right, regardless of compromises offered; if we should be defeated, our consciences will be clear—and we can renew the fight another day, with the full assurance that in the end right will prevail.

FOLLOWING AFAR OFF—A SERMON SKETCH.

By Rev. Marvin K. Miller.

"And Peter followed afar off." (Luke 22:54.)

We want to talk for a little while about Peter's discipleship. Peter had been very close to Jesus in His travels and work; and had trusted Him with probably more faith at times than any of the other disciples.

You will remember that Peter was the one who answered Jesus' question when Jesus was asking for the opinions of the people concerning Himself. And some said He was Elias, some said John the Baptist, some said Jeremias, or one of the prophets. And when Jesus finally asked the question: "And who say ye that I am?" Peter answered quickly and unhesitatingly: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him: Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father, which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." So we see that the kind of faith that Peter had at that time was counted sufficient to uphold the church of God.

Then we find Peter as one of the three who were allowed to witness the transfiguration. What a wonderful experience! Jesus allowed the very light of heaven to shine through Him for a few moments, so that His face was made to shine like the sun, and His garments were white like the light. And Peter spoke and said: "Lord, it is good to be here." And the voice of God spake from a cloud, saying: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him."

Later on, we find Peter walking on the waves of the sea—going to meet the Master. Peter seems to have been the spokesman for the disciples. Whenever anything was to be said, he generally did the talking. He was sent with John to prepare a place for the Last Supper. And at this supper Jesus warned Peter of his unfaithfulness; and Peter said, "Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both into prison, and to death." And Peter was the one who smote the servant of the High Priest, and cut off his ear. He was ready to fight for the Master.

But when Peter saw the Master apparently in the power of the High Priest, his courage began to fail, his faith began to weaken. He must have begun to wonder whether Jesus really had power to free Himself. Peter saw that as a follower of Jesus he would incur great personal danger, because the infuriated mob would very probably put to death all followers who were found with Jesus.

Peter was with the Master all right as long as He seemed to be conquering over all opposition. But when Jesus seemed about to be conquered, Peter deserted, and followed afar off. It is hard to fight a losing fight. This seemed to be a losing fight to Peter. He thought that he would surely be put to death along with the Master, if he stayed with Him. And he would undoubtedly have suffered death if the mob could have identified him as a follower of Jesus.

It is hard to stand up and fight when you know that in the end you will be overpowered. I have seen men in the ring, with their faces all beaten up, knowing that they were outweighed and overmatched, and that in the end they would be beaten down and down, until at last they would not be able to stand up any more, and yet they fought on, striving by sheer force of grit and will-power, to stand up and fight the required number of rounds without being utterly knocked out. And I have heard the cheers ring loud and long for the man who was lying there unable to get up—unconscious of the cheers. But he had fought against odds—at a disadvantage; and he had stood up and kept trying after he saw that he had no chance to win.

The world to-day takes its hat off to the Belgians because they stood up and fought a losing fight. The Belgians knew that in the end they would be crushed under the iron heel of Germany's great army. Defeat was as certain as the rising of the sun. And yet Belgium stood up and fought and saved the world from German autocracy. Belgium was fighting a losing fight, and yet she held the Germans back long enough for France to prepare—long enough for the German plan of world-power to fail. Hats off to the Belgians for fighting a losing fight! There was no great credit due to American bravery when our soldiers went over there. We knew we were going to win. When we think of the almost inexhaustible resources of the United States, together with her invincible man-power—a vast, great, determined army of the hardest fighting men on God's green earth—why, Germany didn't have a chance, and we knew it.

Now Peter was a faithful follower of Jesus as long as he thought that Jesus was winning; but as soon as he thought that Jesus was beginning to lose, he deserted, and followed afar off. He still felt some kind of love for the Master; and he wanted to be near enough to see and hear what was done to Him; but he mingled with the crowd of onlookers and so lost himself in the crowd as to be unnoticed by the mob.

Now I want to say that we have a very great many people to-day who, like Peter, are following afar off. I might say that I am talking more particularly to Methodist people, but if there are any others who feel the need of a dose of the same kind of medicine, they are welcome to take it. I might say, also, that I am fully conscious of the fact that those who really need this message most seldom hear the message spoken from the pulpit, and never read our church papers, but it may be that some of you will tell them what I have to say—I will thank you to do so.

Before we go any further, I want to say that Peter had some sort of excuse for following afar off. He was afraid for his life. He saw death in it for him if he followed closely. In God's name, I ask you, what excuse have we to-day? We know that God's cause is a winning cause. Instead of death or persecution as a result of following Him to-day, we receive honor and respect—peace and prosperity—safety and love. Even the very wicked, worldly man praises the man whose life is close to God.

Then what are the people afraid of? We see our church members—professed Christians—following afar off; so lost in the crowd, and so mingling themselves with the world that they cannot be distinguished from those on the outside. What is the reason? Afraid of what? Peter had an excuse. What is yours?

Some are afraid of responsibilites; afraid that the church will ask them to do some personal work. There are certain duties that must be performed in church service, but we want to sit away back among the spectators and look on from afar while some one else does the work. Afraid of what?

Some are afraid of ridicule. Some of our "really good" church members are afraid to pray in public for fear that some one will laugh at them. One of the best prayers I ever heard was from a man who had never prayed in public before. I was conducting my first prayer meeting, in a small town in Louisiana. I was almost a total stranger in the place. I hardly knew a half-dozen of those present. So I thought to myself: Now is the time to try out a little experiment that I have long wanted to test. So, instead of asking who would pray, I just asked a young man for the names of the men present; and I began by singing a song and calling for a prayer—then we sang another song and had another prayer, and so on until we had had nearly as many public prayers offered as there were men present. The scheme worked well. I learned afterward that they had just closed a great revival, and were still feeling its influences. So there I had men praying in public who had never done such a thing before in their lives. I remember one man especially. He was a large, portly, fine-looking man, getting rather advanced in years. He was a merchant and ex-saloon keeper. He had been converted during the summer, but had never done any public work for God. I called on him to pray that night, and he fell down on his knees and said: "Oh Lord, bless everybody in this house, for Christ's sake. Amen." And I thought that was one of the best prayers I had ever heard. I felt good over it. Every one in the house seemed to feel good over it, for the blessing of God was upon us in answer to that prayer.

But that scheme wouldn't work in all places. One of the leading stewards on a certain charge in the Mississippi Conference said some very insulting things to a young preacher who asked him to lead in a public prayer. What is the matter? Following afar off; trying to stay far enough away to be in no danger of being called upon for service.

What effect is this kind of service having upon the church? A little more than a hundred years ago the Methodist Church was a regular "hot-bed" of spiritual activity. Some time before that, John Wesley had started a revival of religion in the old church of England that shook the very foundations of the nation, morally, politically, and spiritually. Out of this great revival sprang the Methodist Church, as an organization in which the worship of God was to be true and full of spiritual life. People came to listen to the preaching of John and Charles Wesley, Whitefield, Asbury, and those other great leaders—came scoffing, and deriding this new "emotionalism" as they called it—but suddenly they would be stricken down by the mighty convicting power of the Holy Spirit, and there they lay, moaning and groaning until they were saved, and rose up praising God. To-day when a great man is engaged to conduct a "revival" we sit back and say to our friends, "Oh, don't you know, I think he has such a distinguished appearance in the stand." "He has such a beautiful style of delivery." "His diction is so elegant and refined." And the great, good man of God may stand before us and exhort with all the fervor of his being, and there will hardly be a quiver of an eyelash.

What is the matter? We are following afar off—sitting away back with the crowd—unnoticeable and indistinguishable in the crowd. We are not praying—no, not we! We are simply spellbound with that wonderful preacher—waiting to see what he is going to do next!

We are willing to pay, but not to pray. Church pride and self-respect are noble qualities in their places, but we reach down into our pockets and give a liberal offering and that ends our part of it. We are glad to keep the financial affairs of our church in fine shape, but we seem to have lost sight of its spiritual needs.

The atmosphere surrounding the pulpit has lost something of the sacredness which it once enjoyed. People do not regard sacred things, or even the Sabbath Day, with the same degree of reverence that they once did. This is true in other denominations as well as our own. A Baptist preacher-friend of mine tells me that the same is true with his church.

What is the result? The church is in a dying condition, spiritually. How many prayer meetings have you attended where there was any evidence of spirituall life? How often have you attended revivals where the Spirit of God really took hold of people and shook up the place? I heard one of our pastors preach a sermon one night while the Mississippi Conference was in session in one of the leading cities of the State. At the close of his sermon the power of the Holy Spirit came upon those people and there was such a tumult as I never before witnessed in a great city church. And the people came flocking around and began to ask: "What is this? Why, we have never seen anything like this before!" No, they hadn't, and you have never seen much like it, either. But I can name a few things that you have seen. You have seen little boys gambling in the streets and using language that a negro ought to be ashamed to use. You have seen the moral standards of our "best circles" so lowered that a little child can say: "Mother, if you play cards and bet, I am going to do it, too." You have seen vice conditions thriving in our small towns as well as the larger ones, to the extent that our young men—some mothers' sons—are constantly going out and committing crimes which, when they chance to be revealed, are sufficient to shock the sensibilities of even the most cold-blooded "man-of-the-world." You have seen—God pity them—every little while some mother's daughter droop her fair young head in hopeless shame and take her place among the world's outcasts!

Why is it? What is the answer? People are living so far away from God that the devil is taking complete control over things in general, and the church members are simply going with the crowd, without thinking or caring where the crowd is leading them.

We have reached a point in church life where we don't like "emotionalism." Why? It may be because it is too disturbing to our consciences.

Now I know that this style of preaching is not popular. One of the leading presiding elders of the Mississippi Conference, in preaching a sermon on Christian duties, said in my hearing: "The day has come when, if a man stands up in the pulpit and tells the straight truth, the people will ask for him to be removed." This statement was made by a man who is certainly in a position to know what he is talking about. People are listening for "smooth gospel" from the pulpit, and they don't like any other kind.

Now, if you will pardon a personal reference, I want to say that I don't care a snap of my finger for popularity. (If I did, I would quit trying to preach, and start dabbling in rotten politics, and as soon as I learned how to be rotten enough, I would get all the popularity I wanted.) I haven't yet started out to try to make a reputation for flowery discourse; nor to please any man, or set of men. But if I can please my Lord, by telling the straight, unvarnished truth, and if I can cause you to study your Bible more, and pray more, and live closer to God—why, then I don't care whether you ever like me or not, because my Lord will be with you long after I am gone and forgotten.

SOUTH AMERICA: THE UNDEVELOPED CONTINENT.

By Rev. A. C. Millar, D.D.

III.

The Adventurers and Conquistadores.

To one who travels in the modern steamship, luxuriously furnished, with wireless apparatus keeping in touch with the world, and with every conceivable device for safety and comfort, the hardships and dangers of the adventurers and discoverers of four hundred years ago seem almost beyond endurance. Think of what it meant for Columbus in little, slow-sailing ships to launch out upon an unknown and uncharted sea, sailing for weeks out of sight of land and not knowing whether return was possible. Try to realize the spirit of Cortez, with a handful of rebellious soldiers, burning his ships and, with scant provision and equipment, marching inland hundreds of miles against a mighty host of war-like Indians. And imagine the courage of Pizarro embarking on the untried Pacific and landing at the foot of the giant Andes, with his small band of dissatisfied adventurers, climbing the heights and marching through passes ten thousand feet up among the towering, snow-clad peaks, and at last facing and overcoming the forces of a great empire. Picture, if you can, the experiences and feelings of men shipwrecked three thousand miles from home across the pathless ocean and cast ashore without provisions or medicine upon barren coasts and malarial shores. Even now, with all our scientific aids, one is considered unusually strong of heart to venture into the same seas and lands where these bold conquistadores so blithely adventured.

We of Anglo-Saxon blood and different institutions are not able easily to create for ourselves the mental and moral atmosphere necessary for a sympathetic comprehension of the Spanish spirit of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries. Who, indeed, were these bold and hardy people, so different, apparently, from the Spaniards of the Nineteenth Century, who lost the western realm which their fathers had subdued?

The inhabitants of ancient Spain were a mixed race, and then they received additions from Vandal, Jew, and Moor. There is an Oriental element in the blood which has vivified the imagination, and because the Spanish Christian had become the defender of the Romish faith against Jew and Mohammedan, he became narrow and intolerant in religion. The struggle with the Moorish followers of the prophet for six centuries had developed supreme interest in religion and war. Then, when the Jews and Moors, the industrial and merchant classes, were driven out, the Spaniards, who were not producers, were left in dire poverty just as the merchants and sailors were seeking India by way of the sea. The leaders despised labor, but gloried in war, and were willing to undergo hardships if their sacrifices promised glory or honor or power. These Celts, with Roman, Phoenician, Moorish, and Jewish blood, were the knights-errant of the Western world. Their cruelty to the aborigines was not mere wantonness and bloodthirstiness, but grew out of their conviction that resistance to the propagation of the true faith was a sin deserving prompt and extreme punishment. They came with the blessings of king and priest to enlarge the influence of the Holy Church and bring the untutored savages into the sacred fold.

The character of the conquistadores and the conditions prevailing led to the founding of fortified cities, the building of churches and monasteries, and the establishment of universities, principally for the training of priests and scholars to serve the church and the State, which was dominated by the church. The development of education was under the direction of the church and its purpose was training in dogma and discipline. Popular education was not considered, and the vast majority of the people received only the training involved in the exercises of the sanctuary, although sometimes the religious brotherhoods built and maintained little parish schools for elementary instruction. Often the wealthy sent their children to Spain for education. During the period of colonization, twelve universities were established in Latin America, eight before Harvard College had been founded. In 1551 the University of St. Mark had been organized at Lima, Peru, and in the early part of the Eighteenth Century it had more than one hundred in its faculty and about 2000 students. Instruction was given in theology, medicine, law, and the arts. Good work was done in medicine and surgery, the native language reduced to writing, and many books were published on religious and literary subjects. The first newspaper appeared in Lima in 1594. It is claimed that the colonial period of Latin America was more productive of literature and culture than the same period in the English Colonies. These are the beginnings of European civilization in South America.

IS THE SOUTH "DRY" OR "WET?"

By Bishop James Cannon, Jr., Chairman National Legislative Committee of Anti-Saloon League of America.

Is the South "dry" or "wet?" To many persons this sounds like a useless question. They will say, "Certainly the South is 'dry.'" But there are other persons who are declaring to-day that the South is not really "dry." They say that the South voted for State-wide prohibition under then existing conditions, but that now the South has changed, and that after an experience of prohibition under the "Bone-dry" laws, War time Prohibition and the Eighteenth Amendment, the South would vote against Federal Prohibition. The importance of this question lies in the fact that it must be answered shortly in one way or the other:

(1) In the National Democratic and Republican Conventions.

(2) In the Congressional Primaries and Elections.

1. National Conventions.

Shall the South send delegations to the National Conventions which will vote to maintain and to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment? Or will the South send delegations which will vote for a liberal interpretation of the Amendment, and to weaken the enforcement code so as to permit the manufacture and sale of wine and beer? In whatever manner delegates are selected to those conventions, the prohibition people of the South should demand that they vote in the conventions to sustain the unanimous vote by which the South has ratified the Eighteenth Amendment. And this matter should not be left to chance. If the South is "dry," her delegates to the National Conventions should be "dry," and should be known to be "dry." If the South is "wet," then men should be elected as delegates who favor the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, and who openly declare their position. In this crisis, when the gage of battle has been thrown down by the friends of the liquor traffic in both political parties, no man should be given public office or positions of trust who declares that prohibition is a settled issue, or who tries to dodge the question.

Is the South "dry" or "wet?" Her delegation to the Conventions must speak for her. Do you want them to vote "dry?" Then use your influence to send "dry" delegates, and do not allow factional party issues to send "wet" delegates to represent a "dry" South, and then after they have voted "wet" lament the folly which sent them there.

2. Congressional Primaries and Elections.

All the members of the House of Representatives, and one-third of the senators will be elected next November. The prohibition question will figure in every such election, not because the Anti-Saloon League has desired it. The League was entirely willing to consider the prohibition question as settled, but the liquor traffic and its friends and allies, including the "wet" newspapers, have marshalled their hosts and have demanded the repeal or emasculation of the Enforcement Law, and the final repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. The battle is joined once more, and the slaves of covetousness and appetite are lined up against those who put the economic, social and moral welfare of the whole people above personal, selfish indulgence.

In this coming battle, how will the South stand? Will she send "dry" or "wet" men to represent her in the Senate and in the House? Our "dry" people cannot afford to allow this great question to drift. They should find out exactly how the candidates will stand. If the men who are seeking office will not positively announce their purpose to maintain and to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment, then men should be found and nominated who will do so.

All for which we have been fighting for years has been challenged. If we think prohibition is a mistake or a matter of small importance, we will not try to secure the election of "dry" members to Congress. But if we believe that the saloon "has sinned away its day of grace;" if we believe that the liquor traffic is a public nuisance, the enemy of the economic, social and moral welfare of the people; if we believe that that nuisance should be abated and that the laws to abate that nuisance should be as effective and as thoroughly enforced as the laws for the abatement of any other nuisance—if we believe these things, then we will not elect "wet" men to help in the framing or the enforcement of "dry" laws.

The writer honestly believes that the people of the South are "dry," and that their representatives should speak out clearly in the coming conventions, and in the new Congress on this great social and moral question.

OUR BOARD OF MISSIONS AND THE INTERCHURCH WORLD MOVEMENT.

By Rev. H. M. Ellis.

For some time it has been rumored that our General Board of Missions intends to give a large sum of money to the Interchurch World Movement. This seemed so preposterous I paid no attention to it at first. When recently this rumor was confirmed to me by unquestionable authority I was much more than disappointed.

Where does the Board expect to get the money for this "Movement?" Will it so apply money which has been raised for "Assessments," which the church has been assured represent certain definite and urgent needs of our own missions? It cannot so use the Centenary funds, for a stipulated schedule of objects was sent out to the church as the basis of that appeal, and this "Movement" had no mention therein. If anybody has supplied the Board of Missions with funds for this latest incubation of Kaiserine conceit and folly, the report of it hasn't leaked out.

True, there was a great over-subscription to the Centenary fund, but that was all subscribed for those particular objects stipulated in the Board's published surveys. Besides, one has but to note the bustle of the Board in its "Making-Good Campaigns," and hear the recent distress cry of Dr. Pinson to realize that the most optimistic members of the Board must hesitate to appropriate, even for legitimate objects, the full amount subscribed. Dr. Pinson writes: "When every cent that has been pledged is paid, the Board of Missions will not be able to cover its Askings in the surveys." And again, "In addition, we find that $1,500,000 contained in the original estimates for our City Mission Work was omitted in the original summary of the thirty-five million dollars and must be provided for as an additional sum." (I was glad to see that this was "contained in the original estimates," and not an afterthought—for the Interchurch World Movement.) Dr. Pinson could not more emphatically tell the church that the only way for the Board to appropriate any of its funds to any other than its own legitimate fields will be to curtail and rob our own work.

Should the Board take the attitude of demanding payment of assessments and subscriptions on the ground of the urgent needs of our own missions, while, at the same time, it passes on large sums of these trust funds—or even small sums—to an organization with which our church has no official connection and which, by its reckless assumption of financial obligations and prodigal expenditure of borrowed money, has proved itself unworthy of trust, it will invite upon itself the greatest disaster that could befall. Misappropriation of these funds will inevitably forfeit the confidence of the church and the business world. Diverting missionary funds to other objects than those for which they were subscribed forfeits the right to further payment on those subscriptions. Millions of dollars of these subscriptions will be cancelled, and the payment on millions more will be deferred till it is satisfactorily proved to the subscribers that men are to handle their funds who will apply them rigidly to the purposes for which they were intended.

I will never forget a brief, but mighty speech of my loved friend, the now sainted Bishop Charles B. Galloway, on the necessity of scrupulous fidelity in the administration of the trust funds of the church. My heart thrills even now as I recall with what flashing eye and tremendous emphasis that prince of church leaders and peerless pulpit orator exclaimed: "The greatest calamity that can possibly befall any church is for it so to abuse the confidence of the people as to forfeit its appeal!"

No matter what hasty and foolish pledges our Board of Missions may have made to the Interchurch World Movement, surely it will not persist in a course that would mean faithlessness to its trust. Better to confess weakness and folly than proceed upon a course that must issue in such disaster to our mission work as I shudder to contemplate.

McComb, Miss.

MRS. T. B. WHITE.

Victoria Elizabeth, daughter of Noah Scales and ——— Cardwell, was born in Bedford County (near Shelbyville), Tennessee, June 27, 1837, and was married to Rev. Thos. B. White, a member of the Tennessee Conference, December 23, 1855.

In response to an urgent call for laborers in a needy territory, the young preacher and his wife, along with others, moved to Louisiana at the close of the year 1856; after a consecrated service of sixteen years in that State, with the same heroic spirit, they volunteered for the difficult Western work and for a period of thirteen years, save a brief period of service in Colorada, labored in the State of Oregon. On account of Brother White's falling health, they returned to Louisiana in 1885 and were in the itinerant service until the close of 1894, when this faithful man of God was granted the superannuate relation. In a home of their own in Ruston, they lived until the husband's death in 1899.

Sister White survived her husband for a little more than twenty-one years, passing away from her home in Ruston on January 8, 1920, at the ripe age of eighty-two years and six months.

She made a profession of faith and united with the church as she was entering young womanhood, and ever afterwards was loyal to the Savior and His church. Few persons have loved the church of God more than she, and she was always in her place at worship if possible. She was a pastor's friend and adviser, ever anxious that he might reach by his influence, every possible person. She was a woman of sprightly intellect, artistic tastes and exceptional social qualities, retaining her faculties unimpaired until the end. She took a keen interest in world happenings and in the connectional affairs of the church, as well as in local matters, and was an enthusiastic worker in all its organized activities.

She manifested a remarkable interest in young life, being for many years of her old age a teacher in the Young People's Department of the Sunday school, and keeping in personal touch with her former pupils. Her great joy was to know of their individual spiritual welfare. A large number of young men and women revere her memory.

Always liberal and giving generously to the Lord's cause from her moderate annual stipend, she bequeathed the sum of five hundred dollars to be known as the T. B. White Memorial Fund, to be invested for the benefit of the superannuated preachers of the Louisiana Conference, and in addition, a complete bedroom set of handsome furniture to the local parsonage.

Sister White is survived by two children, Mrs. Lelia Carson, Savannah, Georgia, and Dr. Stuart L. White, physician, Ruston, La.

R. H. WYNN.

IN FAVOR OF A UNIFIED CAMPAIGN.

Dear Brother Carley: I think your late article on the proposed educational drive and else, both wise and timely. The church has responded to the Centenary campaign very nobly, in assuming for five years sums of money equal and in addition to what it has formerly paid for the support of its ministry and all of its benevolent assessments. And it is of supreme importance, both for the church's honor, and for her fidelity to her sacred pledges, that these sums be collected as they fall due. If she fail here, the failure will react to her spiritual hurt, if not to her spiritual ruin, to say nothing of the failure of her great plans, both at home and in foreign lands. Hence special stress must be put on these collections, and he who fails to do so will not be blameless as to broken vows. Now while there are individuals in the church, and, all told, a goodly number of them who are able easily to meet these obligations and at the same time to assume others in good faith, yet it is safe to say that the majority of its members will have about all that they will care to assume, and many of them all that they can reasonably be expected to do, for the present at least, to meet their Centenary pledges, and at the same time contribute properly to the running expenses and regular assessments of the church. Hence, appeal at this time intended to reach the heart of the church for Education, or any other cause, seems to me to court failure. Of course if the appeal were to be made to the few who have abundant means, this is always in order, and within that scope should succeed. But whenever a general and intensive campaign—I do not like the word drive—is put on it should appeal both to the rank and file of the church. Hence I believe it would be the very essence of wisdom for the Board of Education to await the meeting of the General Conference, when both the time and means should have general and careful as well as prayerful deliberation.

M. B. SHARBROUGH.

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE HOSPITAL.

The following resolution was unanimously passed by the Mississippi Conference at its 1918 session in McComb City:

"Whereas, a large number of our people recognize the imperative need for increased hospital facilities; therefore, be it resolved, first, That the presiding Bishop be requested to appoint eight laymen and eight ministers to locate, erect or buy buildings and equip the same. Resolved, second, That this Committee be given full powers to act as soon as in their judgment the interests of the Mississippi Conference would be promoted."

The Bishop at the same sitting announced the Committee. This Committee during 1919 held meetings, and decided to build; several propositions for location were considered; and by the time of the 1919 session of the Conference in Meridian, it had become generally understood that a hospital be erected somewhere within the territory of the Mississippi Conference, and the Committee was continued with full power to go forward. A short while afterwards the Committee met, with all the propositions for location before it, and after due consideration, and in the light of all the circumstances, selected Hattiesburg. Shortly afterwards it was decided that approximately a half million dollars was necessary, and that the best plan for raising this fund would be to have an intensive campaign, with expert guidance. Accordingly, Mr. S. L. Postlethwait, of the firm of Ward, Hill, Pierce & Wells of New York, was secured; and he has for several weeks been actively disseminating information and organizing workers as fast as possible in each pastoral charge of the Conference. Also the writer was recently asked to assist in this work.

May 2-5 has been fixed as the time for solicitation of funds in Hattiesburg and Forest County; May 30-June 5 as the time for the solicitation in the other parts of the territory. There seems to be no doubt but that Hattiesburg will do a liberal part; but it is also clear that Hattiesburg will not give all, or even half, of the amount required, in order for success to crown this endeavor, and that our Master's directions concerning ministrations to the sick be obeyed in this effectual way, all must take a hand, and assist with their time and money.

Hattiesburg is nearer the geographical center of the Mississippi Conference than any other of the larger towns; it has railroad passenger trains coming in from six directions; this part of the Conference has no outstanding institution of the church; and Hattiesburg's bonus offered to secure the location at least equaled that coming from any other point. We suppose that all these things were taken into consideration by the locating committee. Then, one pastor has suggested that, as the Baptists have their hospital in the northern part of the Conference territory, there is an additional reason why the Methodists should build theirs in the southern part.

April 24, 1920.

We bave audited the books and records of the Treasury Department of the Centenary Commission from June 11, 1917, to March 31, 1920, and have found them to be correct, in accordance with the foregoing statements.

The amounts necessary to complete a full distribution of the first year's askings of the participating Boards have been embodied in the Financial Statement herewitb presented, although a number of actual payments were made subsequent to March 31, 1920.

Respectfully submitted,
GRANNIS-BLAIR AUDIT COMPANY,
By J. A. Grannis.

I, Gilbert P. Robertson, Assistant Treasurer of the Centenary Commission, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, de hereby solemnly swear that the attached statement is true and correct, to the best of my knowledge and belief. GILBERT P. ROBERTSON.

Sworn and subscribed to before me tbis the twenty-fourth day of April, 1920
State of Tennessee, Davidson County.

F. L. WILLIAMS, Notary Public.
My Commission expires April 1, 1922.

The Centenary Commission has on hand literature valued at $11,000, which should be deducted from the total expense, but which, because of its nature, cannot be shown in the financial statement.

The Centenary Campaign was the cheapest movement of its kind ever conducted by any organization. The cost of the cultural program and financial drive was less than 1½ per cent of the new money pledged, and the entire movement, including a three-years' campaign covering one full year of conservation and collections, was less than 2½ per cent of the new money. No such showing of economy has ever been made in America. This percentage of cost is from one-third to one-quarter of the expense of the participating boards in their regular administration.

From the best information available to us, one Red Cross drive cost 12 per cent. The great United War Work campaign cost between 5 per cent and 10 per cent. The Methodist Episcopal Centenary cost 4 per cent. The Interchurch World Movement allows 5 per cent for expense and the Northern Baptist campaign allows 4 per cent. These expenses were for campaigns only. The Centenary Commission of tbe M. E. Church, South, spent only 1½ per cent for this purpose.

These figures do not include the expenses of tbe Centenary Celebration, because the sale of assets in the form of curios, exhibits, and "The Wayfarer" is expected to pay all deficits and return a margin of profit.

A more detailed financial statement, tbe report of the Director General, and other information will be published in the May issue of Tbe Centenary Bulletin.

A HAPPY MOTHER.

By Sarah Austin Joyner.

Sweet the thought of love's young dream
That in her youth she knew.
But sweeter still the happy days
When those dear dreams came true.
She has quaffed life's sweetest draught,
Seen happiness supreme
When, love exalted, love enthralled,
She was both slave and queen.

As folded buds of spring have long
To joyous blossoms blown,
So heads that prest her flowing breast
Have to sons and daughters grown.
For her how swift the hours, the days,
The happy years have past,
Flying like leaves before
The autumn's warning blast.
By her own adored, beloved,
She envies not another,
So full of love and service true—
The days of a happy mother.

FAMILIAR FRIENDS.

By Rev. T. B. Holloman, D.D.

During my respite from labor, I have been renewing old acquaintances—associations of my childhood. With the coming of the spring, we were greeted with the whippoorwill's song, and it was like the voice of many years ago when, as a child, I had been told all sorts of horrid and blood-curdling stories, by the old nurse, of this innocent bird—that he would light on my head and pick my eyes out; that his peculiar warble was a sure sign of death. While there is a weirdness about his call not pleasing even to this day, I have long since understood the eye-plucking legend as only a ruse to get me to bed early.

When a boy of ten summers, my path to the schoolbouse, two miles—yes, two miles—away, ran for the greatest part through an unbroken forest. Our schoolmaster was an aged widower, who had fallen desperately in love with a damsel who lived near the schoolhouse; so, frequently our noon recess was extended till late in the afternoon. To make up for his protracted love-making, he would keep the classes until nearly sunset, which meant a foot-race through the forest lest the evil bird should catch us; and many and many a night had he begun his warning cry as we entered the ravine below the house. Well, all the summer long I have been hearing this same call, and it sounds like the note of the bird of the long ago. Some say his song is "Chuck Will's widow"; others catch it as "Dick married a widow," but to me it is the same old terror-striking voice and on the same sharp key. Like poor Harry at the guide-post, I often "felt my blood run cold" at that night song, and I don't like it yet.

While I write, I hear the familiar hoot of the owl, and it seems the same as fifty years ago; can it be the mate of the one which, in after life, I killed while robbing the henroost? I recall that from appearances he (or she) must have had nearly half a century to his credit—anyhow, he looked wise, and wisdom, we are told, comes with age.

Ever and anon I catch the rumbling of the chimney sweeps which took up summer quarters in the same southeast chimney as far back as memory with me goes. Their "chitter, chitter," has made no variations as they circle round and round and round before dropping to their night's lodgings—same old sweepers.

And what's that in the diminutive house on the pole? Why, the martin, the liveliest and bravest of fellows. See how they get in mass formation and chase the hawk to his hiding-place—yes, the martin, still the friend to the barnyard. And hear him when he returns from the charge crowned with victory, chirping something like, "Hurrah, hurrah, for Southern rights, hurrah!"

And where have you been all these years, you little frisky elf, with tail at right angles and "kreeting" your defiant, saucy little note—your beautiful brown coat making you as vain as when last I saw you in the old out-house, you little wren of our balmy Southland!

Neither have I forgotten the coo of the dove—the chief mourner at Cock Robin's funeral—"coo-u, coo-u," just as you used to sing, or wail, or mourn, sitting close by the nest with its two little ones. By all traditions the dove is the sacred bird, and to harm one was a crime against civilization, good breeding and Christianity—yes, the timid, confiding dove is the same as of yore in color, grace and voice.

Why, old "sookie" lows now just as she did when I held off the calf while the milkmaid did the robbing; and, believe it or not, that pig with head fastened under the gate makes the same alarming squeal as pigs did a hundred years ago, and his very note told of his mischief-making disposition; now that he has been released from his trouble he issues forth the same unappreciative grunt of his forebears.

The old swimming hole has disappeared under the sandbar, but the gushing, gurgling spring from under the root of the willow is still refreshing the laborer, and giving water to the tired beast; and don't forget the long-handled gourd, hanging in its place up among the branches. It was here we cooled the watermelon (its luscious heart and juicy pulp linger still in memory) and ate our noonday meals and dreamed of a roseate future yet to come.

But the clock, striking just as always, admonishes me that my reminiscences must give place to Morpheus, and I sing, "Backward, turn backward, O Time, in your flight, and make me a child again just for the night."

THE MAYFLOWER TERCENTENARY.

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

What steps are being taken by our Southern Methodist Church toward celebrating the above event? In England, under the auspices of the National Free Church Council, a powerful Committee representing all the Free Churches has been at work for several months promoting a worthy celebration, in the three countries most directly concerned, of the hundredth anniversary of the Pilgrims' adventure. A Committee in America, which includes many of the leading citizens of the United States, has adopted the name of the English Committee and calls itself the "Mayflower Council of America." Their program is not yet complete, but it will be an ambitious one. In Holland, the Nederlandsche Pilgrim Fathers' Commission is making elaborate preparation for celebrations in Leyden, Amsterdam and Rotterdam. Australia and South Africa will be represented in the British program and very likely Canada. The Swiss Protestants have signified their wish to take part, and the French Protestants will have a place. These committees are all concerned with the specifically religious significance of the event. The political and social aspects are being emphasized by other organizations.

The Congregational Church will rightly take the opportunity of emphasizing the witness of the Pilgrims to their distinctive denominational principles. They are, however, not celebrating in isolation, but are making their preparations jointly with other churches. This is right, for all the Free Churches have entered into the inheritance that has descended from the Pilgrims. Christian democracy, education, and the evangelization of the world were the three great motives that lay behind the Pilgrim story. But these are as fundamental for Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists as for Congregationalists, and all of them may claim this spiritual ancestry, and join in the praise of these famous men and women.

When, on September 6, 1620, they left Plymouth, England, reaching America nine weeks after, who could have then realized they were making history? But their faith and ideals have done more than anything else to shape the history and constitution of the world's greatest Commonwealth and to mould the character of its people. From England they took fortitude, tenacity, cheerfulness, a robust morality, and a religion of the Spirit. From Holland they brought an enhanced love of freedom and of democratic institutions. No modern Atlantic liner, though it carried a burden three hundred times as heavy, ever bore a more splendid freight.

The aim of this celebration should not merely rake up from the past the half-forgotten details of a great story, but, above all, recapture the spirit of these pioneers. Our churches seem to have lost the old heroic strain. Our Christianity fails in its challenge to young people, it is flacid and weary. The Pilgrim story is one with power to stir the blood and set the soul of youth aflame; a trumpet-call to summon the youth of our churches to the high and solemn adventure of following Christ. It ought to be not only a campaign to educate the young people of the churches in the history, but to emphasize the worth of the principles now so often held too loosely, and to win them to a devotion and daring like that of the men and women of the Mayflower in the service of Christ's Kingdom.

OPPOSED TO UNIFICATION, No. 2.

Dear Brother Carley: It is very gratifying to me that only one man finds fault with my letter opposed to unification. I have endorsement from three States, prominent preachers, and laymen. Theodore Copeland, a Texas evangelist, writes me, "Your letter is as full of truth as an egg is of meat."

Brother A. M. Shaw makes a great mistake when he says, "One generation is not responsible for the acts of their predecessors." This idea can not apply to legislative and deliberative bodies. I have had some experience. I have been a member of the State Farmers' Union, the Grand Lodge of Masons of the State, and a lay member of several Annual Conferences. I was a member of the State Legislature for eight years. Often mistakes were corrected, wrongs righted, of long standing. What we want to know of the representatives of the M. E. Church is, do they endorse the action of the General Conference of 1844 for crushing Bishop J. O. Andrew without a charge of wrong simply because his wife owned some slaves?

Do they endorse the action of the General Conference of 1848 in refusing to respect and seat Dr. Lovick Pierce, our first fraternal delegate?

Do they endorse Bishop Ames' using military power in taking our churches and turning our folk out and holding those churches till we regained them by law? If they condemn these unjustifiable acts, they ought to have manhood enough to say so; if they endorse such injustice, we don't want anything to do with them.

Brother Shaw's first and main reason for unification was, "Our boys fought side by side with Northern boys." They did that because they had to do so. Does Brother Shaw think an army and a church are the same kind of organization? An army is organized to kill men and to capture property—a church to save men and practice justice and equity. I have been in both. Restitution is a Bible doctrine; no one can get to heaven that does not practice it.

The M. E. Church is much larger than ours. They can use us as they please; with their past record, what may we expect? It would be a complete surrender of all our rights and privileges, as well as our honor and manhood, to go in as now proposed.

Our Commissioners may turn over our property, but our membership—it will stay in the M. E. Church, South. A great preacher said to me, "We are losing materially now; some are not paying the Centenary money; others are refusing to help build church houses for fear we have the fate of the Presbyterians."

A MOTHER'S MEETING.

"I beg your pardon," said the cow,
"But it would make you laugh
Could you but hear the cunning things
Said by my little calf.
She's only three days old; you'd scarce
Believe the thing was true;
That darling child has called me 'Ma-a-a-a!'
And once she murmured 'Moo!'"

"I beg you pardon," said the hen,
A bird of lofty mien;
"But when my chicklets tried to eat
A large plebeian bean,
They turned their noses up,
The insult made them weep!
They looked with scorn upon the seed
And loudly cried, 'Cheap! Cheap!'"

"I beg your pardon," said the mare,
Whose colt was six days old;
"About that little son of mine
I could a tale unfold.
I asked him if he thought 'twould rain,
It was but yesterday:
He looked me in the eye and smiled,
And said, distinctly, 'Neigh!'"

"I beg your pardon," said the dame
Whose child had lived a year;
"Than mine your babes are younger far,
Much smarter, too, I fear.
I hate to tell the horrid truth,
Yet, 'tis the thing to do:
My great big baby's never said
A single thing but 'Goo!'"

CAST.

The auctioneer glanced at his book. "Number 29," he said, "black mare, aged, blind in near eye, otherwise sound."

The cold rain and the biting northeast wind did not add to the appearance of Number 29, as she stood, dejected, listless, with head drooping, in the center of the farmers and horse dealers who were attending the sale of cast army horses. She looked as though she realized that her day had waned, and that the bright steel work, the soft, well-greased leather, the snowy head-rope and the shining curb were to be put aside for less noble trappings.

She had a curiously shaped white blaze, and I think it was that, added to the description of her blindness, which stirred my memory within me. I closed my eyes for a second and it all came back to me, the gun stuck in the mud, the men straining at the wheels, the shells bursting, the reek of high explosive, the two leaders lying dead on the road, and above all, two gallant horses doing the work of four and pulling till you'd think their hearts would burst.

I stepped forward and, looking closer at the mare's neck, found what I had expected, a great scar. That settled it. I approached the auctioneer and asked permission to speak to the crowd for a few moments.

"Well," said he, "I'm supposed to do the talking here, you know."

"It won't do you any harm," I pleaded, "and it will give me a chance to pay off a big debt."

"Right," he said, smiling; "carry on."

"Gentlemen," I said, "about this time a year ago I was commanding a battery in France. It was during the bad days, and we were falling back with the Hun pressing hard upon us. My guns had been firing all the morning from a sunken road, when we got orders to limber up and get back to a rear position. We hadn't had a bad time till then, a few odd shells, but nothing that was meant especially for our benefit. And then, just as we were getting away, they spotted us, and a battery opened on us good and strong. By a mixture of good luck and great effort we'd got all the guns away but one, when a shell landed just in front of the leaders and knocked them both, out with their driver; at the same time the gun was jerked off the road into a muddy ditch. Almost simultaneously another shell killed one of the wheelers, and there we were with one horse left to get the gun out of the ditch and along a road that was almost as bad as the ditch itself.

"It looked hopeless, and it was on the tip of my tongue to give orders to abandon the gun, when suddenly out of the blue there appeared on the bank above us a horse, looking unconcernedly down at us.

"In those days loose horses were straying all over the country, and I took this to be one from another battery which had come to us for company.

"I turned to one of the men. 'Catch that mare quick.'

"In a few minutes we had the harness off the dead wheeler and on the new-comer. Pull? Gentlemen, if you could have seen those two horses pull!

"We'd just got a move on the gun when another shell came and seemed to burst right on top of the strange mare. I heard a terrified squeal, and through the smoke I saw her stagger and with a mighty effort recover herself. I ran round and saw she'd been badly hit over the eye and had a great tearing gash in the neck. We never thought she could go on, but she pulled away just the same, with the blood pouring off her, till finally we got the gun out and down the road to safety.

"I got knocked out a few minutes later, and from that day to this I've often wondered what had happened to the mare that had served us so gallantly. I know now. There she stands before you. I'd know her out of a thousand by the white blaze; and if there was a doubt, there's her blind eye and the scar on her neck.

"That's all, gentlemen; but I'm going to ask the man who buys her to remember her story and to see that her last days are not too hard."

She fell at a good price to a splendid type of West Country farmer, and the auctioneer whispered to me, "I'm glad old Carey's got her. There's not a man in the county keeps his horses better."

"Old Carey" came up to me as we were moving off. "I had a son in France," he said, "in the gunners, too, but he hadn't the luck of the old mare"—he hesitated a moment and his old eyes looked steadily into mine—"for he'll never come back. The mare'll be all right, sir," he went on as he walked off, "easy work and full rations. I reckon she's earned them."—London Punch.

THE REFORMER.

He was a small, weazened, dried-up, brown monkey, guided at the end of the rope by a hard-faced, frowning master.

The little actor stood in the midst of a group of delighted children and interested grown-ups, took off his red cap and bowed, and with his finger-like claws picked up the pennies which were thrown to him and put them into the pocket of his tiny red jacket. Then he danced to the rasping tune played by the organ grinder. Next he bowed again and ran up to a little child. She took him into her arms, and he seemed to understand that unusual touch of love, for he kissed her in a very human way. The little girl was delighted, but the parents excitedly told her to drop the wee brown elf, and, seizing their child, they hurried her away.

Then the performer was given a lighted cigarette. He looked disgustedly at his master, and even made up a face, showing how much he disliked the cigarette, but seeing the frown, and being jerked by the rope, he dared not disobey. So he reluctantly put it between his teeth and smoked away, his face wearing a grimace of anger. Some one gave him a lighted match, but he threw it down on the pavement in great disgust, showing that he knew it was intended for a joke.

Poor little performer! May you have a comfortable basket to sleep in at night, where you will forget the man who tried to play a joke on you, the cigarette, and the frowns of your hard master. May you remember only the little girl who smiled happily as she held you!—Exchange.

EARNESTNESS.

If you have seen a person who is in earnest, you have seen a person who does things. He does not stop to ask if they are difficult, nor is he frightened by a few obstacles. He finds a way to do what he has undertaken; and if he does not find a way he makes one. Hindrances that have turned some of us back from a good purpose have been tossed aside by others as though they were nothing more than straws. Why this difference? Why do some succeed where others fail? One reason is that some are in earnest and others are not. Earnestness is love in action. It is the soul of work. When it does not find the means at hand with which to achieve, it creates them on the spot. You may as well try to stop a cyclone as the individual who has concentrated all the resources of his being upon the accomplishment of a certain task. If we are continually seeking the path of least resistance, we shall find that it leads to no goal worth reaching. Achievement and perspiration go together.—Young Folks.

SOLDIERS OR MISSIONARIES?—A THREE-MINUTE TALK.

The great work of Christianty in the world is to bring about the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth. That Kingdom will not be established until all nations acknowledge the sovereignty of Christ and conduct their affairs according to the principles of his teachings.

A complacent Christianity is not likely to realize fully the responsibility resting upon it with reference to unsettled world conditions, and it is still less likely to accomplish very much by way of relieving the acute need that exists in so many quarters of the world to-day. When Christ looked upon the people that were as sheep without a shepherd, his heart was moved mightily within him, and the simple record states that he "began to teach them many things." It was impossible for him to sit quietly and calmly by, while the people went on in the ways that lead to destruction. The "Christianity of Christ" was a militant Christianity, tremendously determined that all the forces of Heaven should be used for the overthrow of evil and error, and the establishment of righteousness.

But there was never an attempt by Jesus to make his teachings operative by force of arms. He did rebuke a flagrant violation of the sanctity of the temple by the ejection of those who had made the place of prayer a "den of thieves," but it is likely that the power of his moral indignation was more heavily felt by the usurpers than were the blows from the "scourge of small cords." Jesus depended upon the faithful teaching of the principles of divine truth for the accomplishment of the holy mission for which he was willing to give his life.

So it must be to-day. The world is to be won to God, not by war, but by work. Unfortunately it sometimes happens that mighty armies have to be marshalled to withstand the attacks of arrogant lawlessness, but the normal, divinely sanctioned method of making men good is by teaching them the truth. Missionaries, therefore, are worth more to the Kingdom of God than are great companies of trained soldiers.

CAN THE EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN LEGALLY BE POSTPONED?

In connection with our recent suggestion that the Educational Campaign be postponed until the meeting of the General Conference, our esteemed contemporary, the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, makes the point that this Campaign was ordered by the General Conference and, therefore, no subordinate body is legally competent to authorize a postponement.

There can be no doubt but that the Campaign was ordered by the General Conference; but it was ordered at the specific request of the Board of Education through the adoption of Report No. 5 of the Committee on Education, and the Board of Education was authorized to take general supervision and direction of the work. Since conditions have arisen subsequent to that session of the General Conference that could not be foreseen by those who composed it, and since the General Conference relied largely upon the wisdom of the Board of Education in recommending the Campaign, we do not imagine there would be any disposition on the part of the next General Conference to pass a resolution of censure if the Board of Education should report that it was unable to carry out its instructions on account of circumstances beyond its control. Only an emergency would justify such a report, but we believe that emergency has arisen, and what may be interpreted as permissive instructions ought not to compel an action the wisdom of which is now seriously open to question.

We are still of the opinion that the Educational Campaign should be postponed until the next General Conference, and that all the connectional causes that must have, sooner or later, adequate provision for their needs should be included in one great campaign to be consummated after a careful study of the situation in the light of changed conditions.

TO THE READERS OF THE ADVOCATE.

Your Publishing Committee at their meeting last October were faced by a few facts which had to be solved in order to avoid financial difficulties. The high cost of living called for an increased expense account, for labor was hard to secure and printers were demanding more for less time, paper was costing more and overhead expenses were climbing all the time.

In consideration of these facts and not willing to increase the cost of the paper to the individual subscriber, a Campaign for an increased subscription list was planned, which, while it met with a hearty response upon the part of many, did not clear the situation, for the expense account continued to climb.

Paper is now selling for three and four times the figure paid a year ago and is still climbing in price, being now much higher than at the time of the October meeting of the Committee.

All other papers are facing the same condition and have found the only remedy to be an increase in the cost of the paper to the individual subscriber. Practically all lines of business have adjusted themselves to the new order of things by raising prices. The Advocate is one of the very few enterprises that have tried to maintain the old, before-the-war price.

With these facts before your Committee they have authorized an increase in the price of the paper to take effect on May 1. The price from that date will be two ($2.00) to the individual subscriber for all new subscriptions and likewise for all renewals. The price to superannuates and widows of preachers, however, will remain as at present.

Your Committee wish that they could have continued the paper at the old figure, but think that this is the only thing to be done under the circumstances and feel that the readers and subscribers will all agree with them in their action.

JNO. F. FOSTER,
Chairman of the Publishing Committee.
Franklin, La., April 24, 1920.

THE SHORTAGE OF NEWSPRINT.

Only those who are directly interested in the publishing of a newspaper are likely to realize how serious the shortage of paper has become. Thus far we have been able to get the Advocate out every week on time, but we cannot say how long we shall be able to continue to do so. We placed an order more than three months ago for a supply that would have carried us well into the summer if we could have received it; but the jobbers through whom we have bought for many years tell us that the paper is not yet in sight, and that they are unable to say when it will be delivered. Their own warehouse is empty, and they are doing all in their power to hasten a delivery that will take care of the pressing needs of their customers.

Our own supply of paper is exhausted. By the merest good fortune we were able to borrow enough from a friendly printer to get out this week's issue, and we are hopeful that we have made temporary provision for next week; we are doing the very best we can to supply our needs, but we cannot tell what the future will bring forth.

This scarcity is, of course, reflected in the price we have to pay for what paper we are able to secure. As a matter of fact, publishers no longer take prices into consideration—it is simply a question of getting the paper at any price. We happen to know that the publishers of two of the leading newspapers of New Orleans are now in Canada, or have been there lately, trying to secure shipments to meet their urgent needs. Announcements have already been made by many publishers that they are forced to reduce the size of their publications, and not a few of the smaller papers have been forced to suspend publication altogether.

No other business in the country, perhaps, has been harder hit by prevailing high prices than has the newspaper business. Those periodicals that have not adjusted their subscription and advertising rates to the new order of things are fighting a losing battle. It is only a question of time when they will have to make the adjustment or go out of business, if present conditions continue.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

"Things are going well with us," writes Rev. J. O. Ware, of Centreville, Miss.

Dr. Theodore Copeland has recently held a very successful meeting at Checotah, Okla.

"We are moving along well on the Brooklyn and Bond charge," writes Rev. E. M. Allen, of the Mississippi Conference.

Rev. J. L. Evans, of Oakdale, La., has received 21 members into the church since Conference—15 on profession of faith and 6 by certificate.

A note from Rev. W. J. Walters, of Daleville, Miss., informs us that his work is moving along nicely with the good people whom he serves.

Thirteen members were received into the church at Houma, La., on Easter Sunday, and six infants were baptized. Rev. F. J. McCoy is the pastor.

A series of revival services was begun at Galloway Memorial Church, Jackson, Miss., on last Sunday. The pastor, Rev. C. W. Crisler, is being assisted by Rev. John A. May, of Alabama.

Brother S. Hibbert, an official member of Centenary Church, McComb City, Miss., is in the Presbyterian Hospital, of this city, where he underwent an operation on Tuesday of this week.

Mrs. W. W. McNeill, of Greenwood, Miss., is another old-time friend of the Advocate, her first subscription dating back to more than fifty years ago.

We regret that absence from the city prevented our seeing Rev. J. A. Moore, presiding elder of the Newton District, Mississippi Conference, when he called at the Advocate office one day last week.

Mr. J. D. Jewell, father of Mrs. J. E. Selfe, wife of our pastor at Epworth Church, this city, died at his home in Jackson, Mich., on April 7. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the bereaved family.

Mrs. S. A. McKneely, one of the most saintly members of our church at Hammond, La., passed to her final reward on April 7. We sympathize deeply with those who are in sorrow because of her death.

Rev. R. W. Tucker, of Crowley, La., received 40 members into the church at the 11 o'clock service on April 18, the result of personal work. More than 80 Advocates go to the members of that church each week.

The New Orleans District Epworth League Conference held its annual session at Felicity Church, April 23-25. Rev. J. B. Gramhling, of Shreveport, La., president of the State Epworth League Conference, was present.

Rev. R. A. Davis, an honored superannuate of the Louisiana Conference, who makes his home with his daughter, Mrs. R. S. Crichlow, in New Orleans, is now on a visit to Houston, Texas, accompanied by his son, R. B. Davis.

Rev. R. A. Bozeman recently closed a good meeting with Rev. T. D. Pipscomb at Clinton, La. Fifteen members were added to the church, most of them on profession of faith. Brother Bozeman is with Rev. J. F. Waltman in a meeting at Kentwood, La., this week.

Rev. W. H. LaPrade, well-known in hoth the Louisiana and the Mississippi Conferences, where he served some of the most important charges, is delightfully situated as pastor of our church at College Park, Ga., where he ministers to a cultured and responsive congregation.

When the recent tornado took its toll of life and limb at Philadelphia, Miss., the Baptist and the Methodist people showed a commendable spirit in opening their houses of worship for the relief of the stricken, the one as a hospital for the wounded, the other as a morgue for the dead.

Rev. Lovick Pierce Law will begin a series of evangelistic services at Trinity Methodist Church, Ruston, La., on Sunday, May 2. Dr. R. H. Wynn, the pastor, received about fifty members into the church from the Sunday school on Sunday, April 25, as a part of the Sunday School Day program.

The following telegram was received from Bro. W. E. Upchurch, of Ruston, La., just before going to press: "Sunday was a great day for Ruston Methodists. Sunday School Day was observed—743 present. Collection over $50. Fifty-six received into church." That was a great day indeed.

Among the many tragedies caused by the cyclone which passed through Mississippi last week, one of the most distressing was the death of Mrs. Annie Tillman, of Meridian, and the serious injury of Mrs. J. M. T. Hamilton, both being near relatives of Rev. H. M. Ellis, of McComb City.

We learn with sorrow of the death of Mrs. Mary Roberts, wife of Dr. R. Roberts, on April 14, at her home in Ruston, La. She was in her eighty-first year, and, with her husband, had heen a valued member of our church for many years. We extend sincere sympathy to her bereaved huhsand and members of the family.

Rev. Jno. F. Foster, our pastor at Franklin, La., was called to New Orleans on Monday of this week to officiate at the funeral of an old-time friend, Mr. Wm. F. Sherwood, a member of Second Methodist Church. Brother Foster, who is chairman of the Publishing Committee of the Advocate, honored the office with a call while in the city.

The First Methodist Church of Corinth, Miss., suffered a distinct loss on April 20 in the death of Mr. J. J. Bell. Although quiet and reserved, he was an excellent citizen who did much for the civil life of the city and its residents. The funeral service was conducted hy Rev. Jas. H. Felts, of Columbus, Miss., assisted hy Rev. O. W. Bradley.

The editor greatly enjoyed a short visit to Purvis, Miss., last week, where he was the guest of Rev. and Mrs. W. M. Williams. The fish were not biting very well, but the day spent on the creek was an exhilarating recreation. The praayer meeting on Wednesday evening was conducted by the Epworth League—and splendidly conducted, too. Brother Williams is accomplishing a great work at Purvis.

We were greatly honored on Saturday of last week by a call from Mr. W. T. Holland, the editor of the St. Helena Echo, published at Greensburg, La. Brother Holland is a native of Mississippi, a life-long Methodist, and a charming gentleman of the old school. He has recently passed through a great sorrow in the death of his wife, but his faith is beautifully bright and he sorrows not as those who have no hope.

We are authorized hy Rev. Martin Hebert, presiding elder of the Houma District, Louisiana Conference, to announce that Aristide Brulet has heen appointed pastor of the Port Barre charge.

The meeting at Biloxi, Miss., in which the pastor, Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, was assisted hy Rev. J. V. Bennett, one of the Mississippi Conference evangelists, and Rev. J. M. Lewis, who led the singing, closed on last Sunday night. About fifty members were received into the church on profession of faith, and fifteen or twenty by certificate. The congregation on Sunday night is said to have been the largest assemhly of local people that ever attended the church at one service. Brother Sharhrough is doing a great work at Biloxi.

We learn from an exchange that Rev. Glenn Flinn, well-known in Louisiana, has been appointed pastor of Highland Park Church, Dallas, Texas, to take the place of Dr. Paul B. Kern, who had to give up the pastorate of the church on account of his duties as Acting Dean of the Theological Department of Southern Methodist University, to which position he was recently elected.

We learn from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate that Dr. A. M. Muckenfuss, for a number of years professor of chemistry in Emory University, has resigned that position to accept a place with a large firm doing research chemical work. Dr. Muckenfuss will make his home in Woolbridge, N. J., where one of the plants of the corporation with which he is engaged is located. Dr. Muckenfuss is pleasantly remembered by the older students of Millsaps College, where he held the chair of chemistry and physics for several years. He married Miss Margaret Galloway, a daughter of Bishop and Mrs. C. B. Galloway.

The Bible will bring you more consolation than all the mediums on earth in regard to the future state of life. The gospel is natural and preaches hope and happiness for those who have lived well here and gone on to the next world. Those who follow spiritism with intensive vigor become neurotics and nervous wrecks. It is no wonder they think they hear rappings. Even a well man can hear noises after he has read ghost stories until midnight.—W. A. Fite.

In announcing the death of Brother J. A. McALPIN, we chronicle the loss of one of the church's most faithful and devoted members and the town's most prominent citizen. He was born at Ramer, Tenn., May 10, 1867, and died at Hollandale, Miss., December 23, 1919. He had been mayor and tax collector for the last two years; master of the Masonic Lodge for the last four years, and clerk of the W. O. W. for 22 years. Above all else, he was a devoted Christian, a member of the board of stewards of the M. E. Church, South, and one of the most efficient Sunday school teachers we have ever known. Brother McAlpin was unassuming in his manner, but true to his convictions and faithful in all the relations of life. When the shadows of the fatal disease fell across his path, he talked of his going away with as much confidence and assurance as if he were going on a visit to an earthly friend. His last thoughts were concerning his church which he had served so faithfully. In the abiding faith of Christ he went to sleep to awake in the mansion in the skies. May the Lord sustain his devoted wife, relatives and friends in their sore bereavement. V. C. CURTIS.

Greenville, Miss.

MATTIE L. JAMES, daughter of John A. Petty was born and reared in Hardin County, Tennessee. She professed religion in childhood, and joined the Methodist Church in which she lived a faithful Christian until the day she went away. She married Rev. J. R. James, to which union were born five children—four sons and one daughter. In the summer of 1916, Mrs. James had a severe stroke of paralysis, from which she never entirely recovered, and on their removal from Wheeler circuit to Mooreville circuit, Mrs. James went to spend a short while with her daughter, Mrs. J. M. Brady, in Corinth. On December 6, she was taken ill with influenza, which left her heart seriously affected, and on March 10 she was taken with pain at heart and soon passed away. From the time her husband went into the ministry, to the last day of her life, she walked by his side doing her part well, but like Martha, she always wanted to serve. For 25 years she has cooked for more presiding elders and pastors than any woman of her age, always giving them the best; and with pains she prepared a good bed in a good room for the preachers, because she believed that they were the elect of God. Mrs. James' life has been a benediction to all who knew her, always making friends wherever she went. Her going leaves a cloud of sorrow that only the grace of God can remove. She leaves her husband, two sons, and one daughter, to mourn their loss—the husband in charge of Mooreville circuit, the oldest son, C. B. James, of Vicksburg, Miss., Mrs. J. M. Brady, and Lester James, youngest son, of Corinth, Miss. Two of the boys have gone on before. Herbert died of typhoid fever, and Ernest was drowned. The funeral service was conducted on March 12 by Rev. O. W. Bradley, of Corinth, and the body laid to rest beside the two boys, in the city cemetery at Corinth, Miss. Her going is our loss, but Heaven's gain.

Signed by: Her husband, two sons and one daughter.

On Saturday, February 29, 1920, the gentle spirit of our beloved sister and fellow worker, Mrs. EUNICE PRICE DEY, was taken from earthly labors to heavenly rest. She was a loving wife, a most self-sacrificing and patient mother, and a loyal and faithful church member. We miss her gentle voice, and the inspiration of her presence among us, but are assured that she has been accorded an abundant entrance into the Heavenly Home. The exquisite floral offerings which banked her casket were silent testimony to the high esteem in which she was held by church and community. Measured by years, her stay on earth was not long, but the influence of her noble Christian life and example will go on through the years, a sacred memory, as the fragrance of "an ointment poured forth." The sorrowing husband and two beautiful little children who are thus bereft of wife and mother, have our heartfelt sympathy and prayers for consolation and guidance, that they may be an unbroken family in that "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

MRS. P. O. LOWREY,
For Woman's Missionary Society,
Pleasant Hill, La.

Whereas God has seen best to call to Himself Mrs. C. E. Ives, wife of Prof. C. E. Ives, of Gueydan, La.,

Be it resolved, That this memorial be placed on our quarterly conference record and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Sister Ives was the president of the Ladies' Aid of the Gueydan church and was the one who aroused interest until she was able to see it organized. Since her coming to Gueydan two years ago with her husband and family, she has been an active worker among the ladies of the town. Her place in the community will be hard to fill.

She was a devoted wife and loving mother. Few homes enjoyed the same peace and happiness as that of Prof. Ives. Every one who associated with them was aware of the true harmony in the home life. She was strict in her Christian life as to church attendance, Sabbath observance and religious training in the home. Her conversation was always pleasant and profitable.

It is with sorrow that we give up one so beloved from our midst. We most earnestly pray the comfort of our Heavenly Father to be with her grieved companion and children.

Try This For Your Health

For diseases which do not readily yield to drug treatment, such as chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, uric acid poisoning, and diseases of the kidneys, bladder, and liver, the best physicians send their wealthy patients to the famous mineral springs. Some even spent months at the Spas of Europe and were almost invariably benefited, or permanently relieved.

I believe that the Shivar Spring is the greatest mineral spring ever discovered, and I believe it so firmly that I offer to send you enough water for a three week's treatment (two five gallon demijohns) on my guarantee that if it fails to benefit your case I will refund the price. You would hardly believe me if I told you that only about two out of a hundred, on the average, say that they have received no benefit. The water is restoring thousands. It restored my health when my friends and physicians thought my case was incurable and I am willing and anxious for you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If I win you become a life-friend of the Spring. If I lose I will be sorry for you but I will appreciate your courtesy in giving the water a trial and will gladly refund your money on request. Sign the following letter:

FROM THE SATARTIA CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: Please inform the brethren through the columns of the Advocate that the pastor has been taking his "Entered Apprentice Degree" up here in the Satartia charge, and, after many days of anxiety and suspense on account of rain, bad roads and the river, day by day threatening the village with its mighty sluice of water, he is hard at work and enjoying the hospitality of her people.

The first thing that came under his observation on reaching his charge was a snug little town located on the left bank of the Yazoo River. The scenes and location were enticing and conducive to the delight of a young preacher. The new pastor enjoyed this part of the initiation exceedingly well; but he had not gone many gates before a friend staggered him by saying, "The river sometimes pours her water over all this town, except a little spot at the parsonage; furthermore, I have seen steamboats move slowly up this street." This was exciting, but a thought of consolation came in the fact that there would be dry ground at the parsonage. He went on down the street a little further, wondering what he might expect next, when he met Mrs. Flora Childress, who courteously and kindly entertained him. She also told him that the town was threatened with water from the river and added, "We, all of us, find refuge in the parsonage during an overflow." At this the preacher stretched his mouth and eyes to a painful limit with consternation.

That pastor thought if he had to go many more rounds like that he would be bound to hold a consultation with the presiding elder. After going a few steps further he met with a man who wore glasses and had a way of looking sideways over them. He introduced himself as, "A. B. Newman, the best looking man in town." That shocked the preacher's modesty. The young minister stood with his hands in his pockets up to his elbows and related to him the experience through which he had just gone. But this handsome man relieved the situation wonderfully by saying, "Be not troubled, my young friend; though the way looks dark and gloomy and people do sometimes get drowned in the river, just think of the promise, 'He that holdeth out faithful to the end shall be saved.'"

Quite a change came over that preacher. Deep down in his heart he was saying, "Amen!" He was not quite restored to his normal condition until he met with that worthy and efficient Sunday school superintendent, A. B. Kling, who said, "I sell goods to the pastor at cost;" then he was restored fully. One thing that can be said of the merchants of Satartia is, they do a good part by their ministers.

The ladies here are a fine set of folk: they don't talk about one another any more than they can help, and they beat the world in looking after the sick and poor. On one occasion they neglected their homes and lost sleep for weeks to nurse a poor lady through a siege of illness.

Thanks to Brother Morse and the big-hearted stewards for a raise of $200 on the pastor's salary, which makes the pastor's salary $1200 this year. B. H. WILLIAMS, P. C.

Owe Their Health To

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—overshadowing indeed is the success of this great medicine. Compared with it, all other medicines for women's ills seem to be experiments.

Why is it so successful? Simply because of its sterling worth. For over forty years it has had no equal. Women for two generations have depended upon it with confidence.

Thousands of Their Letters are on our files, which prove these statements to be facts, not mere boasting.

Here Are Two Sample Letters:

Mother and Daughter Helped.

Middleburg, Pa.—"I am glad to state that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did me much good when I was 35 years old. I was run down with female trouble and was not able to do anything, could not walk for a year and could not work. I had treatment from a physician but did not gain. I read in the papers and books about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. The first few bottles gave me relief and I kept on using it until I got better and was able to do my work. The Vegetable Compound also regulated my daughter when she was 15 years old. I can recommend Vegetable Compound as the best medicine I have ever used."—Mrs. W. YERGER, R. 3, Box 21, Middleburg, Pa.

Fall River, Mass. — "Three years ago I gave birth to a little girl and after she was born I did not pick up well. I doctored for two months and my condition remained the same. One day one of your little books was left at my door and my husband suggested that I try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I started it immediately and I felt better and could eat better after the first bottle, and I continued taking it for some time. Last year I gave birth to a baby boy and had a much easier time as I took the Vegetable Compound for four months before baby came. SUNDAY SCHOOL DAY.

We look to the pastors and the superintendents in North Mississippi Conference to help us secure a more general observance of Sunday School Day throughout our Conference. Last year fifty-nine of our charges made no report on Sunday School Day. Read paragraph 321 in the Discipline. Send to Brother Gladney for the programs, which will not cost you anything. Have the service at the best time to suit you, but have the service! "Let the whole line advance."

E. S. LEWIS,
Chairman Sunday School Board,
North Miss. Conference.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Last Sunday, May 18, was spent at Magee, Miss. I was glad to be with Brother Johnson. The people at Magee have received him kindly and he starts this year's work in fine shape. This Sunday school has promised to be a Standard School. I trust that God will bless them and their efforts and that they will reach 100 per cent. They have promised to put on a campaign for Sabbath observance and evangelism. They are greatly interested in teacher-training, also.

I had the privilege of visiting the Sanatorium while on this trip. They are doing a great work there.

I trust that each superintendent has received the Sunday School Day programmes. They are easy to get up, and I trust that the observance of the day this year will be the best in its history. Pray for the work and the workers.

Be sure to elect your delegates to the District Institutes.

I am anxious for each Sunday school to appoint as soon as possible a Director of teacher-training and notify me whom you appoint, giving name and address.

Yours in Him,
JNO. C. CHAMBERS.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Would you like to see a Training School for preachers, parents, superintendents, and teachers established in our Conference that we may become better qualified to deal with the children God has given us to train for him?

How many of our Sunday school people care to have a federation of Wesley Bible classes, intermediate, senior, young people's and adult, that we might make these organized classes more effective in our churches? Who will join me in praying that these two meetings may be held this summer?

Only a few of our large schools have failed to order Sunday School Day programs. A large per cent of the country schools are making preparations to observe the day this month or in May.

The following is a revised list of Centenary Specials offered the schools, classes, departments, and individuals of our Conference. You can take one of these specials and direct your money to suit you.

Write to Mrs. W. T. Boswell, New Albany, or write to me and let us settle on one or more of these specials before the year is gone.

Native Teacher, Rio de Janeiro, $240 a year; Native Primary Teacher, Day School, Huchow, $180; Native Teacher, Kobe, $250; Native Parsonage, Central Church, Kyoto; Language Teacher, Choon Chun, $120; Sunday School Man, Chulwon District, $360; Keul Pang Teacher, $90; Chapel, Wonsan East, $100; Native Parsonage (site included) Seoul District; Belgian Orphan, $100, French Orphan, $120; 12 Blocks of Stock, Building and Land, Girls' Dormitory, Havana, $50 each; 30 Blocks Stock, $100 each for City Mission Work.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The District Institutes as published in the Advocate in a previous issue will be the order and time which will be followed. These meetings are to be district-wide and the success of our meeting will depend on the delegates present. We are gong to give a high-grade program. When these meetings will have passed, we are counting on a full report from every school in our Methodist fellowship. Pastors will make announcement from Sunday to Sunday and from day to day; superintendents will take notice and talk with the leaders of the school and work up a large delegation, and a good one.

Sunday School Day programs are in your hands now and you will make much of the day. You will give us an offering equal to the amount your Sunday School Board has requested. This amount will make it easy for your Board to do its work for the year now before us. Send your offering at once to C. V. Breithaupt, Alexandria.

You will be careful not to confuse the pledge you made for your school or Bible class at the Federation at Shreveport with the Sunday School Day quota we are asking.

We will soon be ready to help you by having our Elementary Superintendent visit your school and meet with you in charge or circuit institutes. Write me in regard to such help.

The Shreveport District Conference at Mooringsport was held this week and it was crowded from start to finish. The regular business for which the meeting was called was skillfully carried through. The Conference Field Secretary was present and enjoyed the good fellowship. Thanks to Brother Ware, the host of the District Conference, and the presiding elder, Briscoe Carter.

Sunday School Field Secretary.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved member and co-worker, Mrs. Elizabeth Chapman, and while we bow in humble submission to His will, yet we deplore the loss of one whose lovable character and kindly disposition made her generally beloved. Therefore

Be it resolved, That in her death the Womans Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, of Bunkie, La., has lost a member whose character as a devout Christian contributed greatly to its strength and growth.

Be it resolved, That in her death we, each of us, feel keenly the loss of a warm personal friend and counsellor; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the sorrowing family, a copy be sent to the Bunkie Record and the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and a copy be spread on the minutes of this Society.

Signed by: Mrs. G. W. Griffin, Mrs. W. M. Mantiply, Mrs. H. P. Thomas.

THE ROAD TO HAPPINESS.

To live is hard; and there is not one of us, I fancy, who has not again and again been tempted to despair of life when he has dared to look upon its dark mysteries; but again, there is not one of us who has not found a great sorrow, a great disappointment, a great trial, an avenue to unexpected joy.—Canon Westcott.

The Kidneys and the Skin. If the kidneys are weak or torpid, the skin will be pimply or blothy. Hood's Sarsaparilla strengthens and stimulates the kidneys, and clears the complexion. By thoroughly purifying the blood it makes good health.—Adv.

It is supposed by some, altogether falsely, that faith is opposed to reason and that Christ does not claim intellect. His very name is the word and the wisdom of God, and he demands the cultivation of all our faculties, and he bids us prepare ourselves in order that he may do his work.—A. G. A. Hall.

Acute Indigestion Soon Relieved

Arkansas Lady Says She Was In a Serious Condition, But Promptly Recovered After Taking Thedford's Black-Draught.

Peach Orchard, Ark.—Mrs. Etta Cox, of this place, says: "Some time ago I had a spell of acute indigestion, and was in a bad fix. I knew I must have a laxative, and tried Black-Draught. It relieved me, and I soon was all right.

"I can't say enough for Thedford's Black-Draught, and the great good it did for me.

"It is fine for stomach and liver trouble, and I keep it for this. A few doses soon make me feel as good as new. I am glad to tell others the good it did."

Acute indigestion is a serious matter and needs prompt treatment or dangerous results may ensue. A physician's help may be needed, but a good dose of Thedford's Black-Draught will be of benefit by relieving the system from the undigested food which is the cause of the trouble.

Thedford's Black-Draught is purely vegetable, not disagreeable to take and acts in a prompt and natural way.

So many thousands of persons have been benefited by the use of Thedford's Black-Draught, you should have no hesitancy in trying this valuable, old, well-established remedy, for most liver and stomach disorders.

TIMES OF REFRESHING IN KOREA.

By Bishop Walter R. Lambuth.

A great religious awakening in Korea was the burden of intercession at our Annual Conference at Wonsan. Prayer for this was coupled with the expressed desire for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. This was partly because the time seemed ripe for a revival, partly because it was the Centenary year, but more than all this the tribulations through which the Korean church was going demanded there should be strong crying and tears, that God should visit His children. I have never known such earnest prayer and supplication. Doctor Rawlings and Miss Howell were profoundly impressed by the situation, and with me believed the day for a visitation from on high was not far off.

That day, thank God, has come. Every message from the field is filled with the good tidings. It is true that the persecution is unabated, but grace much more abounds and the hearts of the people, though burdened, are made glad. Brother M. B. Stokes, presiding elder of the Chunchun District, writes:

"I am sure you will be glad to hear that we are having times of refreshing in this district. God graciously gave us a time of great blessing during the three weeks of our Bible Institute in January. In spite of the heavy snowfall we had a very good attendance, more than forty in all, and there was manifest all through the meetings a delightful spirit of harmony. The spirit of prayer came upon us, too, and I think I have never seen such earnest crying out to God. For three weeks we met in the church every morning at 6 o'clock for an hour of supplication together.

"At the close of the meetings we organized four preaching bands and sent them out all over the district. They are now in the midst of their campaign. During the three weeks since the Institute 104 new believers have been reported, and some places have not yet been heard from. Since the Annual Conference we have had about 250 new believers. We are having the best times I have seen in about ten years.

"In the midst of our rejoicing we are having other things which cause us concern. During the past month, three of the preachers of the district have been arrested and are now in jail. They are Brother Yu Han Ik, of Choonchun; Brother Kim Young Hak, of Yangyang, and Brother Pak Yun Suh, of Whachun. The first two named are the two strongest men in the district. You may remember that Brother Yu led the singing at some of the evening meetings at our Conference."

Noble men, these. I remember them well. The sincerity, earnestness and faith with which they made their reports and pleaded for their people scattered in every direction impressed us greatly—thousands of Koreans are migrating across the northern border. But it was their prayers that went to our very hearts. They made strong claims upon the promises of a great God; they knew God, for no men could pray as they prayed without a personal experience. I was prepared to accept the statement which has come to me lately that some of the most effective evangelistic work going on is to be found in the many prisons where thousands of unconverted Koreans are being led to Christ through the instrumentality of the scores of Christian preachers and laymen of every denomination who also have been incarcerated. What is it but a repetition of the wonderful opening years of the Apostolic Church!

WHAT IS A MIRACLE?

Each miracle in the history of revelation is only one tiny bit of power and blessed light that pierces through the walls of our human darkness and need from the great universe of love and power which incloses us on every side. Once the rift opened wide enough for a host of the heavenly choir to rush through and sing ere it closed.—J. H. Eccleston.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

Corresponding Secretary's Report.

Growth is always an indication of life. The Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference rejoices in the fact that it is alive, for it is growing in organization, in finances, and in spiritual life, as the records show.

We have 157 contributing Adult auxiliaries with 3757 members, 818 of which are new; 36 contributing Young People's auxiliaries with 674 members, of which 252 are new; 68 contributing Junior auxiliaries with a membership of 6148, of which 1518 are new, showing a net gain of 16 organizations for the year.

No special organization campaign was put on during 1919, but 44 contributing and 6 non-contributing societies were organized. It is interesting to note that the 44 contributing auxiliaries contributed $949.45, which is $555.65 more than was contributed by the 49 auxiliaries organized in 1918.

The loss in auxiliaries is gratifyingly smaller than in 1918, showing 26 societies against 42 of the previous year. Holly Springs and Winona Districts have the distinction of not having lost a single auxiliary. The new organizations are:

Sardis District — contributing, 8; Aberdeen District—contributing, 7; Holly Springs District—contributing 7, non-contributing 4; Winona District—contributing 6, non-contributing 1; Columbus District—contributing, 5; Greenville District—contributing, 5; Corinth District—contributing 3, non-contributing 1; Durant District—contributing, 3.

Special mention should be made of Charleston auxiliary in Sardis District for having organized a branch auxiliary at New Town. This auxiliary has its own officers, conducts its separate meetings, but Charleston auxiliary feels and shows a special interest in it and helps in every possible way. This "Big Sister" movement among all our auxiliaries would result in a marvelous increase in organizations.

Indicative of our new conception of stewardship is the fact that while our women were called upon to make larger gifts than ever to Missions, the increase in finances of our Woman's Work is larger than ever. We show a gain of $5013.04, or 28 per cent. Every district had a share in this gain as the treasurer's report will show.

Our list of specials has been materially increased, while only three were discontinued. Three kindergartens in Japan are supported by Mrs. W. B. Parks, of Merigold, Holly Springs Juniors, and "a friend." Shannon, Merigold, and Holly Springs Juniors each support a Sunday school in Japan, while Mrs. Taylor, of Sardis, supports a night school. Two new Bible Women are taken, one by Mesdames L. C. and Clara Short of the Sardis auxiliary, the other by the Okolona auxiliary. Winona auxiliary takes a $50 share in the Mary Black Hospital, Aberdeen auxiliary taking a $25 share in the same institution. The Tupelo Juniors, besides continuing their shares in Carolina Institute and Mary Black Hospital, gave $12.25 to be directed. We have 16 new specials for 1919, against 5 in 1918.

It is a special pleasure to report that every district excels in some particular.

Aberdeen makes an unusual record in amount of gain in finances. In 1918 this district held the eighth or last place, reporting a gain of only $44.84. For 1919, the record shows a gain of $903.76, giving the district first place in this particular.

Columbus leads in a very enviable way, reporting the largest per cent of auxiliaries on the Honor Roll; 67 per cent of the societies of this district attained the Standard of Excellence in 1919.

Corinth leads in a field hitherto practically untilled—that of Life Membership, reporting 21 life memberships among the Juniors.

Durant District sets a fine example by the lead in Week of Prayer observance, reporting 69 per cent of the auxiliaries observing this important week; the two auxiliaries reporting the largest gifts are Pickens and Goodman, both of Durant District.

Greenville District shows a strong belief in a sure foundation by taking the lead in per cent of gain in Junior Work.

Holly Springs District takes first place in net gain in auxiliaries, reporting seven new ones with no losses.

Sardis District leads in largest number of organizations, also the largest number of complete organizations.

Winona, as though determined to maintain the precedent she has followed the past two years, leads the entire Conference in finances. Besides, this district leads in having made the largest gifts to the Week of Prayer Fund.

This division of honors is but an indication that the growth of the work over the Conference has been symmetrical—a thing much to be desired always.

Of great significance is the fact that the Week of Prayer was more widely observed than in any previous year. In 1918, 94 societies remembered this important period; in 1919, 136 took part. A 100 per cent observance ought to be our goal for 1920.

At the last annual meeting, the Committee on Extension of Work recommended a "Rally-the-Membership Day" designed to arouse the old members of the auxiliaries to new activity. In accordance with the plan, programs and literature were sent to each auxiliary. Forty per cent of the societies carried out the program; 90 per cent of these gave special place on the program to the Juniors and Young People. Reports from the presidents of the auxiliaries entering into the plan indicate that the object of the day was accomplished in a large measure. It is to be deplored that many of the societies failed to take any part in the "Rally-the-Membership" campaign.

Reports from the various districts show that the special days, "Stewardship Day" in January and "Harvest Day" in December, are coming into the prominence they deserve. The use of the Pledge cards at the Stewardship Day will put any auxiliary on a sound financial basis, while "Harvest Day" is invaluable in rounding up the year's work and securing additional gifts. Shelby Auxiliary deserves special mention for the enthusiastic celebration of Harvest Day in 1919.

And now, contrary to the proverbial custom, I have saved the worst until the last in the hope that the presentation of the worst may inspire us to make it the best next year. I ask you to "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields."

There are 595 churches in the North Mississippi Conference and 157 Adult auxiliaries; 8 of these exist in churches where there are two such organizations, which means that after all, we have only 149 churches where the women are organized for service. This is a fact that ought to stir to the profoundest depths, every woman who knows what the Woman's Missionary Society means to the church.

"He that runs may read" that the year 1919 saw a wonderful development in the spiritual life of our church.

Salts If Backachy and Kidneys Hurt

Stop Eating Meat for a While if Your Bladder Troubles You.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.—Adv.

NEW CHURCH AT BELZONI, MISS.

We take the following account of a great achievement from a recent issue of the Belzoni Banner:

That the Methodists mean business was evidenced last Sunday when Rev. W. M. Campbell announced that the campaign for the funds for the erection of the new Methodist church would begin on Monday, April 12, and announced the necessary committees.

The various committees began work Monday, and worked through that day and Tuesday and Wednesday, and on Wednesday night the Methodist church was well filled with enthusiastic and happy members of the church for the great success they had achieved. The goal is $75,000 to erect a church and a parsonage.

The meeting was opened by taking into the church twelve members on profession of faith, seven of whom were baptized, and eight by letter, making twenty additions. The meeting was conducted by Rev. W. M. Campbell. The campaign committee submitted the following report:

"The Campaign Committee for funds with which to build a new Methodist church in Belzoni begs leave to report that we met on Monday night and decided to raise $75,000 for this purpose.

"After two days' canvassing and calling on and getting sixty-three individual subscriptions, the funds now stand in bona fide subscriptions at $52,975. We will continue to canvass until the full amount is raised."

Short addresses were made by Messrs. H. A. Sorrels, J. L. Forester, E. Crook, B. P. Brooks and W. M. Campbell. It was the happy resolution of all present that the full amount of $75,000 with which to build this church should be raised at once.

The church has shown phenomenal growth since Brother Campbell took charge last January, there having been seventy-one additions to the church, the Sunday school attendance doubled, and three times as many subscriptions to the church paper as there were before his coming. The Banner congratulates the Methodists and their pastor on their great work, and hopes they will reach the goal, and then some.

Do to-day's duty, fight to-day's temptation; and do not weaken and distract yourself by looking forward to things which you cannot see, and could not understand if you saw them. —Charles Kingsley.

PHOENIX CITY, ALABAMA:—" When I was a young girl Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription not only saved my life but it also enabled me to have a strong and healthy womanhood. For nearly a year I suffered with functional disturbance. Eight months of that time I was helpless in bed and suffered intensely. This was caused by my getting wet feet at a critical time.

All that year I was in the doctor's care but did not improve. I kept getting weaker all the time until my mother learned from a neighbor about Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription, got it at the drug store and gave it to me. The first bottle did such wonderful things for me that they gave me a second bottle. This restored me to a perfectly strong and normal condition, which I still maintain. I am so enthusiastic in praise of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, that I have no hesitancy in sending my testimonial for publication and besides that I am counting upon giving this medicine to my own daughter if she has the trouble that I had when entering into womanhood." WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY

We have learned to lay hold on God in prayer as never before; we have a new perception of the stewardship of personality and property; we have gained a broader world vision and a deeper sense of brotherhood. The intensive cultivation of the spiritual life of the church has laid a wonderful foundation for a great extensive program in the Woman's Work for the year 1920. If we fail to respond to the urge of this responsibility, we shall signally fail our church.

The district secretaries, however faithful and efficient, cannot do this organization work alone. If the work is done, it must be by the combined effort of the women all over the Conference. It will mean more work, more study, more prayer. But if we are willing really to burden ourselves for the extension of the Master's Kingdom this year, when we meet again next year, we shall have learned, experimentally, what the Psalmist meant when he said, "He that goeth forth with weeping bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." BEULAH S. BOSWELL.

A PLACE OF REFUGE.

Of late the writer has felt that in times of weakness and weariness, of suffering and sorrow, there is no refuge, no place of rest, which can for a moment be compared with the heavenly mercy-seat. There the burdened soul may cast itself on the bosom of infinite love—a peace which passeth all understanding may be enjoyed there.

The world with its cares and troubles and sorrows, may, for a season, be effectually excluded, and, in sweet communion with the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, faith may be strengthened, love increased, hope enlivened repentance deepened. Yea, every spiritual want and longing and desire may be satisfied by grace, with more simplicity and godly sincerity than hitherto, with a livelier faith, a warmer love, a deeper penitence, with heart more humbly dependent on his grace and more firmly devoted to his service.

I pray that the dear old Advocate may prove a blessing in many homes. I have been reading its pages many years; it is surely a welcome visitor in our home. Pray for me and mine.

SERVING UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

Dear Brother Carley: This has been a very busy year with me. I have been trying to serve Walnut Grove charge and attend Millsaps College also. My charge is very inconvenient to Millsaps. I have to go to Forest on the A. & V. R. R., and then go out twenty miles through the country over mighty bad roads, having one bad swamp and creek to cross. It has rained so much that the roads have been too bad for a car to travel over a part of them, so that I have had to get to and from the railroad in various ways. Every time I have gone this year, I have found the creek up and a perfect sea of water over a swamp about a mile wide, but I haven't missed a single appointment since I have been in college. It has been inconvenient and expensive, too, but I am trying to get a better education and I don't want to fall down on my job at Walnut Grove.

On one occasion in January I rode in a Ford till I had to get out and get in a wagon and ride through the water across the creek to a long slough bridge, where the abutment was floating so high that we couldn't get a team on it; then I got out on the bridge and walked across, put my suit in my suitcase, put on a pair of overalls and a rain coat, put my shoes across my shoulders and my suitcase on my back and waded out. The water was waist deep and I waded about 200 yards; then I got on another wagon and rode to a truck, got on it and rode to where a Ford car could carry me the rest of the way.

In general, my people seem to appreciate my efforts to get an education and my faithfulness in meeting appointments. My people at Freeny have shown their appreciation by sending me a nice large box of edibles, which we received to-day, containing a nice ham, several pieces of bacon, a bucket of lard, a sack of meal, some butter and 22 cans of vegetables and fruit. This not only lessens our grocery bills, but it causes us to love and appreciate our people more and to strive to give better service.

We have our revival meetings all planned and the help secured and are expecting a great year's work.

The Newton District Conference is to meet with us at Walnut Grove in June, and we are expecting a great meeting. We are expecting Walnut Grove to be benefited and we also expect to entertain the conference in such a way as to delight all the preachers and delegates. Pray for us and the work! W. N. WARE, P. C.

For more than Forty Years
Cotton Growers have known that

POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effects on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

KAINIT

20 per cent MANURE SALT

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big Cotton Crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three
Standard GERMAN Potash Salts
that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

ARE WE DOING OUR BEST?

From a review of Fred B. Fisher's book, "Garments of Power," we take this little story: "The boat was wrecked on a sandbar about four miles from shore, and broke up rapidly. Edwin Spencer, a frail young student in Northwestern University, standing on shore, saw the survivors come floating in. He dashed through the breakers to the deep water, seized a man, and brought him back to safety. He made ten such trips and rescued ten. Then a rope was tied around him, and once more he went out into the angry waves. A floating spar struck his head; and those standing on the shore, seeing that he was bleeding, started to pull him back. He untied the rope and swam forward, bringing in another man. He brought in seventeen. That night, while his brother and others tried to minister to him and bring back his strength, Spencer asked again and again, 'Did I do my best?'" He gave his life—who can doubt that he did his best? But it is not only in emergencies that we are called upon to show our mettle; our everyday duties put us to a supreme test. Are WE doing OUR best?

DEALING WITH MORAL EVILS.

The way to deal with a moral evil is to fight it to the death. It would be very pleasant if we could simply stand by and see the thing we hate pass away of its own free will and accord; but, so far as we know, there is no recorded instance of such accommodating action on the part of a personal or community moral plague. If it is true that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," it is doubly true that continual warfare is the only way to keep in subjection the forces that prey on life. The war waged must be both defensive and offensive. Unless we are constantly on our guard, we are likely to be overcome by the wiles of the devil, and unless we do all in our power to destroy the evil that threatens us, we shall see it waxing stronger and stronger. In every community probably, there are conditions that endanger the moral welfare of all the people, the young especially. It is against these that we should raise hand and voice. And we need not expect the victory to be easily or quickly won. Powerful enemies are not usually overcome by incidental, spasmodic, or occasional attacks—it takes a well-planned, vigorously-conducted campaign to put the foe to flight and to break down his strongholds. Good people do well to make a survey of the land wherein they dwell, and to bind themselves together for the extirpation of those evils that flourish on the cupidity of their promoters and the innocence of their victims. We are anxious to see all war made impossible—except the war against sin.

THE INADEQUACY OF HUMAN LAWS.

The fact that the perpetrators of heinous crimes often go unpunished, is ample proof that human laws are, at best, inadequate for securing exact justice. But no guilty person ever escapes the penalty of his sins when he stands before the judgment bar of God.

WE WONDER, TOO.

The idea that moral restraints must be thrown off when social diversions are being planned, is a most pernicious idea, to begin with. It is a poor morality that cannot stand the test of an evening's entertainment; and it is a poor social program that cannot be carried out apart from the violation of fundamental moral principles. We take the following from a well-known social-feature page of one of the leading daily newspapers of New Orleans, issue of May 2: "More than one modern mother has had even her modern ideas upset by the latest amusement in younger circles—for an evening seems rather wasted, in the opinion of certain of the younger men and girls, unless gambling in one of the attractive forms is on the program. In the drawing-rooms of the private homes, ten-dollar bills exchange hands quickly, and some of those girls who have not long been out of the schoolroom are thrilled over the importance of placing bets for the men. One hostess, hearing of these things, determined that there should be none of it at her house and offered handsome prizes for various games. But after the novelty of the occasion wore off, the money soon was pulled out and was added to the games, whereupon the hostess—who is one of New Orleans' most charming women—gathered up her prizes and stopped the games. We cannot but wonder just where we are getting in the social world when an evening in a private home is pronounced unbearable unless one can feel the thrills of the gambling table." We wonder, too. We venture to predict that, some of these days, people who now have little regard for the teachings of the church and the imperatives of the Christian religion will, in anguish of soul, cry for comfort at the altar of penitence; but their sons and daughters will have passed beyond their reach. All honor to the hostess who was brave enough to put a stop to gambling in her own home!

A BUDGET BILL AT LAST.

Press dispatches last week announced that the Senate had passed, without a dissenting vote, a bill providing for the adoption of the budget system in estimating the necessary expenditures of the Government. The House had previously passed a somewhat similar bill, with which the Senate bill will have to be reconciled through a conference committee before the legislation can become effective. We cannot but feel that a long step has been taken toward the elimination of waste and extravagance in the administration of Government funds, and that in the comparatively near future our system of taxation will be based upon an intelligent understanding of the actual needs of the national treasury. It has taken forty years to bring about the action just noted, but we believe the measure is worth the time and effort that have been expended upon it.

THE REAL TEST.

A good deal has been said in recent years concerning the proper length of a sermon. We have often found our sympathies with those friendly critics of the homiletic art who maintain that a half-hour is long enough for the average sermonic discourse; but we must insist that the real test is not time, but content. It is an imposition upon a long-suffering public when some of us spread out a fairly good ten-minute talk over forty-five minutes; but it is a tragedy for a preacher to undertake to present a great Gospel truth by the hop-skip-and-jump method—hop into the text, skip the meaning, and jump to the conclusion. A full table is a most appealing sight to a hungry man.

SELF-RELIANCE.

No man has ever mastered the secrets of success until he has learned to rely upon himself. Fatuous self-assurance is a very different thing from the conviction that one's innate powers are able to carry one through the normal difficulties of life. One great trouble with most of us is that we are afraid to put to the test the power we actually possess. When burdens are put upon us, we fear that we cannot carry them, and when duties are assigned us, we fear that we cannot perform them. We bemoan our weakness instead of bending to our task, and call for help even before we have measured our own strength. Difficulties discourage us, and opposition brings us to despair. We need to remember that many of the great achievements of history were wrought by men who had to fight their battles alone. We are not intending even remotely to suggest that there is ever a time when we do not need Divine help.

NO WEAKENING OF PROHIBITION SENTIMENT.

The opponents of the Eighteenth Amendment have been trying to make themselves believe that the adoption of that Amendment was the result of the fanatical enthusiasm of a few prohibition cranks which created a kind of hysteria among the members of Congress and of the various ratifying State legislatures; and they have professed, with much blowing of trumpets, to be able to prove to the satisfaction of all concerned that the overwhelming sentiment of the country at large is in favor of a lax enforcement of the law, at least as regards light wines and beer. It seemed to be their idea that it would be perfectly easy to get the two great national political conventions to insert planks in ther party platforms favoring the liquor cause; they are beginning to realize, however, that prohibition was adopted in this country because the great majority of the people wanted it, and that it is here to stay. The chances now are that the two conventions, if action is forced upon them, will declare unreservedly for the enforcement of the Amendment. Neither one of the great parties is willing to risk the election on a "wet" platform—and both of them are after all the votes they can get. So far as we are able to judge, there is no weakening of prohibition sentiment in this country.

PETITION.

Be not afraid to pray—to pray is right.
Pray, if thou canst, with hope; but ever pray,
Though hope be weak or sick with long delay;
Pray in the darkness if there be no light.

Far is the time, remote from human sight,
When war and discord on the earth shall cease;
Yet every prayer for universal peace
Avalls the blessed time to expedite.

Whate'er is good to wish, ask that of heaven,
Though it be what thou canst not hope to see.
Pray to be perfect, though material leaven
Forbid the spirit so on earth to be;
But if for any wish thou darest not pray
Then pray to God to cast that wish away.

—Hartley Coleridge.

BISHOP McKENDREE: A TRUE AMERICAN.

By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

The same times and circumstances which saw the birth of the American nation, witnessed also the birth of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America. The Constitutional Convention met in the city of Philadelphia in 1787; the organizing Conference of American Methodism met in the city of Baltimore at Christmas, 1784. The influences which were at work in the making of the nation gave direction and shape to the making of the church. It is not too much to say that no church is more purely American than our own. And it is simple truth to say that no church contributed so much to the building of the new republic as the Methodist Episcopal Church in America. There is an entire chapter, not to say volume, of American history which remains to be written—a chapter telling of the large part played by Methodism in the founding and building of the nation. No one man had so much to do with the development and interpretation of the Constitution of the Methodist Church as William McKendree. Bishop Paine's "Life and Times of McKendree" is Tigert's chief source book for his "Constitutional History of American Methodism." In William McKendree the church had a constitutional mind of the first order. McKendree was one of those rare men whom God raises up for special work at critical times in history. The Constitution shaped itself under his direction. And William McKendree was an American and a democrat in the true sense of that word.

McKendree was born in King William County, Va., about forty miles from Richmond. He served as a soldier in the Revolutionary War. He was at the battle of Yorktown when Cornwallis was taken. His early development in the Christian life was quite slow. He was not converted until he was thirty years of age. He was so extremely modest and retiring that his friends had literally to thrust him into the ministry. But so simple and sincere was he and so devout that God crowned his ministry with success from the very first.

McKendree's work in Kentucky covers one of the grand, heroic periods of history. In a religious way many things, bad as well as good, were going on in Kentucky at this time. While other denominations suffered, our McKendree held Methodism together and with consummate executive ability led it into a place of large power. In 1804 he was so absorbed in his work that he would not take time to go to General Conference. When he appeared at the General Conference in 1808, he was almost unknown to the majority of the delegates. But the sermon preached at the Light Street church the Sunday before the Conference began revealed the man. The poorly clad backwoodsman revealed himself to be a preacher of marvelous power. Bishop Asbury was heard to say: "That sermon will make him a bishop." And it did. No, not that; but rather the life he had lived and the Christian character which had ripened under his unselfish ministry—these made it possible for him to preach as he did, and these made him a bishop. Thus once more did the words of Jesus find fulfillment: "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall find it."

Bishop Asbury wrote in his Journal: "The General Conference elected dear Bishop McKendree assistant bishop." "Assistant bishop?" But if Asbury expected McKendree to be nothing more than "assistant," he was to have a happy surprise. The new bishop soon began to do business in an orderly and thorough way, as it had not been done before. As a preacher he displayed marvelous power. His frank and brotherly treatment of the preachers won all hearts. Methodism now had a general superintendent who was every inch a bishop and also every inch an American.

Just at this time two or three items concerning McKendree's work as bishop may be of interest to the church at large.

1. The bishop's cabinet of presiding elders originated with McKendree.

The presiding eldership is, one might almost say, a part of our episcopacy. That is to say, it enters into the "plan of our itinerant general superintendency." In 1784 elders were ordained to assist the bishops in the work of overseeing the church, but they had not been called into council in making the appointments until McKendree asked their assistance. Asbury had made all the appointments himself. He was a general itinerant. He went everywhere and knew everybody. Bishop Asbury strongly objected to McKendree's new way of making the appointments. He urged the new bishop to discontinue it and to adopt his way of appointing the preachers without consulting the presiding elders. But McKendree wrote his senior: "I am fully convinced of the utility and necessity of the council of the presiding elders in stationing the preachers. I refuse to take the whole responsibility upon myself—not that I am afraid of proper accountability, but because I consider the proposition highly improper." Thus it came that the presiding elders became the bishop's council. In this same spirit, a bishop to-day will seek light from every possible source—from laymen as well as from presiding elders. The day has forever gone when a bishop would be justified in refusing to give careful and prayerful attention to representations made by churches concerning their needs and purposes.

2. The first Episcopal Address to a General Conference was prepared and read by McKendree.

Bishop Paine writes of McKendree as presiding officer as follows: "Bishop McKendree felt that his relation to the preachers was somewhat different from that of Bishop Asbury. Many of them over whom he was called to preside were older and more experienced than himself and would be far less likely to submit to him as they had done to Bishop Asbury, than to be controlled by rules made by the Conference for the transaction of its own business. Besides this, he was a man of method." He therefore made himself familiar with the rules of order and insisted on each Conference's adopting them. When he came to his first General Conference after having been made bishop, he did the same thing. He drew up a plan of business and read it to the General Conference. That was a new thing to the aged Bishop Asbury, who immediately rose to his feet and addressed the junior bishop as follows: "I have something to say to you before the Conference." The young bishop rose to his feet, and they stood facing each other. "This is a new thing," said Asbury. "I never did business in this way. And why is this new thing introduced?" The junior bishop promptly replied: "You are our father; we are your sons. You never had need of it. I am only a brother and have need of it." Asbury said no more, but sat down with a smile on his face. "I am only a brother"—in that spirit McKendree did his work. He felt himself to be a "brother" upon whom the church had laid large responsibility. It was not the accident of office that made him a leader; it was the gift of leadership that put him into office.

3. McKendree recognized and stressed the authority of the General Conference over the bishops.

That first Episcopal Address was much more than a plan of business. It called attention to the needs of the church and especially called the attention of the Conference to the administration of the bishops. A quotation will be of interest:

"Permit me, my dear brethren, to express a few thoughts concerning the view I take of the relation in which I stand to this body. It is only by virtue of a delegated power from the General Conference that I hold the reins of government. I consider myself bound by virtue of the same authority to exercise discipline in perfect conformity with the rules of the church to the best of my ability. I consider myself justly accountable, not for the system of the government, but for my administration, and ought therefore to be ready to answer in General Conference for my past operations. I wish this body to exercise their rights in these respects."

To quote Bishop Paine again: "The first native American bishop, himself a soldier and officer in the War of Independence, placed himself and his office in harmony with the feelings and sentiments of his countrymen by refusing to govern except according to law." This is what Americanism demands and democracy requires. It is the right and duty of the General Conference to review the administration of each general superintendent and to give him information and advice in reference to his future operations. No true American and no true Christian brother could accept the office of bishop on any other conditions.

Such a bishop was William McKendree, and he was no less American when he carried the "presiding elder question" down to the Annual Conferences than before. The spirit of true democracy led him to do so. For if bishops should be amenable to authority, the General Conference should also, and since it is a representative body, it should be called to account when its acts violate the Constitution of the church.

This article must end abruptly here. It will have accomplished its purpose if it calls attention to the fact that from the early days of our history until the present our Methodism has been truly American, being shaped largely by the same influences which made the American nation and shaping, in its turn, more than any other denomination the life of America. And let it be added that just as in the beginning the influences which shaped the nation had much to do with shaping the ecclesiastical polity of American Methodism, so now Methodism is responsive to the spirit of true Americanism. The essential doctrines of Methodism remain, since they are the doctrines of Divine grace as set forth in the New Testament. But church polity is a temporary expedient. Methodism, facing new conditions, must adjust herself to the needs of this new age. To worship an unchangeable past is to deny the doctrine of the continued presence of the Spirit of God in his church.

AS THE OTHER FELLOW SEES IT.

By Rev. C. C. Miller.

In the New Orleans Christian Advocate of April 22, under the heading, "As the Educational Association Sees It," and over the signature of W. E. Hogan, Secretary, we find the following resolution addressed to the Campaign Commission and the Board of Finance.

"Resolved that it is the sense of this Association that it would be to the best interests of the church if the two proposed campaigns for our educational institutions and for the Superannuate Endowment Fund were combined into one campaign, and that we, therefore, request the Educational Campaign Commission and the Board of Finance to combine their campaigns, if such a combination is found to be practicable and wise after a careful consideration of the whole question."

If such a combination is effected, is it not just possible that one or the other claims will be a "rider?" Is it not highly probable that the educational claim will be the beneficiary in a combined campaign and the superannuates suffer a corresponding loss? I presume that it is conceded by every one that the superannuate's claim is the most popular one that could be put before the church. Let us be fair with the superannuates, that galaxy of saints who have treasure laid up in heaven where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt and where thieves do not break through nor steal, but who have made no provision for the inevitable rainy day of old age. These men deserve a square deal and their claim should be put on its merits. They have fought with unswerving devotion through their whole lives without even the hope of a competency in their second childhood.,

A man from whom a grindstone had been stolen applied to a justice of the peace for a warrant to search the premises of a suspected neighbor. The justice looked all through his formulary for the form of a search warrant covering the theft of a grindstone, but found none. But he did find a form for a warrant to search for stolen meat, and issued a warrant in accordance therewith.

"But," said the applicant, "I ain't lost no meat."

In reply the justice said, "Take this and go search for meat, and while you are searching for meat, you may find your grindstone."

The above experiment may have proved effective, but if it can be justified at all, its justification must rest on the ground of ignorance on the part of the justice of the peace. For the Educational Campaign Commission and the Board of Finance deliberately to plan such a combination, making one of the items a "rider" for the other, might be unethical. The plan might be strategic and save the expense of making two campaigns. But is it just and fair, and would it be a religious act? A great many thinking men in our church might resent it. Most of our superannuates have had "their noses to the grindstone" all of their lives, and to issue a warrant for meat for them in order to secure at their expense the grindstone for the educational cause would scarcely be fair.

Let us have no mixed deal if there is to be one drive for both. Let us have no percentage basis. Let each subscriber designate the cause to which his contribution is to be applied.

Our Centenary "drive," for it was a "drive," was a magnificent success. We made the mistake of not including all the items in that campaign; but we were pioneering, and our mistake is pardonable.

The contemplated campaign is premature in the sense that it follows too closely on the heels of the missionary "drive," and the multitudinous drives incident to the war. It is especially inexpedient to have another campaign for funds when so many of the missionary subscriptions are unpaid and much of the amount is not yet matured. There is danger of killing the hen that lays the golden egg.

The Methodists generously contributed to the Centenary fund an excess of eighteen millions, including credits. And the echo that came back to the church was, "No shrinkage, but an increase."

The cause of education and the superannuate fund are both worthy and needy, and are pressing. It would be a most magnanimous act and a most generous thing if the Board of Missions could make an arrangement whereby they could transfer the eighteen million excess to meet the emergency of the educational cause and the superannuate fund, and when the sheets are clear let the church put on a vigorous campaign for all its demands and make provisions to reimburse the Board of Missions if need be.

It is the modest opinion of the writer that the men at the "Hub" are not sufficiently in touch with the men who are on the firing line, or that they have not attached sufficient importance to the conditions on the field. It has not been my good fortune to hear an expression from a single preacher favoring an early campaign, and many of the laymen are opposed to an early campaign and pronouncedly so. Some laymen and some preachers are positively antagonistic to an early campaign.

Under the changing conditions of the times when men are thinking in big terms, more thought is being bestowed upon religious subjects than ever before in the history of the world. Hard-headed business men are seeking investments that will be productive along ethical lines. There is more freedom of expression in the church than ever before. Men are saying things. What are they saying? Some are saying openly and some at low breath things like these: "Our bishops are autocratic." "The Board of Missions is building a plutocracy that will down the autocracy." Others are saying, "No autocracy in mine—no plutocracy for me—give us a democracy." Power in church and in State must be lodged "somewhere." In this day of big things thinking men are wondering more than ever, "Just where?"

"QUITTERS."

By Rev. H. B. Watkins.

The discussion of the Unification issue is now on, as it should be, in full blast. I have read with great interest up to this time the masterly discussion of the matter by Bishops Denny, Cannon, Moore, Ainsworth, and others, as well as our gifted editors. With such presentation of the great issues, most of us are content to remain quiet and give the matter a thorough, calm, prayerful "hearing." I am sure a thoughtful reader is getting at least this much pleasure out of the whole question, that we have the same quality of gifted leadership on both sides as characterized the magnificent debate in the General Conference of 1844, on both sides of the question. I am sure most of us are giving the matter careful thought, without coming to an immovable conclusion till the evidence is all in, but will be there to meet it when the issue is joined.

Since the Methodist Episcopal Church gets the first whack at it, it seems to me we might postpone, at least, the "caniption fits" over the matter until we see their attitude. We may get "all het up" about nothing.

But, Mr. Editor, there is one class of writers showing up now that I hoped we might be delivered from, and that is those who are telling us now that, if unification carries, they are going to quit, or as one writer puts it this week, "We would rather go into some other church." That's "anti" with a vengeance. But it is a very convincing argument for Unification.

American Methodism had nearly a century of united history. That history is our common heritage. Our fathers wept when the day came that it seemed wisest to separate. Now that the day has come when Methodism has a possibility of reunion, without the frictions of those old days, they are ready to quit the whole business. Rather than a united Methodism, looking back together to a common ancestry, to McKendree, aye to Asbury, aye to Wesley, they'll join the Baptists or some other church. Well, every man "according to his taste," and if it's proper now to utter such a threat, it is as proper for some others to say, "Let 'em go." But neither is proper and it should not be uttered. This union of States had nearly a century of united history, history which we are proud of. But then there came a day when it seemed best to separate and our fathers seceded from the Union.

Our Confederated States were forced back into union, a union no Southerner wished. I didn't hear of anybody's leaving the Union, and in spite of our unwillingness, these years of reunited history have been splendid, and we have a great, united country.

Oppose union as much as one likes. Our fathers opposed it to death. But why should not a church, voluntarily reunited, have the promise of a happy, prosperous journey hand in hand? Why predict disasters to the church united, which have not come to state?

At any rate, don't holler, "I am going to quit." It's childish. "Play the game."

THE CENTENARY OF MISSIONS—A BIRTHDAY NOTE.

By Rev. J. Wilson Brown.

Shall not our church carry on the work of the Centenary of Missions? By all means we ought. It is just the employment that will fit us for the blessings God waits to bestow upon us and this nation. Nothing less than this will be adequate, nothing other than this will suffice. It is one of these great collateral crises such as the world has never seen, such as the church has never been called to meet or exploit. Can we do it? By the law of reciprocity in human and divine beneficence, we can. It is no paradox to assert that financially it will not cost a cent. The divine challenge of the pittance of a tithe, within which limit neither duty, nor life, nor love has ever flourished, has never been heeded by us. God only waits for us to prove, to try Him.

By the law of heavenly citizenship, divine patriotism, we must. The words of our Lord, thrice recorded, "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's" never had such marvelous exposition before. See that manly form, his flashing eyes, his noble brow: when he arose at the call of his country he received his father's congratulations. Fit sacrifice he was for the altar of his country. The desires and prayers for his fidelity are only equaled by those that God would remember his mother's heart. Thousands of us, with heart-strings drawn out, as it were for thousands of miles, learned this lesson and experienced this exposition of rendering unto Caesar.

What then shall we render to God? May we not hear the answer in terms like these? "Give and it shall be given unto you;" "Sell that ye have and give alms;" "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven * * * for where your treasure is there will your heart be also;" "It is more blessed to give than to receive;" "She hath done what she could;" "And he looked up and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury. And he saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites. And he said Of a truth I say unto you that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all. For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God: but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had."

We are reminded of the liberality and Christian stewardship of woman. It is more than a coincidence, that thousands of holy women, recently equipped for better service in the church and State, lend their hands and hearts.

We think a wonderful conception has thrilled the mind of mankind. The atmosphere is universally pregnant: there is the leaping of a life yet unborn. Human expectancy awaits, as it were, an international birth. The ear of Christian motherhood will be first to hear this infant's cry. Whose hands shall be more fit than hers to swaddle? In whose arms, on whose breast, and near whose heart, other than hers, shall be nurtured this astonishing, crying infant—a new world? Shall not our Zion prosecute the work of the Centenary? She ought, she can, she must.

"The Son of God goes forth to war:
Who follows in His train?"
"O God, to us may grace be given
To follow in His train."

A SUPERANNUATE FEARS TEMPTATIONS.

By Rev. T. W. Adams.

I don't like temptations. The Savior taught me to pray, "Lead us not into temptation." I have heen praying that way for nearly seventy years. It is true that James wrote to the brethren, "Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations." I imagine that those who are always praying not to he led into temptations are so well fortified that when they "fall into" them they come out with joy. It is all right when God leads us into temptations, as He did the Savior—"He was led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to he tempted of the devil." I understand that—no trouble with me to see God's hand in temptations; my trouble is that I am afraid of myself. I stand in the presence of every one of them trembling—so I keep on praying, "Lead me not into temptation." I remember what Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "There hath no temptation taken you hut such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted ahove that ye are ahle, but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be ahle to hear it." That is just as true now as it was then—God is as faithful to us as He was to the Corinthians—that is comforting and assuring. Still, I am dreadfully afraid of temptations—I guess I will he as long as I live.

Several times, lately, my memory has been active with the past; and the many and different kinds of temptations I have borne came up very vividly. I wonder at the ease with which I overcame some of them; some came so near hesting me that the narrow escape scares me till yet to think of it. I am going to tell you ahout some of them.

Business has always had a fascination for me. I think of business, talk it, and find it hard to keep out of it. I love land, and I love to trade. So when I was offered the same salary I was getting on the district (I was P. E. then) to go into husiness, I thought it over. The temptation was too weak to hother me, however. I already had as much salary as was offered me; besides I had a furnished parsonage free, and doctors charged me nothing for their services. Added to this was the fact that I was doing what I was called to do—preach.

At one time I was offered the chair of mathematics in a college—of course that stirred my pride. You may know that was some temptation. That might have downed me, if I had not had some sense of caution—upon reflection I concluded I knew too little about mathematics to do anything teaching others. A boy once wrote, "I can rite very well and can spelle fine, hut matthewmattix is one too many for me." I am in profound sympathy with that boy, for I have always been in the same fix. I want no mathematics in my educational menu. When I got to he a presiding elder, I had of necessity to hrighten up and master percentage; I got to he an expert on it. I pulled off some surprising stunts on district stewards at their annual meetings, and on quarterly conferences under Question 8. I raised my salary at one time ahout $400, hy expert percentage work. Wasn't that fine? I greatly enjoyed my skillful handling of that business. The cause of my pleasure was that I had a very narrow board to do what was very much needed to be done, and what they were unwilling to do. My successors have been getting the good ever since of my adroit work that day. I have liked percentage ever since.

I was twice offered the joint presidency of a college. It made my head swell to think of heing president of a college. But what took all the swelling out was a very strong suspicion that both offers were made from a motive that was not flattering to me. These presidents wanted me, I felt sure, to run the financial end of the business. They knew that I had some business sense, and almost unlimited credit. They wanted me to sit at the tables of the money changers, while they dressed in Prince Albert suits and wore silk beavers and put on presidential airs. I just wouldn't stand for that. But for that, I might have been a college president and superannuated with some prestige. I might have been where Inman Cooper and Alex Watkins are now. My! Just to think of it! I am always losing opportunities.

I was once offered the editorship of a newspaper. That was some temptation. I have been scribbling all my life. I must certainly have heen horn with cacoethes. To make that intelligihle I will say, morbus scribendi. The thought of just writing—doing nothing but writing—was fascinating to me. I was told that all the equipment and money needed would he at my command. That nearly got me. How I did want to try my hand at it! No one could have run a blue pencil through my copy. It would have been published as written. The trimming editors are greatly to he feared. They play the mischief, sometimes, with a scribbler's manuscript.

But on mature reflection I saw that there would be danger in uncensored writing—sometimes an editor gets lead pumped into his anatomy. An editor was killed a few days ago in Uraguay. I concluded I had hetter write less and live longer. But, anyway, it stirs my hlood, when I go into the sanctum of an editor. In my imagination I can see Henry Carley and Alf. Smith writing those splendid editorials we common people think are almost inspired. I am almost envious of them.

Two or three of my former presiding elders told me that I had the qualifications for a good P. E. I was easily persuaded to helieve it to he true. Then began the temptation. When Bishop Hargrove offered it to me, I found no place in my heart to resist the temptation—"Barkis is willing" was my state of mind. I accepted it with thanks, and stayed in it until Bishop Atkins forcibly ejected me.

I am sure I would never have resigned. Of course not. "But few presiding elders die, and none ever resign." I. W. Cooper came nearer resigning than any I ever knew. He managed to pull through one year, hut he kicked out of the traces at next Conference. Cooper would rather he a college president than to he a presiding elder. I wonder why? There is no accounting for some men's tastes.

The biggest temptation I have ever had to face is to rest too much. I have to prod myself mightily to work at all. Rest is the main thing. It is 9 or 10 o'clock some mornings hefore I can persuade myself to get out of hed. I have no sick members to visit; no new people to look after; no committee meetings to hold; no quarterly conferences to prepare for. Nothing disturbs me. I am resting and resting. It is fine.

A LETTER FROM AFRICA.

(The following letter, from Mrs. Lillian Williams Beanland, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. W. M. Williams, of the Mississippi Conference, will, we are sure, prove interesting to many of our readers who remember Miss Williams as a most successful primary teacher in the public schools of Mississippi. With her husband she is engaged in missionary work in Douala, Cameroun, West Africa, under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church. This is part of a letter to her parents and was never intended, of course, for publication. We asked the privilege of printing it because of the intimate view it gives in a purely informal way of missionary work in this most interesting field.—Editor.)

I wish you might have been here yesterday. Such big doings as we did have! It was the yearly communion season, and natives for hundreds of miles had come all the week to be here for the occasion. This is the time that all the classes are promoted, and the members received into the church, as well as communion. Out here when a native confesses, and expresses a desire to become a member of the church, they do not accept him on his profession of faith, but they have to stand the "acid test" which lasts for three years; then, if at the end of the time he is worthy, he is accepted as a member, and baptized. But first he is admitted into the first year's class of Instruction or the Esulan. But before he is admitted into this even, he has to settle all palavers and pay all debts. He stays in this class for a year, and if at the end of the year he has not broken a single commandment, such as "cussing," "stealing," "walking on Sunday," not to mention the longer and more important commandments, he is admitted into the second year class, or the Nsamba. He remains in here another year, keeping all rules of the church, and walking the "straight and narrow path." If he stays in here until the end of the year, and keeps a clean record, then he is admitted into the church as a member, and is baptized. How many church members would there be in America if the laws of the African church were enforced?

I went down to the session room awhile one day, and it was most interesting. All candidates for membership came up before a number of elders, and they asked questions from the catechism, and if they thought the persons worthy, they were allowed to appear before the high tribunal, which is my most worthy husband. Then if he thought them capahle and sincere, they were passed on to a higher class. Some he found guilty of not having put any collection in the basket for the year, so they were declined promotion. When you know that members of the Esulan Class are supposed to pay only 10 cents a year, Nsamba members 20 cents, and members of the church 30 cents, you can understand why they can afford to turn them down, for they all have money, and its only negligence when they don't help support the church.

At the morning service, at which there were 2250 present, Gayle promoted 88 into the Nsamba Class, and baptized 44 members of the church who have stood the "acid test" for three years. Then in the afternoon he haptized about 20 babies. I wish you could have seen that sight. It was too sweet. Black or brown babies are prettier than white babes, because they are almost olive colored and their features are more distinguished! And some of these were tiny, tiny hahies. One was just a few days old. One father whose wife could not come, and who wanted his one-week old baby haptized, forgot ahout it until he was at the church; then when he saw all the mothers lining up with their babies for the assistant pastor to take their names, he thought about it, and his determinaton was so great that he ran all the way to the next town, grabbed that tiny baby in his arms, and flew back in the broiling sun! He came in the church dripping with perspiration, and just did get there in time! He stood all during the ceremony mopping his body from which streams of perspiration were flowing, holding that tiny hahy in his arms!

There were older babies, too, perhaps a year old, and there was a questioning look in their eyes as the "White Man" came so near to them. Most of them gasped when the cold water was put on their heads, but they were too interested in watching this "strange creature" to make any sound. They were too cute.

The crowd yesterday morning was so interesting that I could hardly listen to the sermon. The different costumes, when there were any costumes, were killing. The men dress more than the women do, and they drape yards and yards of cloth around their hodies, hringing it up and tying it hehind their necks until it resembles Caesar in his Roman toga. A few of the slaves and poorer class still wear the native garb of the dyed bark loin cloth, and they really look more at ease, and far better than they do arrayed in the flowing robes. Then some have inherited the cast-off clothing of missionaries, or the paid teachers and evangelists have managed to huy American style clothes; but regardless of the heauty or the ugliness, they wear the tails of the shirts on the outside, for they think: "What's the use of having so much expensive cloth on one's hody, and every one not to know it?" So it flutters in the wind like a loose main-sail on a cat-boat. A Sunday morning crowd reminds me of a midnight fire in a small town, where all the inhahitants rush to the scene regardless of conventional dress!

The only place that an African woman has to display her artistic tastes is on her head, and they sometimes look as if a landscape gardener had heen doing experiments! One came in to church yesterday that almost spoiled my solemnity. She had rows and rows of hair piled up on her head very symmetrically, each pile or row about two inches high, and on the top of each row was as many brass-headed tacks as she could stick, all polished to the nth degree. I tell you, she looked grand, and she knew it. Her hair had been previously oiled with palm oil, so she could coiffure it just right. Then she had a small, polished stick in between the rows, with which she scraped up the oil from her neck and shoulders, that had run down on account of the heat, and put it back up among her kinky tresses. She was dressed especially for this occasion! There were a good many of them who reminded me of the little nursery rhyme, "Yankee Doodie stuck a feather in his hat, and called it Maccaroni!" It was very evident that they had chased the rooster down, and robbed him of his crowning glory!

One little girl looked positively modern—at least she had her hair fixed like the girls were arranging theirs when I left home—combed straight back from her forehead, and ear-muffs over her ears. She looked quite pretty.

You should have seen Zambo Mwolo, the chief and head-man from this town. He isn't a Christian, but is a friend of the mission and attends church quite often. He came in great pomp and glory, his slaves following behind, and one with a chair for Zambo to sit on, because he does not deign to seat his royal highness on the plank benches on which the natives sit.

After this very interesting service, we came home to try to rest a little while, but it was almost impossible, because the yard was filled with wondering natives who wanted to catch sight of the new "white woman." I washed my hair, and was sitting by the window, Saturday, drying it, and you should have heard the exclamations which arose as the women especially passed the path. They had never seen such wonderful tresses! "Just to think it comes down to her waist," they said! But poor disillusioned people, you, who know me, know that those beautiful (?) tresses have always been a source of constant worry and torture to me, and people who adhere strictly to the truth, never make such remarks!

LILLIAN WILLIAMS BEANLAND.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

Important Announcement Concerning Applications.

The Board of Church Extension, which has just adjourned its annual session, adopted the report hereto attached, which explains itself.

There were before the Board seven hundred and forty applications, asking for a total of $1,557,979.13 in donations, and $1,716.650 in loans.

The Board instructed the Committee provided for in the report to consider other applications that may be presented which are clearly entitled to consideration in connection with the Centenary Fund. Only applications for aid from the regular funds of the Board which reached the calendar according to the rules of the Board are to be considered.

It will not be possible for the office to give information concerning the action of the Board on any case until the called meeting of the Board shall have passed on the recommendations of the Special Committee.

The Special Committee provided for is as follows:

Bishop W. F. McMurry, St. Louis, Mo.
Rev. S. H. C. Burgin, 1115 Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky.
Rev. James Thomas, Little Rock, Ark.
Rev. J. A. Baylor, 1115 Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky.
Rev. O. F. Williams, Barboursville, W. Va.
Bishop Jno. M. Moore, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.
Mr. T. L. Jefferson, 1115 Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

"Your Committee on Centenary and special applications, begs leave to report the following recommendations:

"(1) In accordance with the agreement that one million dollars of the amount of Centenary money allotted the Board of Church Extension be used for donations, we recommend that $400,000 of the said million be applied in the following foreign fields: China, Japan, Korea, Brazil, Mexico, Africa and Cuba, and that the amount for each field be determined by a committee consisting of the Bishops in charge of these fields and the Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, and that the order of payment be determined by the said committee.

"(2) That the other $600,000 allotted to be used as donations be applied in the home field in accordance with the action of the General Conference, which says that it shall be used 'in building churches and establishing institutional plants in territory of the United States that is distinctly missionary;' and it is further recommended that in appropriating this amount the Board shall have in view the entire Centenary period.

"(3) In order that the receipts from the Centenary contributions may be distributed in accordance with the above plan, we recommend that all applications for donations from the Centenary Fund and from the regular fund, along with the calendar and the recommendations presented by the Executive Committee, be referred for careful review to a committee of five, together with the President and Secretary of the Board, with instructions to report back its recommendations to the Board at the earliest practicable date. We further recommend that this committee be named at this morning's session in order that, if possible, it may give hearings to representatives of special interests, who are now in Louisville, for the purpose of representing such interests."

W. F. McMURRY, President.
T. L. JEFFERSON, Acting Sec'y.

SUCCESSFUL CAMPAIGN IN MEMPHIS FOR METHODIST HOSPITAL.

It can be taken for granted that all doubt concerning the success of the Methodist Hospital in Memphis has now been removed by the successful campaign recently conducted that resulted in the raising of over $400,000 within the city and including that part of the territory embraced in the Memphis District. The number of subscriptions secured shows that it was one of the most popular campaigns that have been put on since United War Work drive. The records will show over 5500 signed cards, ranging from $1 to $30,000.

The Methodist people responded generally and generously, showing their deep concern in the welfare of the enterprise, as well as their expression in the faith of the church to build and maintain an institution of the kind for the relief of suffering humanity.

The organization was one of the most perfect and representative we have ever had and the enthusiasm of each worker was great from start to finish. This was due, mainly, to the genius of Mr. L. M. Stratton, the general chairman, and his specially selected committee, Mr. G. T. Fitzhugh and Mr. Frank N. Fisher.

There was one subscription of $30,000, from Mr. Clarence Saunders; two subscriptions of $25,000 each, from Mr. John R. Pepper and Mr. L. M. Stratton. There were three subscriptions of $20,000 each, from Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Fitzhugh, Mr. T. K. Riddick, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Goff. There were quite a number of $5,000—one from Mr. A. E. Jennings, Mr. Will Dockery, Mr. R. L. Carr, the heirs of the late Hon. John R. Godwin, the children of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Norfleet, and the heirs of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Mallory.

St. John's, Madison Heights, and First Methodist Churches were the largest contributors from their members in the aggregate, but the smaller churches did equally as well, if not better, considering the financial ability of their members. The preachers in charge of each church entered into the spirit of the campaign from the first and led their flocks to success. Rev. T. E. Sharp, the presiding elder, was a conspicuous figure and did great work in planning, as well as in putting into execution the plans. No one was more concerned and gave more enthusiastic support before and during the campaign than Bishop W. B. Murrah. He was present at nearly all of the meetings and on several occasions spoke enthusiastically and hopefully of the success of the undertaking. The methods employed and the generous spirit displayed by the workers carried a blessing to the giver, and the campaign in its close demonstrated that Methodists can even get happy, and even hilarious when they are giving of their money for benevolent purposes.

The campaign in Memphis was pulled off first in the order, and its success has become a challenge unto the rest of the territory embodied in the four Annual Conferences that constitute the corporate body of the Methodist Hospital. The amount that has been assigned to the Memphis Conference outside of the Memphis District and accepted by each presiding elder's district is $160,000, which will be raised beyond any question of doubt, and the same can be said of the North Mississippi Conference, whose allotment is $150,000; and we believe that the Mississippi and the North Arkansas will also do all they can to raise the amount that has been assigned to each. The amount that the Board of Trustees of the North Arkansas Conference accepted was $100,000 and the Mississippi Conference $50,000.

It should be ever kept in mind that the Methodists have an ideal location and the building will be as nearly perfect as skill and science can provide. Also it should be remembered that this institution will not be run for profit and that non-pay patients will receive the same good treatment as those who pay; that the doctors in good standing are admitted within its walls and that no question will be asked as to whether the sick belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, or not when they need the blessings that that institution can supply.

It is the purpose of the Board of Managers to complete the buildings as rapidly as the contractors can do the work, and it is expected to be ready for occupancy this fall.

The hospital building when finished and furnished will cost about one million dollars. From the standpoint of convenience and scientific research, it is as near perfect as can be made. The policy as to its future management, is as follows:

First—The administration of the hospital to be solely without reference to religious belief or preference.

Second—It is to be operated on the most improved scientific hospital plan.

Third—It is to conduct an up-to-date laboratory of research for the discovery of disease germs and the cure and prevention of their spread.

Fourth—At least one-third of its beds shall be available for those who are unable to pay.

Fifth—Any doctor in good standing will be welcome to practice within its walls.

Sixth—It is not to make money. All receipts above expenses shall go to charity services, research work for the betterment and extension of the enterprse.

THOS. B. KING, Secretary.
Memphis, Tenn.

The secret of success lies in embracing every opportunity of seeking high and right ends, and in never forgetting that golden rule of the catechism, "of doing your duty in that station of life to which it shall please God to call you."—Wellington.

A GREAT SERMON FROM A GREAT MAN.

By Rev. C. A. Battle.

Dr. Sam Steel preached at the First Methodist Church of Mansfield to-night (April 18), and his deliverance was, in many respects, the greatest utterance I ever heard. He was, as many of your readers know, the pastor of this church for the two years ending last November. Several times when Dr. Steel was in town I have asked him to preach for us, but not until to-day was he able to accept my invitation. Only once before had I had the privilege of listening to him, and that was many years ago when he lectured in New Orleans at Parker Memorial Church. I had not fully appreciated his power to use the English language or to depict character or to describe scenery. Words to him are like keys upon a piano when a master musician at his best uses them in multiple combinations to make one feel pathos or see sunlight or hear the merriment of laughter. They fall from his lips suggestive of the silvery gurgle of the brook or the deep flow of the river—as he wills. If one could divide a ray from the sun into the colors of the rainbow, and take these decided units of light in his hands and shape them into flowers and radiant garments and gems, he could scarcely do more with these than can Dr. Steel do with words. His wonderful store of adjectives and adverbs fall in description about his nouns as pearls and rubies and amethysts are arranged about the diamonds of a diadem under the eye of an expert with gems.

Dr. Steel's power in delineating character is nothing short of marvelous. His deep insight into human nature, his wide acquaintance with the events and characters of history, his knowledge of the Bible, and his many other peculiar abilities, make him a public speaker in his line who is peerless. To-night as he stood in the pulpit, his head white with the snows of seventy winters, his form erect and graceful, his dress becoming and unostentatious, he was the embodiment of all the virtues of a Southern gentleman and scholar and preacher of the Gospel of Christ. His voice was sonorous and his enunciation perfect, and as he reached the several climaxes of his brilliant discourse he touched the sublime heights of oratory which I have always associated with such names as Ben Hill, of Georgia, and L. Q. C. Lamar, S. S. Prentiss and Bishop Galloway, of Mississippi.

After hearing Dr. Steel to-night, his "Pelican Pines" are more graceful and stately; his "Melrose Manse," in which I now live, is a house where the riotously growing roses speak his name and fame; the pulpit in which he used to preach is emphasized by his eloquence; and his balmy Southland is an earthly paradise charmed by his characterizations of its ladies and gentlemen of the decades passed away.

I wish every Methodist in Louisiana could have heard his sermon to-night. If our ministers want a speaker of rare ability to preach or lecture for them on special occasions, they will do well to write Dr. Steel. He was superannuated at the last Conference, and he is getting along in years; but I cannot see how even at any time in the past his mind could have been more virile or his personality more charming. If our universities found it possible to get him to deliver their annual series of lectures upon special subjects, to my mind they would procure a speaker for such occasions without a peer in America. I am proud to realize that the South can produce such a man. It has been my privilege to hear in the past such men as Dr. Dawson, Dr. Dinsdale T. Young and Dr. F. B. Meyer, of England, and the brilliant Bishop Quayle of the Methodist Episcopal Church; but Dr. Steel as an orator surpasses them all. Bishop Hoss as a preacher who emphasized pathos, and Bishop Candler as a preacher who displays unfathomable depths of philosophy and Christian experience, have impressed me more than any other ministers of Christ that I ever heard; but Dr. Steel as a master of rhetoric and history rises to sublime heights. Perhaps I am a little prejudiced, but I believe our great preachers of the Southland stand peerless when they are compared with others from any part of the globe. I have never heard Dr. Jowett, of New York and London fame, but I am willing to see our great Southern preachers measured fairly with him at any time.

To-night Dr. Steel preached on Christ's description of John the Baptist: "He was a burning and shining light." But the preacher did not confine himself to John the Baptist alone, for he gave illuminating psychographic delineations of other satellites in the Bible constellations. He began his message with an appreciation of the unsurpassed literary features of the Bible itself. Had I known what was in store for us, I surely would have had a stenographer present to take down verbatim what was said. Only a few things, outside the great impression made, remain with one literally after such a sermon as this. But the Bible will ever be dearer to me, if that is possible. Dr. Steel quoted from the literary genius, Moulton, in his estimate of the Book of God. I have heard Moulton at the University of Chicago, and Dr. Steel in his original strokes of genius outdid Moulton himself. How he illuminated his hearers concerning the funeral oration of Moses, the lamentation of David for his friend Jonathan, the intensity of the lyric Psalms, the pathos of Jeremiah and the eloquence of Isaiah! The writings of Euripides, Plato, and Homer are incomparable to these. Then he described John the Baptist as a rugged and unpolished obelisk towering above the seers of his time, a man clothed in rough cloth with a camel's hair girdle about his loins, to whom the religious authorities at Jerusalem sent an inquiring delegation to know if he was the Christ. Then he told us of Peter the human, typical of men, strong yet vacillating at times, perceptive of truth as he realized Christ was the son of the living God, fearless as he fought for the Master, yet fearful when he should have been like a rock. Peter was the privileged character who was commissioned with power to lock and unlock the gates of heaven, he held the keys, he was the primate among the disciples. Then Paul, the colossal man of all time, was discussed. He was the greatest thinker God ever let loose on the planet; versatile in character, making a tent for the pay for his meals and at the same time making the creeds of Christendom. Paul was more eloquent than Demosthenes in his orations against Philip, or Cicero in his deliverances against Catiline. In comparison with Paul, Caesar was a dwarf, and Charlemagne and Napoleon were mere pygmies. Then St. John the Divine was shown to be one of the largest of the satellites which swung in their orbit around the Sun of Righteousness. John is the most misunderstood man in history. He is often described as tender and almost effeminate, when in reality he was gigantic and powerful; so much so that Jesus called him a son of thunder. John disguised himself upon one occasion and joined a robber band in a successful attempt to bring back to the fold an erring disciple. St. John was the disciple upon whom Jesus leaned when he needed the comfort of an intrepid soul. St. John was a deeply spiritual man, for the spirit of the ascended Christ walks through the stately chapters of the Revelation. The Revelation of St. John is a book for a spiritual man. To some it is a mystery, an unintelligible jargon, but to him who would know the depths of divine truth it is a bright and shining way.

Than sumptuous wreaths to the dead.

THE SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

As a member of the Mississippi Conference, as a member of the Board of Missions, and as one deeply interested in the good the Divinity School may and can do, I call attention to one very important fact.

The Board of Missions of the Mississippi Conference was told by a representative of the General Board, one who was closely connected with the Centenary Movement, that the Conference Board would do a wise thing to appropriate a sufficient amount of the money coming to the Conference from the 10 per cent of the Centenary, to pay the expenses of the young men on mission charges, and the undergraduates of the Conference, to the Seashore Divinity School, or some place like it, that they may have the training and instruction given at these places. In fact, if I am not mistaken, some of the Conferences had agreed to such a plan, and the young men had been instructed to prepare for such an outing, that they might get the benefit of such a schooling.

A few dollars invested in this way would be of incalculable good to the church, in giving a better trained ministry, more efficient pastors, stronger leaders and more able preachers.

When our Board was through appropriating the amounts asked for each district by the P. E's., we did not have a dollar left to spend on this very worthy object.

I make this earnest appeal to the P. E's of the Mississippi Conference, and am sure that if they will give the matter a little attention, they can make it possible for every young man in the Conference to be at the Seashore Divinity School. Please begin early and see to it that your young men have the disposition and the means to go. If you will explain the matter to the official boards of the charges, they will most gladly provide the means for the young men to go.

As for the training, teaching, lecturing, spiritual and social uplift, it would be hard to find a place to compare with Seashore Divinity School, where the term is only ten days. The very best lecturers in the nation come to this School every summer, and the associations are the very best to be found anywhere. If the college men, presiding elders, leading pastors and leading laymen, will give this School a fair chance, it will soon be one the best institutions of its kind anywhere.

Let me make another suggestion: Let the pastors, and the presiding elders of the three Conferences urge some of their leading laymen who have the good of the church at heart, to come and spend the term at the school, and see what they can have, and what we do have, and they will soon see to it that we have the best institution in the South. Let them know that this is more than a preacher's affair, and for all who have the good of the church at heart. W. H. SAUNDERS.

Natchez, Miss.

HOW MANY HAVE YOU WON?

I have heard of a pastor who once asked the officers of his church to be perfectly frank with him, and tell him how many of them had ever led a soul to Christ. There were fifteen present, five of whom stood to say that they had had this joy, and ten remained seated. One gentleman rose immediately to say that the question had condemned him, that he had four boys, one of whom was a church member, and to his shame he confessed that three of them he had never spoken to on the subject of their soul's salvation. He went immediately to his home that night to fulfill his obligation and the boys came into the church at the first opportunity. He said that there had been a man coming into his place of business for years. He knew him to be a sinful man, but he had never spoken to him about his spiritual condition. When in a few days this man entered his business house again and when his errand was completed on which he had come, the church officer said to him, "Did you know that I was a Christian?" and he said, "Yes, I knew it," and then he said, "I wonder if you knew I was an officer in the church," and he said, Yes, I knew it." "I wonder if you have ever thought it strange that I had not spoken to you about your soul." The man's face became very white as he said, "I have thought it strange and I have come again and again into your place of business and waited after I had finished my errand, hoping that you would speak to me and you never have, and now it is too late."—J. Wilbur Chapman.

HIS DOG.

Can your dog waltz on his hind toes,
And flip a cracker from his nose,
  And open doors 'most like a man,
And bring the muzzle that he wears,
And be "dead dog," and say his prayers?
  My dog can!

And will he go when he is bid
And look for something where it's hid,
  Across the road and up the hill,
By sniffing of the trail you've made,
And find the place where it is laid?
  My dog will!

And does he creep upstairs at night,
And snuggle up against you tight,
  Ev'n though he hears the door bell buzz
When some one comes? He feels, you see,
That he would rather be with me.
  My dog does!

And when you've somehow lost your sand,
Does he just somehow understand
  That you don't feel so very good?
And would he stick through thick and thin,
Whatever trouble you are in?
  My dog would!

Oh, other dogs are good enough,
I s'pose; but my dog,—he's the stuff,
  I wouldn't boast, but he's all this.
'Course anybody's dog seems fine
To him—but—well, you see he's mine.
  My dog is!—Life.

"I DON'T KNOW HOW TO PRAY."

When in the early dusk the brakeman called, "Santa Clara! Santa Clara!" and the train came jolting to a stop, the girl who had left New York that morning to seek health in the Adirondack Working Girls' Home rose—smiling, although her lips would tremble! The conductor took her baggage from her.

"You'll find 'em a pleasant, lively bunch. They can't help liking you, and this air will fix you up in no time. I'll be taking you back home soon—as sound as a kitten!'

"That's one fine girl!" the conductor said, emphatically, as they watched her go up the graveled walk toward the friendly, twinkling lights of the great stone house with the chattering bevy who had come to meet her. "Who'd ever think of tuberculosis and those girls in the same half hour?"

"She's the genuine article—and as pretty as the Lord makes 'em," conceded the brakeman, heartily. "What is it about a really nice girl that gets a fellow so? Why, I'd rather have her 'Thank you' than a dollar bill! She's never been away from home before. Well, here's hopin'."

In the solemn, early hush of the next morning the night nurse wakened Mrs. Corey, who was taking the matron's place for a week.

"It's the new girl. She's had a hemorrhage, and a bad one. She can't last an hour, the doctor says, and they want you to come."

Trembling, the matron in charge dressed. Could that delicately vivid, charming girl of last evening actually be dying now?

"This is Mrs. Corey," the doctor said, gently.

The girl who was dying lay, beautiful as a star; it was her first night away from home in the great, murmuring north woods country! Straightway the sweet, sick eyes opened to her who stood there in the sacred place of the mother.

"Pray, Mrs. Corey, please," she whispered. "Pray for them at home. Ask God to show them—it's—all right! And pray—that I—may die—bravely!"

It was very still in the room; a robin twittered sleepily to her nest outside the window. She was a splendid dancing partner—Mrs. Corey. Those ringed hands were valiant with the cards!

"I couldn't—I—"

"At home—they thought I would surely get well—here," the girl said. "Ask God—"

"I couldn't pray without my prayer book," stammered the woman, miserably.

The look in that young, stricken face, where there was no time, no strength for reproach, or even wonder, haunted the matron long afterward.

"Doctor," the faint whisper came again, "then you must—ask God—for them at home! And—for me—that he will—take me—gently!"

"Little girl," the doctor said, white and greatly moved, "I would give my right arm to do this for you. But I don't know how to pray."

Time was short indeed, now. The doctor lifted and held the little hands that essayed to fold themselves in the old, childlike attitude of prayer.

"Dear Jesus—take care of them—for me! Don't let them—grieve—too much. Bring them—safe home—mother and dad and Bob; auntie and Alice, Jim and Baby Ruth—and all—the others. And—take care—of me—now—for I'm—so tired—so—tired! Amen!"

In the cool stir and the growing glory of the new day the Lord Jesus took, very gently indeed, his little one home.

LITTLE HANDLES.

Bobbie had been to kindergarten. It was his first day there, and when he came home mamma was anxious to know what he had learned.

"What did you learn to-day, my dear?" she asked.

"'Bout little handles," Bobby said quickly.

"Little handles?" mamma said in surprise, wondering what he meant.

"Yes, ma'am; our teacher told us we must never forget our little handles."

But mamma did not understand. She had been careful to give Bobbie his pencils, his sponge, his book and his lunch, when he started to school, but she had no idea that he needed anything like little handles.

"You didn't have any," she said.

"Oh, yes, ma'am," cried the little boy. "I used them every time."

Then Bobbie couldn't help feeling just a little bit proud to think that he knew something mamma did not.

"You see, mamma," he went on, "it isn't something to carry; it's something to say, like 'please,' and 'thank you,' and 'ma'am,' and 'good morning,' and 'good afternoon,' and things like that. Our teacher calls them 'little handles,' and says we must always use them. I knew about them before, of course, but now I'll be more likely to remember them."

And, although Bobbie does forget the little handles sometimes, he is nearly always a polite boy, and people like to have him in their company.—Exchange.

WANTED—A SON.

Wanted, by parents everywhere in America who have all their hopes for future happiness bound up in their children's success—wanted, by these fathers and mothers, a son.

Wanted, a son who can tend a furnace and mow a lawn and not complain.

Wanted, a son who is on time at his meals, who can keep his room clean, who does not leave his clothes over the house for mother to put away, who is not selfish.

Wanted, a son who does not neglect his mother, who will not let her wait on him, who is good to her, who is proud of her, who tells her he loves her.

Wanted, a son who keeps his temper, who can be happy at home, who is respectful to his father and his mother, who can be as chivalrous to his sisters as to his sweetheart, who offers his father and mother his seat when they enter the room, who can close a door without slamming it, who is thoughtful of others.

Wanted, a son who does not need company manners.

Wanted, a son who loves other boys, who does not need to take them away from home to have a good time, who can make them happy in his own home.

Wanted, a son with ambition, who believes in himself, is self-reliant, whom other boys can not lead astray, who will not swerve a hair's breadth from truth or right, who hates villeness, who lives a clean life.

Wanted, a son who can keep a promise, who scorns a lie.

Wanted, a son who has manhood in the making.

THE HOPE OF THE WORLD—A THREE-MINUTE TALK.

We need a world that is safe not only for democracy, but that is safe also for every individual who would strive to reach the highest possible normal development, and for every idea that is for the betterment of mankind. It is a tragedy that good men and uplifting ideas have to fight for their very existence in the midst of selfishness and greed and of heartless disregard for the nobler aims of life.

It is very well for altruists to insist that the innate ideals of unregenerate human nature will ultimately bring about a state of peace and happiness; but the experience of the centuries has shown that human nature is not able, of itself, to attain the heights of moral and spiritual perfection. There must come into human life a dynamic that is strong enough to overcome the massed indifference and opposition of the forces of evil before we can hope to make the world the safe place it ought to be in which to live and work and hope and pray and draw near to God in the cultivation of all moral and spiritual virtues.

Christianity is the only power that can make the world what it ought to be, and Christianity can do it only as its principles become operative in the lives of men and women. Christ did not teach cold, colorless principles of truth and righteousness, but he enunciated the doctrine of personal conformity to the requirements of divine law. The task of the church is so to present this doctrine to the world that it will accept it as a vital, throbbing personal experience. When it has done this, we may expect a "new world," in which the will of God is done on earth as it is done in Heaven.

Professed Christians cannot escape the burden of tremendous personal responsibility that rests upon them in making actual the possibilities of the redeemed life. It is still true that men know us by our fruits; unless we show forth in our own lives the "fruits of the Spirit," we shall have to bear the ignominy of those "who say, and do not."

WILL IT MAKE ANY DIFFERENCE?

We take it for granted that every reader of the Advocate saw the announcement of the Publishing Committee in last week's issue that the subscription price of the paper, beginning with May 1, is $2 a year. This action was taken only after the situation had reached a stage where it was absolutely necessary to do something to meet the constanly increasing cost of production that we have had to face since the meeting of the Committee last year. The matter of increasing the subscription price was discussed at that time, but it was hoped that conditions would improve, and the matter was left in abeyance. A campaign for an increased subscription list was authorized, with the hope that the difficulty could be met in that way. The campaign was heartily entered into by many of our friends and supporters, and we are glad to be able to say that the New Orleans Christian Advocate now probably has the largest circulation in its history.

But as the cost of producton increased, the advantages of a larger circulation were wiped out, so that the burden of meeting necessary expenses only became heavier with the increased output. In other words, the cost of production increased out of proportion to the increase of circulation, and the business management found itself facing even a more difficult situation than before.

After a most careful investigation, it was evident that it was futile to hope to preserve the financial independence of the paper by adhering to a subscription price that was altogether out of keeping with the level of prices in other lines of business, and an equitable adjustment was, therefore, authorized. In spite of a most earnest effort to maintain the old price, it was found impossible to do so—hence the increase to $2.

WILL THE INCREASED PRICE MAKE ANY DIFFERENCE IN THE CIRCULATION OF THE ADVOCATE? We cannot believe that it will. We are sure that our readers are as good judges of present business conditions as are the members of the Publishing Committee, and they will readily agree, upon a moment's reflection, that it would be poor business judgment to undertake to carry on any kind of enterprise at before-the-war prices. As they realize this, we feel sure that they will endorse the action of the Publishing Committee and show their approval of its action by sending in their renewals at the new rate just as readily and just as promptly as they did before; and we believe that a simple statement of the facts by our preachers, who have stood so loyally by the Advocate through all the years, will make it as easy to secure new subscriptions as it ever was. Some of our friends may say, "It never has been easy!" To answer that rejoinder, we may say, then, that it surely will not be any harder to secure subscriptions at the new price under new conditions than it was at the old price under old conditions.

We have never based our appeal for the support of our constituency upon any other ground than that the Advocate is worth what it costs. We stand by that contention. We do not ask our people to subscribe for the paper merely to keep the poor, struggling thing alive, or as an expression of a loyalty to the institutions of the church that would support those institutions regardless of their value. We never have been willing, and the day has passed when anybody should be willing, to ask for the support of the church papers on the ground of charity. Every man has a right to demand full value in exchange for his money, and the church is as much under obligation to give that value as is any commercial organization. So far as we are personally concerned, we are willing to have the severest standards of value applied. If the Advocate is not worth $2 a year to any member of the church in the information it contains in its 52 issues, in the helpful and uplifting articles that appear in its pages, in the inspiring and suggestive topics that it brings to the attention of its readers throughout the year, it is not worth anything at all; if it ever was worth $1.50 a year to anybody, it is worth at least $2 now.

We are not unmindful of the fact, of course, that the Advocate gets its value largely because it is the offical journal of the Louisiana, the Mississippi, and the North Mississippi Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and that, as such, it makes its appeal primarily to the Methodists of its patronizing territory. We cannot feel that a single one of these Methodists—who are among the most intelligent and progressive citizens of the State in which they live—would contend that the Advocate is not worth the price that is now asked for it.

Circulation is the test of the success of a religious periodical. Since its purpose is not at all to make money, but to do good, it can fulfill its mission only as it goes into the homes of the people. If people do not read it, it is worth nothing to them and it is failing to do the only thing that justifies its existence. Measured by this test, the New Orleans Christian Advocate is an increasingly useful publication. Shall we let the small addition of 50 cents a year to its subscription price—less than a cent a week—hinder its circulation and hamper its usefulness? What say preachers and people?

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE M. E. CHURCH.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church is now in session, having convened at Des Moines, Iowa, on Saturday, May 1. It is a notable gathering, of course, and its actions day by day will be followed with great interest by the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as well as by the four million members of its own great denomination.

The question of unification of the two churches will undoubtedly be the chief theme of interest, since it is the most important issue before the church, but other questions of great moment will be up for discussion and settlement. Among these are the following, which we take from the Western Christian Advocate of April 28: Revision of Course of Study and return to the Board of Bishops; Centenary Conservation Program and relation to Interchurch World Movement; New articulation of the general benevolent boards; Creation of a board of philanthropies; Proposed consolidation of the Advocates; Future of the deaconess movement; Admisson of laymen into Annual Conferences; Missionary episcopacy abolished; Life tenure of the bishops; Creation of new episcopal areas; Creation of a Judiciary department; Organizing the body of bishops into an executive board; Retention of amusement clause in the Discipline; Examination of functions of the Methodist Federation for Social Service; Uniting of Freedmen's Aid Society with the Board of Education; Taking over the Sunday school publications from the Book Concern by the Board of Sunday Schools; Control of the Epworth Herald by the Epworth League; Election of Negro bishops; Election of Indigenous bishops for mission fields; Establishment of an official Advocate in Washington, D. C.

It is impossible, of course, to forecast what the action concerning unification will be. Just as the proposed plan has many ardent advocates, so it is meeting with violent opposition. The Western is authority for the statement that Bishop Cranston stands alone among the bishops in his ardent advocacy of unification, none of the others having come out strongly in favor of it, and many of them having written strenuously in opposition. So far as we are able to judge from our exchanges, the opposition centers in the provision for Regional Conferences and the place of the Negro in the reorganized church.

We are sure it will be in the hearts of all devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to pray daily for Divine guidance of our brethren as they engage in the difficult task of dealing properly with the momentous problems that confront world-wide Methodism.

Owing to ill health, Bishop John C. Kilgo was relieved of the active superintendency of any Conferences, but will continue, it was announced, to exercise such duties as his health will permit. It is with very great regret that the church will learn that the physical affliction of Bishop Kilgo is so serious as to require that he take a period of rest. He may be assured that he has the prayers of his brethren that he may soon be restored to health and strength.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mrs. Geo. D. Parker, missionary to Brazil, is on a furlough in the States and is visiting her relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Brown, in New Orleans.

Rev. R. H. Clegg, our pastor at Harperville, Miss., has completed plans for holding all his revivals this year, and has already engaged his ministerial help.

Our attention has been called to the fact that the Holly Springs District Conference will be in session May 11-13, instead of beginning on May 14, as previously announced. Let all concerned take notice.

Mr. McC. Stuart, of Georgetown, Miss., has been a reader of the Advocate for more than forty years. In renewing his subscription, he takes occasion to express himself vigorously in opposition to unification.

Rev. C. A. Massey, pastor of the Waynesboro circuit, Mississippi Conference, is actively engaged in preparing for the work of the revival season. He has added three preaching places to his charge this year.

Rev. Chas. E. Downer, the pastor, will be assisted in a meeting at Seminary, Miss., by Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Natchez, Miss., beginning with the fifth Sunday in May and embracing the first Sunday in June.

Rev. A. W. Turner, the wide-awake superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, preached at Felicity Church last Sunday morning, and addressed the New Orleans Ministerial Union on Monday morning on prohibition enforcement.

Our church at Minden, La., has suffered a great loss in the death of Mrs. Amanda Regan, after a long illness. She passed away on April 21, the funeral services being conducted by her pastor, Rev. K. W. Dodson. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing loved ones and friends.

Rev. J. A. Wells, the consecrated and indefatigable pastor of the Gloster charge, Mississippi Conference, has added to his other activities the publishing of a monthly paper, "The Pastor's Assistant," a copy of which we have received and read with much interest. It cannot fail to be helpful to those for whom it is designed.

The Woman's Missionary Society at Clarksdale, Miss., under the presidency of Mrs. S. W. Whitmire, is an exceedingly active and efficient organization. One item of its recent work is the securing of a list of 32 subscriptions to the Advocate through volunteer committees. Happy is the pastor who has such faithful and devoted helpers in his work!

We were happy to greet in our office on Friday of last week, Rev. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, Rev. Martin Hebert, presiding elder of the Houma District, and Rev. A. J. Martin, our pastor at Lockport, La., all of the Louisiana Conference. We enjoyed their fellowship and rejoiced with them in the good reports of their work.

Rev. A. F. Moore, pastor of the Sardis circuit, North Mississippi Conference, has been greatly hindered in his work this year by sickness and unfavorable weather, but conditions generally are improving and the outlook is encouraging. He serves a loyal people, who are greatly interested in the work of the church. Brother Moore has secured the quota of subscriptions to the Advocate assigned to his charge, but is expecting to go beyond it.

We learn from Rev. J. B. Cain that a very helpful revival has recently been held at Emory University. The preaching was done principally by Dr. E. K. McKiarty, of Asheville, N. C., though Professor T. H. Lipscomb and Professor Plato Durham preached several very helpful sermons.

We are glad to have a call on Tuesday morning from Rev. C. F. Emery, our pastor at Columbia, Miss. He was passing through the city en route to the meeting of the Seashore District Conference, in session this week at Biloxi, Miss.

According to information reaching us, Dr. S. H. C. Burgin was elected Secretary of the Board of Church Extension to succeed Dr. H. A. Boaz, at the recent meeting of the Board in Louisville. Bishop W. F. McMurry was elected President of the Board, and Mr. T. L. Jefferson was elected Secretary of the Loan Department.

Among the charges that accepted the "Every-Family" proposition of the Advocate, we are glad to make the following additions to the list already published: First Church, Alexandria, La., Dr. S. H. Werlein, pastor, 426; Williamsburg charge, Mississippi Conference, Rev. R. T. Pickett, pastor, 110; Tupelo, Miss., Rev. J. A. Hall, pastor, 165; Hazlehurst, Miss., Rev. W. W. Graves, pastor, 81. Rev. S. A. Brown, of Lula, Miss., added 13 names to his original list, making the total 33.

Rev. John W. Ramsey has just closed a splendid meeting at State Line, Miss., in which he was assisted by Rev. T. J. Norsworthy, of Meridian, Miss. As a result of the excellent preaching of Brother Norsworthy, there was a revival within the church. He was presented with a generous purse at the close of the meeting, and the pastor was the recipient of a "pounding" that necessitated the shipment by freight of a large box to his home at Bucatunna, Miss. (No, Brother Ramsey was not in the box—it was the "pounding.") Brother Norsworthy will assist Brother Ramsey in a meeting at Chicora, Miss., beginning on May 2.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS FOR "THE CRADLE OF MISSISSIPPI METHODISM."

To those who have subscribed for copies of "The Cradle of Mississippi Methodism," I wish to explain the delay in printing the booklet. There are two reasons. Since coming to Emory I have found some facts that make a revision necessary and this is practically completed. In the second place, enough subscriptions have not yet been received to justify publication. If there are any who desire a copy, let them send sixty cents to the Natchez Printing and Stationery Company, Natchez, Miss., and the booklet will be sent to them postpaid as soon as issued.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The North Mississippi Epworth League Conference will be held in Corinth, June 1, 2, 3—Tuesday night, Wednesday and Thursday. It is very much desired that every Epworth League in North Mississippi will have a delegate to this Conference. The program bas been arranged and some fine speakers have been secured. We have the promise of Dr. Hounshell, Mr. Harbin, Miss Helen Boulware, and probably Dr. R. S. Stewart, these beside our own home talent. The program is an exceedingly practical one. The program committee has tried to keep in mind the needs of the individual League. The evangelistic note will be kept throughout the Conference. Pray that many may give themseives in definite service.

REV. R. O. BROWN GIVES UP PRESIDING ELDERSHIP OF DURANT DISTRICT ON ACCOUNT OF ILL HEALTH.

Dear Brother Carley: Please say through your columns that after having suffered from a severe attack of "flu" since February, I have been forced to ask Bishop Kilgo to release me from work for the balance of this year.

This he has consented to do, and has appointed Brother A. C. McCorkle to fill the place until Conference. I am sure he will fill the place acceptably.

I have only the deepest feelings of gratitude, and appreciation to the preachers of the district, who have borne with me so patiently, and have assisted me so cheerfully for more than two months past. I take this step, and surrender my work, on the advice, and almost command of my physician, who deems it imperatively necessary to my recovery. I hope to be fully recovered by Conference, so that I may take work then.

Asking your prayer, and the prayers of the brethren, I am, Your brother,

R. O. BROWN.

MATTHEW JAMES HARRIS was born in Virginia, Dec. 28, 1854. He, with his parents, came to Mississippi in 1859. He and Miss Fannie Harris were married, December 8, 1886. To this union were born two boys—Hartwell P. and Matthew J., Jr. The wife and boys still live. He has passed on. He united with the Methodist Church at about 30 years of age. He was a steward for several years, the latter part of his life. If ever a man could really be called a preacher's friend, he could. His loyalty to, and thoughtfulness of his pastor are seldom equaled. He made no difference, as far as any one could tell, but he loved and honored his pastors for the work's sake, and, as Paul suggests, esteemed them very highly. Oak Ridge church, community, and Warren County have sustained an irreparable loss in his going, and they will honor and love him as the years come and go. He dearly loved for his pastor to visit him. He didn't like it if they didn't visit him pretty regularly and often, but he never complained if they didn't, in the manner that some complain. The work of the local church, the circuit, the district, conference, and the church work at large were always the main topic of conversation. He read both the general and conference organs and could always talks intelligently on these subjects. You never had to inform him when his quarterly conference convened. He knew when the time came and was always there if not providentially hindered. The pastor who visited him rarely ever left him without something to add to the larder. It can truly be said of him in that day, "ye gave me meat" (Matt. 25:35). To my mind, he was one of the most conscientious, painstaking, true, outspoken, and considerate men I ever met. You always knew where M. J. Harris stood on any question where principle was involved; however, if he differed with you he loved you still and you loved him more. No more interested listener, surely, ever sat before a preacher. Mentally, I see him now, listening eagerly, sometimes with a smile and then with a tear. He followed the discourse, he got the connections, and almost always had some words of encouragement or comment after the sermon—but never flattery. He was one of the best historians one ever meets. He knew when a preacher got his history right. When he got it wrong, he generally, with a smile, told him about it. I soon learned it was for my good to consult him often, especially as to dates. He had a wonderful memory. How I did enjoy hearing him recite incidents and dates of his younger days! On many subjects he was a walking bureau of information. The labor proposition became so acute that he sold his plantation near Oak Ridge and moved to Vicksburg last November. As his wife says, "It seems hard that he should have to go, when he was just getting ready to enjoy life"—just getting his Vicksburg home nicely improved and everything seemed to point to restful declining days when he fell a victim to influenza and passed on. May his mantle fall on his two boys! He was laid to rest in the old family burying ground near Youngton, not so very far from where he spent most of his useful and influential life. We do not know just now who conducted his funeral, but the paper that announced his death said the family was in search of his longtime friend, Dr. T. B. Holloman, to say the last sad rites. Peace to his ashes, and love, esteem, and honor to his memory! His true friend,

J. A. WELLS.

Gloster, Miss.

Mrs. M. P. BISHOP, the daughter of Mr. S. A. and Mrs. Sarah Beall, was born in the State of Georgia. During her girlhood she came to Mississippi with her parents, and in 1872 she was married to Mr. M. P. Bishop, who soon became one of the leading business men of the country, settled in Oxford, where he ran a successful mercantile and cotton buying business up to a few years ago. She was the mother of one child, a daughter, Mrs. George R. Hightower, of Natchez, whose husband is the Hon. George R. Hightower, ex-President of the Mississippi A. & M. College. On the failure of Mr. Bishop's health, in Oxford a few years ago, he closed his business and went to make his home with his daughter, in Starkville, at the A. & M. College, where he soon died, leaving his wife a widow. When Prof. Hightower retired from the presidency of the College, he came to Natchez four years ago, and with the family came Mrs. Bishop to make her home with the daughter, to whom the fond parents had given every care in training and educational advantages to bring to a completed Christian womanhood. Into this home she let the light shine of her refined and sweet Christian influence, and received from the members of the family a most cordial and gracious attention and care during her illness. Many times during the lingerings of her failing health she often spoke with calmness and composure of the outlook for the future, which was bright and glorious. She looked steadfastly, sometimes, as if she were looking into the face of her Lord and Savior, and could hear His voice calling. She was the grandmother of three very fine boys, George B., Lynwood, and Robert Hightower, and great-grandmother of one sweet little girl, Meta Perkins Hightower. On March 16, 1920, she fell sweetly asleep in Jesus, and on the next day she was buried in Abbeville, Miss., near Oxford, where she will hear the call of the trump of God to come home.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She Mixed Sulphur with it to Restore Color, Gloss, Youthfulness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, you hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.—Adv.

Eat Less and Take Salts for Kidneys

Take a Glass of Salts if your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.—Adv.

Obituaries

ELIZABETH NORWOOD CHAPMAN was born in Clinton, La., October 30, 1841, and died in Bunkie, La., March 22, 1920. The greater part of her childhood was spent in the home of her grandmother in Clinton, but her parents' home was at Centerville, Miss., where a part of her childhood was also lived. On January 20, 1860, she was married to Allan G. Chapman, a veteran of the Mexican War, and afterwards of the Civil War, who preceded her to the grave in 1904. To their union were born eleven children, seven of whom survive and were about her bedside when the end came. She lived to see a large number of grandchildren and one great-grandchild, the baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Foster Morgan, of Woodside, La. Grandma Chapman, as she was affectionately known, was a true, gentlewoman of the Old South, possessed of a culture, refinement, and dignity which are found only among that rapidly vanishing type of Southern women of the passing generation. She was converted in early childhood under the preaching of Dr. William Winans, and joined the Methodist Church, and to the end of her long life she was ever loyal to the church she loved, at all times subject to its discipline, attending upon its ordinances, and supporting its institutions. She never grew old in the church, but thought of the church today as the very best that it had ever been. And when the Centenary drive was made, no member of the church was more keenly alive to the value of that movement than she; and out of a very slender income, she gladly subscribed $100, and at the time of her death had paid two installments of her subscription. To her pastor she was a tower of strength, and counseled him with a wisdom not of this world. Of this the writer would like to say much, but lack of space forbids; suffice it to say, she strengthened him in his darkest hour, and rejoiced with him when the sun shone. Grandma Chapman did no great things, but through a long life she, in imitation of her Lord, went about doing good, and piled up a mass of good deeds heaven-high upon which she climbed to glory, leaving behind her to those she loved a rich heritage in her noble life.

Lingers like twilight hues, when the bright sun is set."

MARTHA CARGILE WILLETT was born at Montrose, Jasper County, Mississippi, July 1, 1848, and died at Seminary, Miss., March 26, 1920, aged 71 years 8 months and 25 days. In 1870 she joined the M. E. Church, South, and was baptized by our sainted friend and brother, "Uncle" Jack Evans; she also had the degrees of a Mason conferred upon her. On December 23, 1877, she was happily married to J. H. Willett. Mr. Willett was a Northern man coming South in 1875 as a railroad engineer. Mrs. Willett was a consecrated Christian and was a regular attendant at church services until impaired health prevented. She was a true and devoted wife and mother. The home was blessed with four children, two of whom preceded their mother. One son, C. J. Willett, and a daughter, Miss Cora Dixie, with their father, survive her. For one and a half years Mrs. Willett was confined to her room, five months of this time in bed, but she was very patient and submissive. Her suffering was caused chiefly from infirmities incident to advanced age. All who knew Mrs. Willett loved her and she is greatly missed as a family counsellor and thoughtful neighbor. A statement from her gave assurance that all was well with her soul and she was ready and waiting the Master's call to come up higher. Funeral services were conducted in the Methodist Church by Rev. G. R. Ellis, assisted by the writer. A large number of grief-stricken relatives and friends followed her remains to Seminary cemetery, where interment was made. Truly she "fought a good fight, finished her course and kept the faith."

CHARLES E. DOWNER,

MARY ELIZA WALLER REID was born in Greenfield, Ill., February 5, 1840, and died in Shreveport, La., April 14, 1920. She was happily married to Stephen H. Reid in 1860, and to this union were born seven children, four sons and three daughters. She is survived by three sons and one sister, Stephen H. and Frank W., of Shreveport, and George B., of Monroe. The sister, Mrs. Lucy Smith, resides in Muskogee, Okla. There are also four grandchildren who are left to mourn her loss, Gertrude, Mary Fannie, William F., and Curtis Waller Reid. Sister Reid moved from Illinois to Dearfield, Mo., in 1894, and from thence to Shreveport, La., in 1903, in which year she lost her husband and daughter, Miss Holly Reid. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church in early childhood and remained a consistent member of this and the Southern Church until the time of her death. All her life she was strong in the faith and passed triumphantly to her reward through the power of the risen Christ. Funeral services were conducted by the writer in the home of her son with whom she was living, after which the remains were shipped to Greenfield, Mo., and laid to rest beside her loved ones. To the hereaved ones we extend our sympathy and pray Heaven's divine benediction upon them. Earth's loss is heaven's gain.

Her pastor, F. R. POWER.

Shreveport, La.

The church of the one hundred and twenty waited for the great gift of the Holy Spirit; and it came, richer, more divine, more full of power from above than they could have imagined. So the church ever waited for fresh degrees of grace and glory; so apostles waited; and we, inheritors of the same sacred blessings, as many as desire to be perfect toward God, must also be thus minded.—Selected.

Keep Your Blood Clean As You Keep Your Body Clean. You Don't Wait Until Your Body is Foul Before You Cleanse It

It is a matter of surprise that many people who are so careful to have clean bodies make no effort to keep the blood clean. Everyone knows that uncleanness breeds disease; that those who do not keep their bodies in a wholesome condition and who dwell in filthy surroundings are the first to fall when some epidemic of disease sweeps the country. But foul blood is more dangerous to the individual than a foul body. An unclean body is a passive rather than an active hindrance to health. But unclean blood is an active threat against the very life—it makes the body a prepared breeding place for disease.

In view of the fact that everybody is liable to impurity of the blood why should we not treat the blood as we do the body—keep it clean on general principles? We wash and bathe regularly. We don't figure up how long we can go without cleansing the body or put off the bath until we become offensive. We intend to keep our bodies clean and we wash regularly whether we appear to need it or not. If we keep the blood pure, we are less liable to fall victims to "flu".

Of all preparations for purifying the blood Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery easily takes the first place. It eliminates from the blood the elements which clog and corrupt it, and which breed and feed disease. It acts directly on the blood-making glands, increasing their activity and so increasing the supply of rich pure blood which is the life of the body. Put up in tablets and liquid and sold by druggists.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The conference for elementary workers will be held at Holly Springs early in June. Look out for the announcement and get ready to attend.

The Standard Training School for teachers will be held at Grenada College, August 4-11. We ought to have two hundred teachers in attendance.

The Wesley Bible Class Federation will be held at Grenada College, August 12-13. We look for three hundred workers from these organized classes. Tell everybody to come.

The Lake Junaluska Training School will be held July 7-21. All who expect to attend had better make early reservations.

Do you care to have a district institute held in your charge this summer? Such an institute will be a blessing to your school. Write me if you care to have your teachers helped.

Mathiston and Bennett Academy schools have taken a Missionary Special jointly. Pickens school through the Altruist class has taken a special. Others are thinking about it.

Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, of Shelby, writes the following for this column: Our Sunday School Field Secretary is always a welcome visitor; for we realize the importance of the work he represents. We appreciate the earnestness of purpose and the deep spiritual fervor with which he labors for the improvement of the Sunday schools of our Conference. And when you came, Mr. Secretary, reinforced by Rev. W. C. Owen, Superintendent of Y. P. and Adult work, we were blessed with a mighty impetus upward and onward in the field of religious education. Our teachers are deeply appreciative of the practical help each received for her own department. The three teachers who had been taking the training course were much encouraged to have others join them in regular study. May I not ask that every pastor in the Conference send me the number of organized Bible classes in the Young Peoples' and Adult departments, indicating in each case whether it is a class of men or women or both; also giving the name of the teacher in each case? This information is needed to prepare for our coming federation of Bible classes at Grenada, August 12-13.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Last Sunday, the 25th, was spent at Anding. This was a quarterly conference and in spite of the rain it was a most enjoyable one. Brother Hollingsworth brought the Millsaps quartett with him and they rendered very fine service. As I listened to them I thought what an opportunity it was for them to render this service for other churches. I should think many adjacent churches would invite them. Brother Hollingsworth seems to have things moving well. Brother Morse preached to us a very fine sermon and held the quarterly conference. Dinner on the ground made the occasion a very neighborly one.

Monday, the second quarterly conference of the Flora charge was held at Bentonia. I had the privilege of presenting the cause of the Sunday school at this conference. Two Sunday school superintendents were present.

Tuesday and Wednesday, the Brookhaven District Institute was held at Summit, Miss. A high spiritual tide held throughout the meeting. Many of our faithful Sunday school workers were kind enough to say it was the best Institute we have ever held. The following are the officers elected for this year: J. H. Vest, Secretary; Hugh Slater, Young People-Adult, W. B. C.; Rev. H. C. Castles, Int. Sen.-W. B. C.; J. E. Carruth, Teacher-training; Mrs. Louis Woods, Elementary; Z. Z. Linton, Missions; Mrs. W. T. Denman, Home Department.

Let every Sunday school make a desperate effort to have a representative at its District Institute.

Pray for the work and the workers.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

SOME THINGS UNCLE BILLY SAID AT THE TEACHERS' MEETING.

"Th' most beautiful specimens of architecture was only visions once. So let's not be unsympathetic with our 'visionary young brother' as some folks calls th' fresh young chap with ambition to get somewhere in life."

"Th' Israelites complained 'cause the 'Gyptians wanted 'em to make bricks 'thout straw. When I hear a teacher complainin' 'cause the boys in her class has 'so much life' I wonder how she'd make men of 'em if they didn't have life. Direct activity—don't suppress it."

"Las' fall when I went to th' county fair I seen a merry-go-round. It was just some little wooden horses, an' they kep' goin' 'round an' 'round in the same track, an' a wheezy ol' organ played four tunes over an' over again. It made me think of a Sunday school I know where ev'ry session is just like the other, an' it goes round an' round in the same track, an' they sing the same tunes over an' over again."

RESOLUTIONS.

The committee, appointed by the Sunday school of the Jefferson Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Natchez, Miss., to prepare resolutions upon the death of Mrs. Lydia Shields Shaw, respectfully submits the following resolutions:

Whereas, our friend and fellow worker, Mrs. Lydia Shields Shaw, on the evening of Friday, April 2, 1920, at her home in the city of Natchez, Miss., departed this life; and

Whereas, we desire to give expression to our grief and record our esteem and appreciation of our deceased friend, her good works and faithful services, and to extend our sympathy to her bereaved dear ones;

Therefore, be it resolved, That we, the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Natchez, Miss., do honor and hold sacred the memory of our deceased sister and co-worker, Mrs. Lydia Shields Shaw, who has gone from us into the fulness of life; that we express our tribute of appreciation of her good deeds, her Christian life, her untiring and efficient services in the Sunday school and her association with us, which have ever been helpful, and will be an influence for good in the coming years; that we extend to her bereaved husband, daughters, son and all her loved ones our deep sympathy in their sorrow, in which they will be sustained and comforted by the remembrance of her noble and unselfish life and the grace of our good Father who comforts all who are heavy-hearted.

Signed by: Mrs. George Healy, Mrs. A. C. Morgan, Richard F. Reed.

REVIVAL SERVICES AT GALLOWAY MEMORIAL.

The revival services now in progress at Galloway Memorial Church are attracting good audiences and are already productive of a profound impression that will be characterized by lasting results. These services are conducted by Rev. John A. May, of the North Alabama Conference, assisted by Rev. H. K. Cornish, of Missouri, as chorus leader and soloist, and Miss Helen May, pianist. Brother May is not a sensational preacher, but is devoting the greater part of the first week to a series of doctrinal sermons on the deity, office and work of the Holy Spirit, and the congregations are leaving the house at the close of every service with a consciousness of having been fed with the Bread of Life. The consecration service at the close of last evening's service was one not soon to be forgotten.

Brother Cornish is not only a masterful leader of chorus and delightful singer, but a great personal force in the religious campaign. He has gotten a wonderful hold on the children and has the juniors and intermediates eager to be in their places at every evening service, rendering inspiring aid to the volume of song.

We are expecting a great day Sunday, and gracious times during the following week. Brother May's messages to the church morning and evening, and those of Brother Cornish to the children in the afternoon will, unquestionably, be productive of far-reaching results. Brethren, join us in prayer for the conversion of many souls, and an effective uprooting of sin in its strongholds.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

FROM COLUMBIA, MISS.

Twenty-three years ago I was appointed to serve Columbia when it was a little village more than thirty miles from a railroad. It was with great delight that I heard Bishop Kilgo assign me in December last to this place, where we were welcomed with a most cordial reception. Since then I have been very busy renewing the happy associations of former years, becoming acquainted with the large membership of this church, and adjusting myself to the strenuous pace set me by my predecessor.

Very few landmarks of the old village are familiar. Nearly all the buildings are new. The old frame building has given place to the splendid new brick church, which was completed in 1914, in time for the session of the Mississippi Conference. There are two railroads, and a depot is being erected for the third one; there are two banks, two fine school buildings, several hotels, a number of strong mercantile establishments, and all the conveniences of modern city life. There is not a vacant house in the town and many new buildings are going up. The moral and religious tone of the community is excellent. All places of business are closed on Sunday and a large number of the people attend public worship.

The Moller Organ Company promised to install our new pipe organ by the first of May, the credit for which is due to the indefatigable labors of Rev. W. M. Sullivan, who is greatly loved by all the people.

The pastor's salary was increased to $2400. Our entire assessment of $1320 for Conference and General Work has been paid. We have raised in full our quota of new subscribers for the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

In every department of church work there is a most commendable spirit of zeal and harmony. Our people exemplify I. Thess. 5:13, and it is indeed a pleasure to live among them and serve them. All things considered, there is not a more delightful charge in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference.

The latter part of last year the pastor, assisted by the Lewis brothers, had a great revival. We are planning for another one in the near future.

Sincerely, C. F. EMERY, P. C.

Most Effective and Economical.

An expert pharmacist says that the best treatment he knows of for those whose blood is poor, nerves are weak, livers torpid, or whose systems are generally rundown, is: Hood's Sarsaparilla before eating, Peptiron after eating, and Hood's Pills as necessary.

The ingredients of these medicines are indicated, he says, in most cases of blood impurities, nervousness, paleness, constipation, and are prescribed every day by physicians who have long known their efficacy. They are put up for physicians in preparations whose formulas are similar to those of Hood's Sarsaparilla, Peptiron and Hood's Pills, but these already prepared medicines so combine them as to have superlative merit and to be the most effective and economical preparations in which to take them.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, Peptiron and Hood's Pills are products of the C. I. Hood Co., Lowell, Mass., and form their Triple Combination Treatment.—Adv.

SIX MONTHS I COULD NOT WORK

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Me Strong and Able to Work—I Recommend It To All My Friends.

Bayonne, N. J.—"I had pains in back and legs so that I could not stand caused by female trouble. I felt so tired all the time, had bad headaches, and for six months I could not work. I was treated by a physician and took other remedies but got no relief. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has helped me very much. I am well and strong and now able to do my work. I cannot thank you enough and I recommend your medicine to my friends who are sick."—Mrs. SUSIE SACATANSKY, 25 East 17th St., Bayonne, N. J.

It must be admitted by every fair-minded, intelligent person, that a medicine could not live and grow in popularity for over forty years, and today hold a record for such wonderful success as does Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, without possessing great virtue and actual worth. Such medicines must be looked upon and termed both standard and dependable by every thinking person

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Inspiring Reports From The Bogalusa and Arcadia Auxiliaries.

Bogalusa—The Bogalusa Auxiliary has a good Mission Study Class which has completed 'A Crusade of Compassion for the Healing of the Nations' and will begin 'Women Workers of the Orient.' The next book will be 'The Acid Test.' The Junior Missionary Society has been organized and is at work under a competent leader. We have paid all dues and pledges for the quarter and raised $211 for local work. Bibles have been placed by us at our city hospital for the use of the patients. Plans are being made for the erection of a new Methodist Church here, and our Society has pledged $2500 toward it. The ladies have voted to support a Bible woman this year. We hope to have all dues and pledges paid at the end of the year, and our work reach such a standard of excellence as will merit our being placed on the honor roll. Mrs. K. I. BEAN, Publicity Supt., Bogalusa Auxiliary.

Arcadia—I know you will be glad that Arcadia Auxiliary has a very thriving Mission Study Class of twenty-three members. I am also sending you one of our year-books of which we are very proud. As far as I know, we are the only Society in the State which has printed its program in full this year.
Mrs. V. C. PIPES,
Publicity Supt., Arcadia Auxiliary.

This local year-book is indeed an inspiration with its significant motto for the year's work: "Have Faith in God."

It is interesting to know the schedule of work:

First Monday—Business Meeting.

Second Monday—Bible Study, using "Training for Service."

Third Monday—Social Meeting, Program from Missionary Voice.

Fourth Monday — Mission Study, using "Money the Acid Test."

Fifth Monday (every quarter)—Social Service.

The live interest evidenced in these two reports is certainly very exhilirating! Mrs. V. G. HYAMS, Conference Supt. of Publicity.

Houma Mission.

The first quarter of the new year has gone. The days have been so full and hurried along so rapidly that we have been unable to write of the many interesting happenings in our corner of the State.

The first event of every great importance was the visit to the MacDonell Wesley House from our President, and Secretary, Mrs. Niebergall and Mrs. Holt. Their brief stay was an inspiration and a very real help in solving some of the many problems that daily confront us. Other visits that have been pleasurable and helpful were those received from our presiding elder, Rev. Martin Hebert; the pastor at Lockport, Rev. A. D. Martin, his wife and fine boy; Mrs. Byerly, from Virginia, who is now at St. Mark's with her daughter; and Miss Wilhelmina Hooper, teacher in Lafourche Parish. Among those entering the home was one very unwelcome guest—Influenza—a very selfish guest demanding the undivided attention of the family, even the one who alone escaped the illness.

There is a little new girl in the Wesley House in whom everybody is interested. She is eight years old, fair-haired, dark-eyed, and smiling. She doesn't speak English, is very timid, and the new home surroundings and the town life are quite new and strange to her, but she knows what she wants and is willing to pay the price for it. She wants an education and she wants to play the piano. Her home is at Point au Chien and she is the first girl in that community with courage enough to take the long trip, twenty-five miles, to a "foreign" home and a strange school. One of her little companions was invited to come, but she had never been in a car and was afraid of it. This sturdy-spirited young pioneer will be a blessing to her home people when she returns in the summer.

These chronicles would be far from complete should I fail to tell of a box of happiness that came from the Neame Auxiliary to another little girl in the Wesley House. It was an Easter box containing the daintiest little white dress and all the accessories, including shoes, stockings, and a hat. A gladder, happier little girl I have never seen. When she is an old lady and writes a story entitled the "Happiest Event of My Life," this Easter box will surely be the subject.

The Ford traveled during the quarter nearly a thousand miles, but it would take too long to write of all the happenings along the way.

Somebody is praying for us over here and God is answering prayer. The Spirit is working, obstacles are overcome, a new spirit of earnestness on the part of the young people is manifest, and in every way we feel the presence and the blessing of God.
ELLA HOOPER, Deaconess.

INTERDENOMINATIONAL HOME MISSION ITEMS.

From the report of the Executive Secretary as presented to the Home Missions Council at its annual meeting in January many interesting and encouraging facts may be gleaned. We note the following:

1. An organization of the Protestant evangelical churches working in Alaska organized a common association and set up a joint committee, undertaking thereby so to correlate their separate pieces of work as to present a common front, prevent neglect of people and areas, overlapping and overcrowding.

2. For the first time missionaries to the Indians of different tribes and localities met on invitation of the Committee on Indian Missions of this Council to consider their comuon problems and help each other form an adequate and comprehensive program.

3. Six denominations have joined in creating a Committee on Lumber Camps.

4. Under the auspices of the Committee on Comity and Co-operation a most thorough survey of the State of Montana has been made, with the result that this State "has had its area, community by community, county by county, or valley by valley, 'allocated' to the religious care and undisputed responsibility of one or more denom-

Letters From Rheumatics.

Possibly you have imagined that you could not get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of rheumatism you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Springs are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water that those who have been relieved of their rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Croshy, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver and Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant of Savannah writes, "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of Stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time I was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes of Virginia writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The Water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain.

Mr. McClam of South Carolina writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter of Virginia writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

COLUMBUS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The fiftieth session of the Columbus District Conference, North Mississippi Annual Conference, met in Brooksville, Miss., on Monday night, April 19, with the opening sermon preached by Rev. Carroll Varner, of the West Point church.

The Conference opened in regular session Tuesday morning with the presiding elder, Rev. W. L. Duren, in the chair. At this time he spoke encouragingly of the work of the district, but called special attention to some of the questions that should be emphasized at this time. Among them were evangelism, denunciation of worldliness, and making good the Centenary pledges.

The reports of the preachers showed but few conversions during the year, though they were prospering in other ways. Growth in church attendance, and interest in Sunday school work were encouraging.

One of the main features of the conference was the preaching services. Inspiring messages were delivered by Rev. Carroll Varner, Rev. A. F. Watkins, Rev. H. M. Young, and Rev. J. T. McCafferty.

Rev. J. R. Murf, Rev. C. M. Ray, and Rev. R. B. Craig were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial, and Rev. W. A. Langley for deacon's orders.

Dr. D. N. Guerry was elected Lay Leader for the district, and the following chosen as delegates to the Annual Conference: Dr. D. N. Guerry, W. L. Atkins, T. W. Davis, W. C. Futvoye, W. E. Stokes, W. W. Magruder, S. B. White, and T. B. Thrower.

Artesia was selected as the place of meeting for the next session of the conference.

The Rev. W. W. Hartsfield and the good people of Brooksville, proved excellent hosts. Their entertainment in their homes was royal, and to add to the convenience of the members of the conference and the visitors, dinner was served at the church each day. Special thanks were offered at the session of the last day, but words were inadequate to express the appreciation of the conference for the kindness received.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

The building Committee for Whitworth College met on April 22, and let the contract for the new dormitory and gymnasium to Mr. Eugene McCormick, architect and contractor, the work to be completed by Sept. 10. The gymnasium and swimming pool will be of the most modern type. These much-needed improvements have been made possible by the liberal contributions of a few staunch friends of Whitworth. The "Y" Hut is nearing completion. Instead of the Log Hut, orlginally designed by the young ladies, an elegant brick building is being constructed, with ample facilities for all religious and social activities of the student body.

Dr. Cooper is already receiving applications for rooms for next session, and the indications are that every room will be taken long before the opening of the session. Whitworth is entering upon a new era of prosperity and usefulness. Mississippi Methodism should feel justly proud of the success attending Dr. Cooper's efforts, and should rally to him in all of his plans for a greater Whitworth.

The Board of Trustees in its annual meeting a few weeks ago elected Dr. Cooper president for another term of five years beginning June, 1921. He expects to leave for Europe on July 1, to be gone about four months. When he returns he will have a new lease on life and we may expect of him even greater activity than in the past. The following new members were added to the Board: W. B. Jones, V. D. Youngblood, W. H. Lewis, T. E. Enochs. The Building Committee was authorized to purchase the parsonage here, to be used as a hospital for the College.

Whitworth College will start the session of 1920, having practically a new plant which will be a credit to Methodism. Margaret Hall and The Institute will be modernized; a new fence around the campus has been completed at a cost of $1100. When the improvements now under headway are completed, the College will own nine buildings, seven of which will be new.

Why Lack of Iron Keeps Women Weak, Nervous, Fretful and Run-Down

While Plenty of Red Blood Rich in Iron Helps Make Them Strong, Healthy and Beautiful.

How Organic Iron—Nuxated Iron—Helps Solve Problem of Supplying Iron Deficiency, Thereby Increasing the Strength and Endurance of Delicate Care-worn Women in Two Weeks Time in Many Instances.

Many a woman who ought still to be young in feeling is losing the old-time vim and energy that makes life worth living simply because her blood is thinning out and possibly starving through lack of iron. It is through iron in the red coloring matter of the blood that life-sustaining oxygen enters the body and enables the blood to change food into living tissue, muscle and brain.

In commenting upon the alarming iron deficiency in the blood of the average woman of today, Dr. George H. Baker, formerly Physician and Surgeon Monmouth Memorial Hospital of New Jersey said:

"What women need to put roses in their cheeks and the springtime of life into their step is not cosmetics or stimulating drugs, but plenty of rich pure red blood. Without it no woman can do credit to herself or to her work. Iron is one of the greatest of all strength and blood builders and I have found nothing in my experience so effective for helping to make strong, healthy red blooded women as Nuxated Iron. From a careful examination of the formula and my own tests of Nuxated Iron I feel convinced that it is a preparation which any physician can take himself or prescribe for his patients with the utmost confidence of obtaining highly beneficial and satisfactory results."

Dr. Ferdinand King, a New York Physician and Medical Author says: "I have strongly emphasized the fact that doctors should prescribe more organic iron—Nuxated Iron—for their nervous, run-down, weak, haggard looking women patients. Lack of iron in the blood may often transform a beautiful sweet-tempered woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable—one who makes life a burden to herself, unbearable for her husband, and disagreeable for her children. When the iron goes from the blood of women, the roses go from their cheeks."

If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained.

inations." Plans are now being laid to make a similar survey of the State of Washington.

From the report of the Committee on Exceptional Work we note other important points:

1. There are probably six hundred thousand adherents of the Mormon church in this country. They have thousands of missionaries everywhere, a group in every city of any size in the United States. Thousands of girls are being imported every year from Europe. Outside of the mainland of the United States, probably their most active work is being done in the Hawaiian Islands.

2. With regard to Jews in the United States it is stated that eighty per cent of the Jews in America are not actively connected with their own faith, thus forming a religious problem, if not an opportunity, which is significant.

3. Some significant facts are presented regarding the Japenese in this country. "The Japanese," continues the report, "are undoubtedly becoming the most intelligent of all of our alien groups. They actually 'eat up' all American literature and education within their reach. Some of the very best bookstores on the coast are owned by the Japanese and are filled with works compiled in the Japanese language. The Japanese furnish the lowest percentage of their population to the criminal class in Hawaii.—Council Bulletin.

THE WINONA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The fifty-first annual session of the Winona District Conference convened in the Methodist Church at Indianola, April 20, 1920, at 9 a.m., and was in session for two days. Our faithful, beloved and versatile presiding elder was at his best and presided in a most unusual and efficient manner and made every minute of the conference worthy of note and report. The conference regretted very much that Bishop Kilgo was unable to attend; notwithstanding this disappointment, however, the conference was a perfect success in every particular.

Among the things that were especially gratifying were the excellent attendance on the part of the laymen of the district, the good reports that were received from the respective charges, the great spirit of brotherliness, sincerity and earnestness of the brethren and the desire of each and every one to receive and carry back a blessing to his charge that will enable him to do more for the Master and for the Kingdom of God.

A few things that are worthy of special mention: Belzoni has raised $60,000.00 in subscriptions on new church building and had 67 additions to the church since Conference; growing interest on the Carrollton charge in revival work; Drew reports all interests of the church in full up to date; Dublin reports good Sunday schools and great interest among the older people in same; Greenwood reports 60 additions to church since Conference and all other interests well in hand; Indianola reports plans being made for a new church building; Inverness reports plans in hand for new church at Inverness; Itta Bena reports harmony and fellowship on every hand; plans are being made for a new church building at Marks, on the Lambert charge; report from Minter City and Phillips showed interest along all lines; the report from Moorhead showed $2500.00 raised to pay church out of debt; Ruleville reports all collections to date and co-operation along all lines; all collections in cash and subscriptions at Schlater; growing interest in every particular on the Sunflower charge; the work improving and making progress on the Swiftown Mission; good Sunday schools and good interest on the Tutwiler charge; the good people on the Webb charge rallying to their pastor; good work and a good meeting with 30 additions to the church at Winona, 60 in all since Conference.

Rev. B. P. Jaco, Conference Missionary Secretary, Rev. B. F. Lewis, of the Methodist Orphanage, Dr. M. M. Black, Commissioner for Millsaps College, and Dr. Robert Selby, of Emory University, were all present and they presented their respective works in masterful, impressive, thoughtful and earnest addresses.

This article would be incomplete if i should fail to mention the hospitality and open-heartedness of the Indianola people in receiving us and entertaining us during the conference. I have never seen the hospitality of this dear people excelled anywhere, and when the question of where the next district conference should be held was called, we all with one accord wanted to go back to Indianola; but Lambert insisted on our coming there next year, so the conference voted to this effect. May God richly bless the people of Indianola for their great kindness and generosity.

The delegates elected to the Annual Conference were G. R. Stokley, J. J. Beck, J. H. Price, R. L. Ward, J. R. Bingham, T. M. Coleman, A. L. Marshall and H. A. Sorrells.

The conference was indeed a treat to each and every one of us. Let us pray that the Spirit of God that was manifested in this conference may ever manifest Himself throughout this district and our church to and through each heart, and that our church shall always and ever seek His direction that we may do great things for God and men.

Secretary.

FROM WINNSBORO, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: On April 18, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, our beloved and efficient presiding elder, came and held my first quarterly conference at 4 o'clock, p.m., and preached a fine sermon at night to a large and appreciative congregation. You see, on account of the influenza, we had to change the date of our quarterly conference to April 18. We had a splendid conference and a fine communion service at night. The pastor's salary was fixed at $1600, a raise of $100.

All things considered, we are making some progress and expect to make more, the Lord helping. Pray for us.

I am sending you a list of subscribers to the Advocate, and expect to send more soon. Fraternally,

For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that

POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effects on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

KAINIT

20 per cent MANURE SALT

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big Cotton Crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three
Standard GERMAN Potash Salts
that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

A SUPREME PASSION.

There must be a supreme passion in every successful life. With the Christian, of course, this is the passion for righteousness. All other activities center in and find expression through this dominant principle of supreme devotion. In other cases as well, the supreme passion of life determines the form and content of all programs. Those lives that are without a supreme passion must be content to move in the well-beaten paths of mediocrity and come to their journey's end with little of achievement and less of glory to comfort and inspire. "A pearl of great price" is not to be had merely for the asking; those who would gain possession of great riches must labor whole-heartedly for what they desire.

WHAT DO THEY KNOW ABOUT IT?

According to a news item last week, the price of shoes will come down about a year hence, so the tanners say. We hope they are right—but we wonder what they know about it. It is a long way from the tanner to the ultimate consumer, and many a profit has to be added to the raw material. We confess, however, that a prophecy of lower prices sounds like sweet music to ears that have become accustomed to "the inevitable advance." The newly-elected Governor of Louisiana says he has not bought a pair of shoes in three years; if he can hold out another twelvemonth, he will have saved money.

FLOWERS ARE NOT ENOUGH.

When John McDonogh died many years ago and left a large part of his fortune to the city of New Orleans for the establishment of a public school system, a specific and definite provision of his will was to the effect that the Bible should be read in the schools so established. The city accepted the bequest, and many of its most efficient schools bear the name of this benefactor; but the city does not comply with the provisions of the will so far as the Bible is concerned. On Friday, May 7, thousands of children laid flowers upon the monument of McDonogh in Lafayette Square in appreciative memory of his munificent gift. It is a beautiful custom, observed annually; but it does not take the place of the tribute that the people of this city should pay to his memory by complying with the conditions upon which he made them his beneficiaries. They are using his money, but they are ignoring his purpose in giving the money. They should do neither, or they should do both.

NOT ALL BAD.

If we should take too seriously the lamentations we hear every day about the present state of things on this mundane sphere, we should inevitably reach the conclusion that the world is about the most dismal place in the universe in which to live, and the prospect of a change to some other abode would be welcomed with a sigh of relief. Well, this is far from being a perfect world. Only the wilfully blind can fail to see the evils that flaunt themselves and the dangers that abound; the ostrich is a poor optimist when he hides his head in the sand and imagines that all is well. But the world is not all bad. Good men and women are still living and laboring and loving in this "vale of tears;" little children are happily singing the songs of innocent mirth and finding joy in the companionship of playmates and the affection of parents; noble aspirations and high ideals still have a place in the hearts of youths and maidens, and lofty ambitions are helping men to scale the heights of glorious achievement; ever and anon the sun breaks through the clouds, and a golden radiance lights up the dark places; the birds, too, make melody on many a bright morning. The world is bad enough, to be sure—but it is not all bad; there are enough good things in it to make us take courage, and enough good people to make us hope that it will be better by and by. And God still cares.

MOTHERS' DAY.

Last Sunday was Mothers' Day; why, we cannot say. With us, through all these years, oft in joy, sometimes in tears, once as boy and now as man, we've never had to pick a date or lay a plan to make us think of Mother. When night has come, though often worn with toils and care the sum of which we scarce could bear, the soft caress of Mother's hand upon a troubled, fevered brow has brought relief and sweet repose; the kiss she'd press upon our cheek was sweeter far than breath of rose the fairies seek in the radiant dawn. Our prayers we've said as we have knelt beside her chair; and we have felt, as we bowed there, that Heaven itself was nearer earth; for Mother's love, like that above, o'erlooks our faults and magnifies the best in us till we ourselves, in simple trust, take hold of God who gave us Mother. Mothers' Day? Go write it down for him who needs to be reminded that a crown forever rests upon the head of her who gave him birth. But not for us; somehow or other in peace, or sorrow, pain or mirth, our every day we thank God for and think of Mother.

MORE THAN A COINCIDENCE.

A student at the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago was asked to show a gentleman (a stranger to him and to the city) around the Institute buildings, which he did thoroughly and cheerfully. The man asked his name, and a few weeks afterwards wrote him a letter, thanking him for the service rendered, to which the student replied. Some months later, he received another letter from the stranger, asking if he were still in the Institute, to which he responded, and by return mail received a check for $100. Simple enough thus far; but this student had been praying. He needed money to have his eyes treated, and he wanted to make a contribution to missions, and he got enough for both purposes. Some call it a coincidence—but we call it answered prayer.

MORAL CHARACTER COMMANDS RESPECT.

Without any thought of the political significance of the event, we think it is noteworthy that Hon. W. J. Bryan was recently elected a delegate to the Democratic National Convention from Nebraska in the face of the bitterest opposition he has ever encountered in his many campaigns for the support of the people. It is generally understood that the liquor interests of the nation entered the fight in Nebraska against Mr. Bryan, realizing that it would mean much to their cause to be able to point to the defeat of the man who fearlessly and emphatically endorsed prohibition at the Jackson Day banquet at Washington on January 8. But they were doomed to disappointment. Mr. Bryan may not always have been right in his opinions concerning public affairs—though thousands of his fellow-citizens have followed his leadership with full confidence in the correctness of his views—but he has established a moral character that commands the respect of the whole nation. So far as we know, even his bitterest political enemies have never undertaken to besmirch his honor. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches."

PRETTY WEARY.

We are pretty weary of what seems to be a well-nigh universal habit of estimating the prosperity of the country in terms of bank clearings, trade balances, exchange rates, and the like. Money is the cheapest thing in the world—and men are certainly more than animated cash registers. If to be an expert in "big business" means simply the ability to think always and only in terms of dollars and cents, "big business" is a snare and delusion. Money does not make men—men make money.

THE TOUCH OF HUMAN HANDS.

Among the hills of Galilee,
Through crowded city ways,
The Christ of God went forth to heal
And bless in olden days.
The sinning and the sad of heart
In anxious throngs were massed
To catch the great Physician's eye
And touch Him as He passed.
We have not in our hours of need
His seamless garments pressed,
Nor felt His tender human hand
On us in blessing rest;

Yet still in crowded city streets
The Christ goes forth again,
Whenever touch of human hand
Bespeaks good will to men.
Whenever man his brother man
Upholds in helpfulness;
Whenever strong and tender clasp
A lonely heart doth bless,
The Christ of God is answering
A stricken world's demands
And leading back a wandering race
By touch of human hands.

THE RIGHT OF CHILDREN TO BAPTISM.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

After all these years of discussion and controversy, it would require the brilliancy of a genius to present to the reading public any new arguments on infant baptism; hence, I shall not essay anything orlginal on this subject, neither is it my wish to offer here merely a repetition of old matter on a topic so familiar to the reader. But I do desire, if possible, to write down here old matter in a new form. Whether I succeed in accomplishing my wish, I shall let the reader judge.

Permit me, first, a brief presentation of one or two objections to infant baptism by premising that every objection which has ever been offered against infant baptism, however pertinent and irrefutable it may appear, may be urged with equal force against adult baptism. Take, for example, the objection of Tertullian. He was born sixty years after the death of St. John. He was the first who objected to infant baptism. He believed in baptismal regeneration—that baptism actually washed away sins. On this ground he advocated the postponement of baptism because the child might sin later. This objection holds against adult baptism. It would be better to postpone it till the man is on his deathbed—he might sin later. In fact, this was precisely the argument of Tertullian. But then the man could not be immersed because you cannot immerse a dying man. So we had better immerse him now and take the chances on his sinning later. This, I presume, would be the contention of the immersionist. It has been objected that the child does not, and cannot, know the meaning of baptism. The truth of this objection cannot be denied and is readily admitted; but now turn the objection against adult baptism and it may be urged with equal force; for, how many adults know the significance of baptism? The answer is apparent—not one in a thousand. So, then, if ignorance of the meaning of baptism bars the infant from the benefits and privileges symbolized in baptism, the same lack of knowledge of its significance also excludes the vast majority of adults.

Again, it has been objected that a child baptized in infancy may become dissatisfied with its baptism. I reply that if so, it is the fault of the parents in that they failed properly to instruct the child; but if, through their failure, the child becomes dissatisfied, is there not a remedy? May it not be baptized again? But what of the child who becomes dissatisfied with the fact that it was not baptized in infancy? There would be no remedy because it could not go back to its infancy in order to be baptized. For instance, I am such a firm believer in infant baptism that if my parents had neglected their religious duty, it would be impossible for me to get any satisfactory baptism. Applying the test given above, is it not possible for the adult to become dissatisfied with his baptism? I have known of several instances. So, then, if the possibility of the child's becoming dissatisfied with its baptism is an argument against infant baptism, so also is it an argument against adult baptism. I have read of those who became dissatisfied with the names given them in infancy and later in life applied to the State Legislature for a change of name. If, then, we should not baptize children in infancy because of possible dissatisfaction, by parity of reason we should cease the practice of naming our children, waiting until they are old enough to choose a name for themselves. For the sake of emphasis, I close this paragraph with a repetition of the statement that every objection whatsoever offered against infant baptism may be urged with equal force against adult baptism. Having given a few illustrations of how this rule works, I leave it to the reader to test it out at every point till he is thoroughly satisfied that it will stand every test.

In my articles on "The Spiritual Status of Children" and "The Relation of Children to the Church," I establish two propositions: First, Children are, by virtue of the atonement of Jesus Christ, born into the world inside the kingdom; second, Children have a right to membership in the organized, visible church. Now, the whole question of the right of children to membership in the organized church depends solely upon whether they are born inside the kingdom, and, once more, I challenge any one to produce a single passage of Scripture which, rightly interpreted, proves the contrary. Take the first proposition and formulate it into a syllogism and we have the following:

Children are born inside the kingdom;
Baptism is the symbol of membership in the kingdom;
Therefore, children should be baptized.

Take the first proposition and combine it with the second, that children have a right to membership in the organized church and we have:

Children are born into the world members of the kingdom;
The church is the visible expression of the kingdom;
Therefore, children have a right to membership in the church.

Now if, because they are born inside the kingdom, children have a right to membership in the church, then, unquestionably, the sign and seal of church membership cannot be denied them. The syllogistic form of my argument is as follows:

Children have a right to membership in the visible church;
Baptism is the only symbol of the right to membership in the church;
Therefore, children should be baptized.

Another important proposition which has been established in these articles is the identity of the church in all ages, only changing its forms and ceremonies with the varying circumstances and conditions of men. Because of the identity of the church in all periods of human history, we may very correctly arrive at the historical conclusion that if children were admitted to membership under the Jewish dispensation, they should also be admitted to the church under the Christian dispensation, unless, upon investigation, we find that the commandment of God whereby they were admitted to the Jewish church was annulled on the Day of Pentecost, the beginning of the Christian era, or since that time. I have shown that so far from having revoked his covenant with Abraham admitting the children to the church, God inspired Peter on the Day of Pentecost to repeat it verbatim, and it cannot be shown that it has been repealed since Pentecost; rather, since it was the common and continuous practice of the apostles to receive whole families into the church, the presumption is that there were children in at least some of those families. We have, then, the following argument:

Children were admitted into the Jewish church;
The church is identical in all ages;
Therefore, children should be admitted into the Christian church.

Or,

The Abrahamic covenant admitted children to the Jewish church;
The Abrahamic covenant has never been annulled;
Therefore the Abrahamic covenant admits children to the Christian church.

Thus, the right of children to membership in the Christian church is confirmed, and, of course, their right to baptism, since baptism is the only door into the visible church, and the only way by which their right to church membership can be recognized.

Once more: It has been seen that the sign and seal of the Abrahamic covenant was circumcision, and by that divinely ordained rite children were admitted to the church. A very casual reading of the Bible will clearly indicate that under the Christian dispensation, baptism was substituted for circumcision. The practice of John the Baptist, of Jesus, and the apostles, confirms the truth of this statement. He who questions this historical fact subjects himself to the ridicule of an intelligent public. Now, shaping these facts into another syllogism, we have the following:

By circumcision children were admitted into the Jewish church;
Baptism has taken the place of circumcision;
Therefore, children should be admitted to the Christian church by baptism.

Now, in order that the reader may get a clear view of my whole argument concerning the status of children as presented in these articles, I here write down a brief summarization as follows: Children are born into the world inside the kingdom by virtue of the atonement of Jesus Christ. This being true, the following logical conclusions must be accepted: The theological invention which I have called the "dying grace" theory is unnecessary; dying in infancy, they go directly to heaven without the necessity of any interposition or mysterious operation of grace, this exigency being provided for in the atonement; living, they remain in the kingdom, and it is possible for them so to be taught that they will never be excluded from the kingdom by personal transgression; while they are born with a depraved nature, as are all the posterity of Adam, yet they are not responsible for it except as they yield to it to the extent of the commission of personal sin; depravity does not necessitate regeneration, but the taint consequent upon personal sin, and, since small children are incapable of actual sin, also because regeneration implies cleansing, its purpose being introduction into the kingdom of those who, by sin, have been excluded from the kingdom, children do not need regeneration in the same sense as adults; they are members of the kingdom, and, therefore, have a right to membership in the visible church; baptism being the symbol of the one and the door of admission into the other, children should be baptized.

Once admit the truth that children are born into the world inside the kingdom by virtue of the atonement of Jesus Christ, and all the other deductions logically and inevitably follow. But I have clearly shown that the Bible teaches that infants are born inside the kingdom; therefore they do not need regeneration, are not responsible for depravity which does not necessitate regeneration, have a right to membership in the visible church, and, baptism being the only door of admission into the church, children should be baptized in infancy.

In closing this series of articles, allow me to say that they have not been written with the slightest hope of convincing those of other denominations who are traditionally and constitutionally opposed both to the membership of children in the church and infant baptism. I do not profess the possession of the miracle-working power of opening the eyes of the blind—especially the blind who will not see; but I have written solely for the benefit of Methodist parents who inconsistently oppose, or indifferently neglect, the dedication of their children to God in baptism, and who unscripturally raise barriers between their children and memberhip in the church, thus defrauding them of their birthright. All eternity will not afford me sufficient time and opportunity for praising God for the privilege of being an humble representative of the ministry of the Methodist church, which has found a place for me, and my wife, and my children. The words of the Apostle to the penitent jailer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house," is the glorious message of Methodism to the world.

ANOTHER ANGLE TO UNIFICATION.

By Bishop William N. Ainsworth.

Suggestions have been advanced from several sources that discussion of the pending plan of unification be deferred until after the evangelistic campaign is over. Undoubtedly all Methodists need now to give themselves without distraction to the great missionary, evangelistic and educational program of the church, but press dispatches sent out from Louisville on adjournment of the Joint Commission were so misleading that a false impression of the present status of unification will obtain throughout the church, unless these misleading statements are corrected. The advocates of another view seem determined to press the issue to the front in all the papers of the church, and it seems desirable, therefore, for a contrary aspect to be presented at this time. The press dispatches announced the agreement of the commission on a plan of unification to be recommended to the two General Conferences. Such is far from the fact. The pending plan was not recommended by the joint commission or either side of it. The question was not even put, and for good reasons. The advocates of the plan in its present shape probably knew that it would not receive the endorsement of a majority of the commission. It was simply proposed to transmit what the commission had accomplished to the two General Conferences for their further direction without any recommendation whatsoever from the commission. Many members of the commission were willing to transmit the result of their negotiations without giving their endorsement to the plan, and the vote for transmisson was so distinctly understood. It is perfectly well known within the commission that many members who voted for its transmission will oppose its adoption at the General Conference. Truth demands that these facts be fully understood, for they may have a vital bearing upon the future course of unification.

As a member of the Joint Commission from the beginning, I have attended every meeting that has been held, and, during the early stages of the negotiations, worked with zeal to secure an acceptable plan of unification on the basis of the Oklahoma declaration. At the Savannah meeting I became convinced that such a plan would be impossible at the present time, and I do not believe that the pending plan will accomplish the result that is desired by both the churches. The Constitution, which was finished at Louisville, is an exceedingly complex and cumbersome piece of machinery. Its provisions are a series of defences against divergent views and opposing parties that will make difficult any free action and hamper the progress of the church, and, in my opinion, perpetually disturb its peace. The commission believed that it was bound to make ample provision to protect the rights of minorities. It seems to have done this as thoroughly as any Constitution can do it, and then some. Under this Constitution a very small minority can block anything a vast majority of the church wants to do. If the demand is made by a majority of any two regional delegations in the General Conference, no measure can pass without receiving a majority vote of five of the seven regions in the United States. Under this provision twenty-two negro delegates and fifty-one members of another regional delegation—seventy-three in all—may require a vote by region and this same number plus a bare majority of another region—say fifty-one more or a total of one hundred and twenty-four—may block any program that the other six hundred and seventy-five members of the General Conference may desire. No such body of men would long submit to the bonds of such a constitution, and these two churches ought not to subject their development to the tyranny of a tiny fraction of their membership for the mere sake of getting together. It is a safe thing to predict that this feature of the constitution will not long survive, even if the two churches can be induced to begin business together under such an arrangement.

The Regional Conference arrangement does not conform to our Oklahoma declaration and will meet with just objection. Nobody desires the homogeneous membership of Southern Methodism to be broken up into three distinct fragments, with consequent loss of wisdom in its councils and momentum in its movements, and undoubtedly the same objection will prevail in the Northern Church to the proposed partitioning of its territory. Neither the Oklahoma General Conference nor the Chattanooga council ever contemplated such a fractional division of these churches. The Regional Conference arrangement will either shatter the church into seven autonomous branches, each developing divergent views to further disturb the unity of Methodism, or it will function as so many administrative areas with "full power" only to execute the policies that are promulgated by a supreme General Conference. The particular authority of the Regional Conference in the proposed constitution is rather hazy, but these seem to be the two alternative lines of its development, neither of which will promote the unity and the harmony of the church.

The proposed relation for the present negro membership of the Northern Church is open to the most serious objection and from both sides. The Southern commissioners entered upon these negotiations with a unanimous conviction that proportionate representation for the negro in the General Conference, if he should not be set up in an independent but affiliated General Conference, would not be acceptable to our constituency, and that it could not be allowed. We felt that justice and righteousness required no more than a limited representation for a people that are by every token ignorant and immature and only a missionary element in the church. But behold! In the space of three years the advocates of proportionate representation in our own commission have increased from invisibility to a possible majority of the delegation. Was our commission mistaken in its earlier meetings as to what our constituency desired? Or can it be that three years have wrought so radical a change in the views of our people? It is true the number of negro delegates in the General Conference will not be large, and they will be restricted to five per cent of the total membership in perpetuity (the white regions are also restricted to a given per cent), but the principle of proportionate representation will lay the foundation for a new propaganda in the South that will be carried to every negro congregation in America and will find its echo in the platforms of political parties and in the halls of the national congress. People who are conversant with present conditions south of the Ohio River will not welcome such propaganda, for it will not promote the best relations between the two races where both are found in nearly equal numbers. The chances are that this provision will be equally as unacceptable to the Northern view, but for another reason. While it admits the principles of proportionate representation for which they earnestly contend, and will contend, it denies to the negro legal rights which he now enjoys in the Northern Church, and the withdrawal of which many good lawyers believe he might successfully resist in a court of law. It is also to be doubted if the arrangement will commend itself to the negroes involved or give the white Methodists of America any better access to the great body of American negroes after this little group is made a sort of preferred creditor on the bounty of American Methodists.

The writer did not intend to do more than state these propositions at the present time, and these objections will not warrant the conclusion that the writer has ceased to desire unification or that he thinks it is a generation off. There are sound reasons to believe that a real union of American Methodism would strengthen our denominational work and promote all of the interests of the Kingdom of God. Denominationalism has its place and evangelical Christianity has produced its finest fruitage in America, where religious conviction has expressed itself with unrestrained freedom. Oneness of ecclesiastical organization would not likely produce a better spiritual product among Protestants than it has among Roman Catholics. However the points of agreement between all Episcopal Methodists are so many and the points of divergence are so few that unity of organization would seem to be dictated by wisdom of administration. I cannot believe that unification will be an adjourned issue until this desirable result is obtained, but the pending plan will not unify, but only distract the church.

AFFAIRS IN THE ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.

My Dear Brother Carley: I am nearing the end of my second round of quarterly conferences. It has been an exceedingly fruitful one. The gain in our membership thus far is near 500—some charges have not reported since their meetings. The Centenary pledges are receiving attention, and payments are made and forwarded to treasurer. Debts are being paid and improvements made on church and parsonage property. The De Ridder church will soon be free of debt, and ready with new pews for the entertainment of the Annual Conference. The revivals continue. I am holding a meeting now at Tioga—have been preaching there during the past week. The congregations are fine and the interest is growing at each service. The meeting will continue through this week.

The preachers are all giving themselves without stint to the work assigned them, and their labors in the Lord have been graciously blessed.

I had the pleasure of attending the services of our First Church Sunday school on Sunday School Day. Brother T. Wynn Hollóman is an exceptionally fine superintendent, one of the best in the church, if not the very best. Dr. Werlein baptized several children and made an earnest and helpful address.

I am awaiting with deep interest the action of the M. E. General Conference on the question of unification or re-organization of American Methodism. My opinion is, it will not accept the plan as submitted by the Commission, and the matter will end with them. I hope my opinion is correct; there is no need of more effort to accomplish the impossible. Unification without confidence is irritation and confusion multiplied beyond measure.

The year has been thus far a most prosperous one for us. Plans are being laid for enlarged Sunday school equipment at our First Church. Dr. Werlein will begin a revival meeting on May 30, with Albert C. Fisher, one of the general evangelists, leading the meeting.

To the Great Head of the Church we give humble thanks for the multiform and multitudinous blessings we have received.

Ruston Orphanage Develops Flower of Christian Womanhood.

These young ladies are typical examples of the splendid work and the cultured Christian environment of the Ruston Methodist Orphanage.

CAMPAIGN FOR LOUISIANA METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

Two hundred children—orphaned and cast upon the tides of chance—need the uplifting, Americanizing influence of a home, and the 40,000 Methodists of Louisiana and their friends will soon be called upon to answer this Christian call of little, helpless humanity.

On the outskirts of the city of Ruston, in Northern Louisiana, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Louisiana erected eleven years ago its only orphanage in this State.

Under the loving and all-sacrificing direction of Superintendent R. W. Vaughan, the Ruston Orphanage has been a haven and a real home to hundreds, taking tots from an environment that smothered and stifled health and character and bringing them up into the unfoldment of beautiful manhood and womanhood.

It has taken into its portals lives seemingly without hope and years later bade godspeed from those same doors to stalwart, upstanding, God-fearing men and cultured Christian young women.

The State Industrial Institute stands nearby and here the orphaned guests of the home find easily accessible expert training for a productive livelihood.

So successful has been the work of the Orphanage and so famed have become its Christ-like achievements that it has far outgrown its present bounds. The beautiful home which now represents in all a valuation of $150,000 must be enlarged if the spirit of the church is to find proper expression.

New buildings to house at least 200 more orphans must be built at once; cottages must dot the spacious lawn where groups of twenty-five can live in smaller communities under the chaperonage of a cultured and lovable Christian woman, and where the real home instinct and hearth-love can be engendered and implanted as the basis of a noble Christian citizenship.

Tentative plans have already been made for the additions. It will cost $500,000 so to enlarge the present institution as to care properly for the 200 children who now seek admission.

Louisiana Methodists and their friends will be called upon to finance these improvements.

Every Methodist church will have its teams in the field, starting June 1 and continuing until July 1, when it is hoped the fund will be subscribed. Each community will be thoroughly canvassed. Subscriptions will be asked regardless of the creed of the donor, for in receiving these little ones the orphanage does not draw denominational lines. Business men will be asked to give, for this is a work of uplift for the community and the call will appeal to all men who love humanity and believe in true Americanization.

The preliminaries for the State-wide campaign were started May 1, when Mr. George K. Nickerson, of Kansas City, Mo., arrived at Shreveport and took charge of the work.

Lee Kinnebrew, of Shreveport, has donated a lot at 507 Milam Street in that city, where tents have been pitched and the campaign headquarters established.

Regional headquarters will be maintained in Alexandria, Monroe, New Orleans and other cities.

Mr. Nickerson, who has had a vast and successful experience in campaign work of this nature, will be assisted by a staff of experts including F. W. Browne, Cedar Rapids, Ia., R. P. Nickerson, C. A. Christiansen, C. C. Ditto of Fort Smith, Ark., Mrs. Henry Dickenson of Houston, Tex., T. J. Appleyard, Jr., and F. A. Crippen, of New Orleans. Messrs Appleyard and Crippen will be in charge of the Southern District, which will extend from New Orleans to Lake Charles and as far north as Baton Rouge.

The members of the Board of Directors of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage are: S. D. Pearce, Ruston, president; Rev. Briscoe Carter, Shreveport, secretary; R. O. Randle, Monroe, vice-president; J. H. Mays, Ruston, treasurer; B. F. Roberts, Shreveport; Rev. R. H. Wynn, Ruston; Rev. J. M. Henry, Ruston; Rev. W. W. Drake, Shreveport; T. L. James, Dubach; O. E. Hodge, Ruston; Dr. R. D. Webb, Minden; P. K. Abel, Winnfield; and J. S. Rolfe, Oak Ridge.

Among the members appointed to date on the Campaign Committee are S. B. Ritchie, T. L. James, Rev. Briscoe Carter, R. D. Webb, Rev. Geo. S. Sexton, Shreveport; and R. W. Vaughan, Ruston.

"I am confident," said Rev. Briscoe Carter, of Shreveport, secretary of the Board, "that Louisiana will gladly and willingly give its full amount to the extension of this magnificent work. The Ruston Orphanage will then be the largest Protestant institution of its kind in the State and will be able to care for 350 of the homeless little ones, educating them and preparing them to meet the battle of life when they reach their majority and sending some at an earlier age into cultured Christian homes.

"The Ruston Orphanage is dependent entirely upon the church for its support. Here is a cry that will surely not go unheeded, for the call of the little ones comes to our ears mingled with the voice of the Master, who through the ages admonishes us to 'Suffer the little children to come unto me.'"

UNIFICATION: BISHOP AINSWORTH'S ANGLE CONCEALS THE FACTS.

By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

A few weeks ago there appeared in the church press an article from the pen of my esteemed colleague, Bishop W. N. Ainsworth, under the title "Another Angle to Unification." I am under the necessity, as Chairman of the Southern Commission, of calling attention to the fact that Bishop Ainsworth's "angle" blinds him to the facts as they are, and leads him to make certain statements which are contradicted by the facts.

Bishop Ainsworth writes: "It is perfectly well known within the Commission that many members who voted for its transmission"—the transmission of the Constitution of the Methodist Church, adopted at Louisville—"will oppose its adoption at the General Conference." There were five men who voted against the Louisville paper and who were opposed to sending it up to the General Conference for adoption or rejection. Those five men were Bishop Collins Denny, Bishop W. N. Ainsworth, Rev. Jas. E. Dickey, Judge T. D. Samford, and Judge J. G. McGowan. Later Judge H. H. White's vote was announced as being in the negative, making six men out of the twenty-five commissioners. Nineteen Southern Commissioners voted to send the paper to the General Conference.

Now comes Bishop Ainsworth and says: "It is perfectly well known that many who voted for its transmission, will oppose its adoption at the General Conference." How many out of nineteen does it take to make "many?" Would five be "many?" Well, there are not five. Would four be "many?" Well, there are not four. Would three be "many?" Well, there are not three. Would two be "many?" Well, there are not two. Bishop Ainsworth would hardly call one "many" out of nineteen. Well, just to keep the record straight, not one, single, lonesome, solitary individual who voted to transmit the paper has announced his intention of voting against the adoption of the plan agreed upon at Louisville. And I go further than that: I have written to all the nineteen. I have replies from eighteen. I feel sure that the one who has not yet replied has not received my letter at this writing, as he is a busy man and often out of the city where he lives. But we all know where to find him. He stands with the forward-looking men of the church. One honored friend writes me that he doubts the wisdom of taking a poll of the Commission at this time. However, few men are now doing as much as he to bring unification to pass. The seventeen others who voted to transmit the report, all write me that if they are members of the General Conference, they will vote for its adoption. I have the following letter from one of the Commissioners:

"I shall not only vote for the proposed Constitution of the Methodist Church, but do everything I can to secure its adoption by the church. I am not supporting it because it is the best that can be secured under the circumstances, but because the Constitution is one of the best balanced documents that could have been worked out. The compromises themselves are elements of strength in the document. It is exeremely fortunate that neither church had entirely its own way in framing the Constitution."

In the light of letters received from the men who voted to give the General Conference a chance to say whether or not we should have unification on the plan proposed, I now inform the church that the above quoted letter expresses the convictions of a good majority of the entire Commission of twenty-five.

FROM THE CUT-OVER LANDS.

By Rev. A. A. Bernard.

This is a unique side of our State. One can ride for hours, occasionally through a strip of woods, but generally through vast sections of cut-over land. The crop of the past centuries is gone and with the going it must have carried the fertility of these black-stumped acres. Occasionally you will find a farm. I remember two in these lands, along the graded highway, on a twenty-mile run. But when you get to the town, why, it is all there, centered emphatically on one idea, and about this everything else is built—the sawing up of a log.

You speak about the housing problem; no class of laborers that I have ever known who had the question of a house left to its own choosing, has ever lived in houses half so well built, kept up and furnished, and that at a decent rent. Think about a five-room house with light and water at about $16 per month. I have been from end to end of the State and from side to side and have seen some things, and can say that I do not think twenty per cent of the houses of our people of similar standing are half so good, notwithstanding the fact that they are built upon acres that are owned by the men that live in them.

But coming back to my sawmill towns, and the men who live in them, I can say this one thing, as a suggestive answer to your fourth question in "A Man's Job," in the last Advocate—by the way, who was it that said I didn't read the Advocate?—as a suggestive answer, I can say, that I believe that there is a practical way to get the laboring man to attend the church services as we would like to see him do in order to conversion.

We must acknowledge that it is discouraging to a disinterested party when a lone church worker insists on his attendance at church, and when he does come, for him to realize that he is to occupy a lone pew all alone if the preacher is to be kept from preaching to empty pews. He looks around and sees his solicitor and a few more lonesome-looking ones, and next time he goes to the movies, where he finds the Methodists occupying every seat, with a delegate accredited to them.

In some places I find that this condition does not obtain. I find people going up to each other with a glowing expression and saying, "Did you know that old So-and-So was at church to-day?" And then they felt glad about it. And old So-and-So came back again.

Some said it was the wonderful preacher that did it, immaculate, erudite, eloquent, magnetic. Some say it was the people—that helped some, but it didn't seem to work in the former instance. What is it then?

I would like to venture a question: What is the church? You know, I believe, more and more, that our conception of the church determines the lines of demarcation in all Christianity. Tell me a man's conception of the church and I will tell you if he is a Papist or a Protestant, and what kind of a Protestant he is as to denominationalism.

What is the church? On Sunday morning some of us look around, sometimes, and we wonder where the church is. I have heard people who were members of the church speak of the church as though it were some sort of a separate entity, distant, and apart from its membership, and forget altogether that the church is poor old I, and you, and ours.

Now, what I want to say about getting these laboring men into the church is this: let every man and woman and youth who believes that the church has a mission to all men and wants them to have that mission, let every one of these pledge himself to attend church once at least every Sabbath for six months, and then count the strangers and former disinterested persons who will then be coming, and then ask himself if the effort is worth while. I have two congregations in mind; in one this plan is partially worked. They come, it seems, every time, and when they invite an outsider no one is ashamed or called on to offer an apology in behalf of a dead outfit. In the other congregation, there are several persons after God's own heart, but there is no faith on the part of the rest of the membership, for to them attendance at worship is only a secondary consideration. Not even Jesus could do anything with a crowd like that.

Let me give you an illustration: I once heard a girl ask another whether she had a good time at a certain dance, and the answer was, "No." I was astonished to think that it was possible for a girl not to have a good time at a dance. So I listened and found out the reason. The questioner asked her whether she had danced; the response was: "Yes;" but John, Pete, Jim, and Susie, Clara and Florence were not there." There was no crowd, you see, and the thing fell flat.

Gracious alive, man what number of dances the church might break up by simply being absent! And on the other hand, incidentally, what number of churches it might empower by simply being present every Sunday.

Longville, La.

INTERESTING PARISHIONERS.

I. T. Inerant.

We called him Uncle B. He lived next door to the parsonage in the little conotry town and his business was—mostly getting drunk—but he sold groceries to pay expenses. When I met him he was well beyond the sixtieth mile-post, his sun was westering, the shadows lengthening in his life.

He was quite a character in the village. Anecdotes had piled up round his past, many of which were ludicrous to the point of the ridiculous. He was, and had ever been, entirely impervious to fear. No one ever saw him the least bit shaken at the approach of real or imaginary danger, and though he was deputy sheriff in his county through the death-dealing days of the Reconstruction, and during the time when carpet-bag rule was brought to an end, he faced with lion-like courage every task assigned him, undertaking as a matter of course the most dangerous expeditions after criminals, and seldom failing to bring in his man.

On one occasion he went after a negro desperado who had eluded a posse and taken a stand in a woodland. Uncle B. entered the woods as nonchalantly as if he were picking blackberries, approached without a tremor the tree behind which the negro was hiding and with the negro shooting at him as fast as he could load his gun, walked calmly up, shoved his pistol against him and filled him full of lead. Uncle B. came off without a scratch. Another time he was sent after a lawbreaker who had succeeded in reaching a swamp and, so it was reported, made himself comfortable in an old gum stump which was inaccessible. Failing to capture his man, it was necessary to make a report to the authorities. Now our Uncle was not a scholar, but from time to time he had noticed that law is couched in Latin terms. He knew no Latin, but figured that the dignity of his position carried with it the responsibility of at least some sort of "turrin" phrase. After a long executive session with himself, he finally got together the following report relating to the position of the negro in the swamp and his failure to "bring home the bacon." It read thus: "In syampum, up stumpo, non cum-at-i-bus." On still another occasion he submitted the report that he had summoned all witnesses on his list "except," said he, "that feller et al, an' if there's any sich man livin' in these parts, I cain't find him."

Uncle B. had grave trouble keeping in the "straight and narrow." There were times when the cup that cheers held out to him irresistible inducements. In fact at various seasons his pastor was brought to feel that when the temptation to imbibe was about to present itself our Uncle would willingly say, "Get thee behind me, Satan—AND PUSH." One day his pastor met him when Uncle B. had been hitting it up a little too lively to be able to keep his equilibrium. He was hanging rather uncertainly to a friendly lamppost and making vain but strenuous efforts to plant his feet firmly upon the duckboard sidewalk. "Parson," said he, "hold thet thing till I git on it."

He went to church services, did Uncle B, but it seemed that he was always behind with his sleep. No matter who was preaching, his slumber was undisturbed. A protracted meeting appealed to him. When his time came to testify on would rise more or less shakily to his feet and freely acknowledge his infirmities of the flesh. He would on occasions of this kind declare his intention to walk a straighter line, but Satan seemed always to know just how to undo such promises.

One day in the long ago an aristocrat of the old school riled Uncle B. by intimating that he was not up to the standard of a Southern gentleman, whereupon our Uncle, following what was with him a long-established custom, immediately "cussed" the aristocrat with all the varied eloquence of his amazing vocabulary. He was forthwith challenged to a duel and given the choice of weapons. Without a moment's hesitation he named the weapons and the conditions of their use, double-barrelled shotguns loaded with slugs and fired at a distance of ten feet. The aristocrat turned pale when he heard the terms, but there was nothing to do save fight. They were to meet at sunrise the next day forty miles away from our village on a cottonwood-covered island in the midst of the mighty Mississippi. Uncle B. was on hand with his weapons loaded and "blood in his eye." The aristocrat sent "regrets" in the form of an apology.

As I gazed into the glowing coals to-night, and thought flashes on the screen of memory pictures of the incidents of our association, I am wondering if the many ministers who touched his life might not with other and greater efforts have turned the soul of Uncle B. toward the Lamb of God. I am wondering if maybe I, too, was remiss in the work I did with him. But "there beside the silent Sea he waits the muffled oar" beyond the pale of any influence I may hope to wield. Maybe I failed with him, and when we stand in the Holy Presence at the last day, what will be the story revealed in the Archives of God?

TWENTY TIMES A DAY.

Twenty times a day, dear,
  Twenty times a day,
Your mother thinks about you,
  At school, or else at play.
She's busy in the kitchen,
Or she busy up the stair;
But like a song her heart within,
  Her love for you is there.

There's just a little thing, dear,
  She wishes you would do,
I'll whisper, 'tis a secret,
  Now mind, I'll tell it you;
Twenty times a day, dear,
  And more, I've heard you say,
"I'm coming in a minute."
  When you should at once obey.

At once, as soldiers instant
  At the motion of command;
At once, as sailors seeing
  The captain's warning hand;
You could make the mother happy
  By minding in that way,
Twenty times a day, dear,
  Twenty times a day.

THE WEATHER FACTORY.

Isabelle waked one morning feeling cross and grumpy. She had been riding through dreamland on a nightmare, and the lively steed had backed into a thistle field and thrown her on the thistles. At least, she looked that way. When she tumbled out of bed she could not manage a simple smile. The corners of her mouth might just as well have been hitched to her shoe-strings.

"It's lovely day!" the family said.

"I don't think so," Isabelle answered. She puckered her eyes and peered up at the cloudless sky. "It wouldn't surprise me n bit to see rain in a little while," she said sulkily.

By noon she was so tired of herself that she crawled off into a corner of the sofa and hid her face in a cusion.

Presently she felt something run lightly along one of her arms. Thinking it was the kitten, she slapped at it and said crossly, "Go away, Midge!"

But the thing, whatever it was, stood still on her chest and began to jump lightly up and down. Isabelle opened her eyes and saw a slim little fairy in a yellow silk dress.

"Well, has it rained?" asked the fairy.

Isabelle was so astonished she could hardly speak. "N-n-no," she stammered after a while.

"You said it would, you know," the fairy continued. "But perhaps that was because you were rainy inside, you see."

"Who are you, please?" faltered Isabelle.

"I am Ray of Sunshine, one member of a large family," her visitor answered. "At this time of day I am very busy, and so I can't stay any longer. But see here: don't you think a visit to the weather factory would do you good?"

"To the what?" asked Isabelle, puzzled beyond words.

"The weather factory," was the answer. "I'm coming for you to-morrow at daybreak and take you there. Good-by!"

With the last word, Isabelle's shining visitor ran lightly down her other arm and disappeared over the edge of the sofa.

Early the next morning the fairy came back, according to promise, and led Isabelle away.

"The weather factory," she explained as they went, "is the place where fairies make the weather. They have just finished making to-day; you must see it before they send it out."

Inside the great building, which seemed to have trees for walls and clouds for a roof, hundreds of fairies were gathered round the thing they had made. The new day looked more like a beautiful shimmering veil than anything else. It was sheer and filmy, and full of lights and spangles. Isabelle did not wonder that the fairies were happy over it.

"It's the loveliest day we ever made!" one of them cried, clapping her hands.

"But yesterday was just as beautiful, you remember," another fairy said.

At that Isabelle felt a little twinge. Was yesterday beautiful? It had not seemed so to her. But the fairies must know, of course, since they made it.

The head fairy signed a faint, soft sigh as she looked at the new day. "I wonder how this day will come back to us?" she mused aloud. "Sometimes we send out perfect ones, and by night they're all torn and spotted with the mean things that people say and do."

A small fairy dressed in blue and white, whom the others called Cloudlet, spoke up. "Like yesterday," she said. "Don't you remember that great blot in one end of yesterday? My, somebody must have been cross to make such a blot!"

At that the whole crowd of fairies put their hands over their eyes and sighed. All those little sighs together sounded like an April wind in a pine wood.

But suddenly Ray of Sunshine darted a quick look at the rest and said, "Sh-h!" The other fairies peered through their fingers to see what she meant and then clapped their hands over their mouths.

"She is the one that made the blot," Ray of Sunshine whispered. The whisper was very soft, but Isabelle heard it. She bowed her head.

Just at that moment a clock chimed five, and instantly the fairies were alert. They took up the piece of fabric they had made and carried it to a broad window. Two of the largest and strongest fairies climbed up and pushed it out over the sill. They held to the two corners for a moment or two, while the long veil-like thing fluttered in the wind; then they let go, and it went floating away into space. Isabelle watched it out of sight—such a beautiful thing, shot through with threads of gold and embroidered with silver and pears.

The head fairy closed the window with a click and blew sharply on a reed. It was dawn, and that is closing time in the weather factory. The fairies trooped out, singing and skipping. They took their wings from the wing rack, put them on and flew out to other tasks.

Isabelle opened her eyes—she was in her own bed at home.

Scrambling down, she rushed to the window and leaned out. "Oh, what a beautiful day!" she cried.

And the corners of her mouth looked for all the world as if they were hitched to her hair ribbon!—Maria Conde, in The Youth's Companion.

THE DOLL THAT HID.

Constance had lost the little wooden doll that grandmother had brought her from her chest in the attic. They had dressed the doll in a pink gingham dress and sunbonnet, so that she looked prettier than any of the other dolls. Constance loved her very much, and now she was lost.

The little girl wanted to do nothing but look for her, but mother had a headache, and Constance knew that she ought to help as much as she could.

She watered all the house plants, and helped cook and dry the dishes. Then she kept very quiet until the baby had gone to sleep for his morning nap. After that she began to do the downstairs dusting.

Sometimes Constance dusted only the front and the tops of things, but now she went carefully into all the corners. She lifted up the books, and the vases to dust underneath, and she emptied mother's stocking-basket so as to put it in order.

There in the basket, among the balls of cotton, was the little wooden doll. How glad Constance was to see her! And she might not have found her if she had not been dusting so well.—The Sunbeam.

WHAT'S THE USE?

"What's the use of giving just a little to the missionaries?" said Henry. "'What's the use?'" said his mother. "What if every little blade of grass said that? And what if every snowflake said it and stayed up in the sky? And what if every boy and girl thought it of no use to give just a little? But they give it, thousands of them; and putting it all together, they send some one to tell the story of Jesus to those who have never heard it."—Jewels.

Who answers Christ's insistent call
Must give himself, his life, his all,
  Without one backward look.
Who sets his hand unto the plow,
And glances back with anxious brow,
  His calling hath mistook.
Christ claims him wholly for his own—
He must be Christ's, and Christ's alone.

Editorial

THE PROBLEM SOLVED—A THREE-MINUTE TALK.

Preachers may not, as a rule, work themselves to death; but we know very few who are able to do everything that is expected of them in a church that is organized and conducted according to the principles of modern efficiency. And preachers are not shirkers, or slackers, either. Man for man, we do not know of any class in modern society that is more faithful, diligent, and efficient than the preachers.

The trouble lies largely in the fact that the work of the church has grown steadily in volume and complexity, while there has been no addition to the active working force of the congregation. When there was comparatively little to be done except to conduct the stated services of the church, the pastor was supposed to attend to everything; now that the church has become a complex organization, with many departments and many forms of activity, one man is overwhelmed by the demands made upon him.

As this situation has come to be recognized, many suggestions have been made with a view to remedying the difficulty. Among these suggestions, as we see it, none is more likely to solve the problem than the organization of the Methodist Minute Men. Intended originally, perhaps, to assist in carrying through the Centenary Campaign (in which it was marvelously effective), this organization has been made permanent; and it has been so perfected as to make it capable of rendering the very kind of assistance that is so urgently needed by our hard-worked pastors to-day. When it has been set up in any pastoral charge, as it should be in all of them, the preacher has a corps of assistants upon whom he may rely for the performance of many of the duties that insistently demand attention.

As we understand it, the organization is intended not merely to supply speakers for a few minutes on some special occasions, but also to have in readiness at all times a body of enthusiastic, intelligent, consecrated laymen prepared to take hold of any situation that may develop. If all this is not implied in the organization, it could very easily be included, and the problem of relieving the harassed and burdened pastor would be solved. If the problem cannot be solved in this way, some other means will have to be found to bring about this necessary result.

THE EPISCOPAL ASSIGNMENTS.

It was with a feeling of great sorrow that the church learned that Bishop Jno. C. Kilgo's health was so precarious as to make it necessary for him to give up his active work for a season. In spite of great physical suffering, Bishop Kilgo gave diligent attention to the affairs of his episcopal district, meeting the Annual Conferences and performing such other duties as were possible to one in his state of health. Recent reports of his serious illness have brought added sorrow to his friends throughout the church. A multitude of prayers ascend in his behalf, that he may be sustained by Divine grace, and that he may soon be restored to health and strength.

Bishop McMurray may be assured that he will receive a cordial welcome to the Conferences where he is so well known through his great work as Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, and where he is recognized as a vigorous and efficient leader.

CO-OPERATION IN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

We doubt if any Conferences in the connection have more faithful, consecrated, and efficient Conference Sunday School Field Secretaries than have the Louisiana, the Mississippi, and the North Mississippi. It so happens that it is our duty, as well as our pleasure, to read week by week the record of their activities as they busy themselves in the discharge of the duties laid upon them, and we can bear testimony to the fact that they "eat no idle bread." They are chosen men for a great work.

We have no doubt but that these men are receiving a cheerful co-operation from their constituency; we have no thought, therefore, of suggesting that they are working against odds. In view, however, of the supreme importance of the Sunday school work, we take the liberty of exhorting a little in connection therewith.

It has been so thoroughly demonstrated that the Sunday school is the chief source of supply for church membership, that we may take it for granted that the church will grow in numbers in proportion to the success of the Sunday school in enlisting the active interest of the people generally. We are all interested in the growth of the Kingdom of God, and as an indication of that growth we scan earnestly each year the statistics that indicate the number of additions to the church on profession of faith. One of the usual questions in connection with revival meetings is, "How many members were received into the church?" We are constantly studying the situation in all our pastoral charges with the aim in view of getting people to give their lives to God and the church, and campaigns, intensive as well as extensive, are conducted throughout the year for reaching those who have not become identified with the church.

We are in favor of any and all legitimate means that can be used to create and develop interest in religious affairs in any community; but we do not know of anything that will pay larger dividends on the time and labor invested than the Sunday school. Through the work of the organized classes for men and women, and through an efficient departmental organization, a point of contact can be established with every individual in the community, and a definite line of approach opened that can scarcely be found in any other way. It is already true that a very large percentage of the new members of the church come from the Sunday school each year; but nobody believes that the Sunday school has yet reached its maximum of development. It would be hard for any pastor to devote too much time to this department of the church's work.

Since such a large percentage of the membership of the church comes from the Sunday school, we must remember, too, that the quality of that membership is dependent upon the character of the work done in the Sunday school. It is not an unusual thing nowadays to hear the statement that the church itself is greatly in need of a revival—which is probably true—and that our churches are largely filled up with unconverted people—a view that we are not willing to accept. But whatever may be the case, the surest way open to us to make the membership of the church all that it ought to be, is to see to it that those whom we have every reason to expect to receive into the church are given the proper religious training while they are still in the Sunday school. We have nobody to blame but ourselves if we fail to send into the church every year thousands of boys and girls, and men and women, too, who have received the very best instruction the church can offer, through trained religious teachers.

Sunday School Day ought to be observed in practically every church in every pastoral charge in the connection this year, and it ought to be a notable occasion in the community.

AN ILLUSTRATION.

We succeeded a few days ago in buying enough paper to last the Advocate about ten weeks. We were fortunate to be able to get it at all—but the price! Before the newsprint market began to mount to the sky, this quantity of paper would have cost us about $400; for this lot we had to pay $1408. This illustration of the increased cost of doing business will help our subscribers to understand why it became necessary to increase the subscription price of the Advocate from $1.50 to $2 a year. The indications now are that we shall have to pay even more for the next shipment—if we can get it at all.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. R. M. Papasan, of Toccopola, Miss., writes that his work is moving along well.

Rev. T. B. Winstead, our pastor at Carthage, Miss., reports that some progress is being made on his charge.

Dr. Theodore Copeland, of Dallas, Texas, will assist Rev. W. W. Graves in a meeting at Hazlehurst, Miss., beginning on July 11.

We learn from an exchange that the fall meeting of the bishops will be held in Highlands Church, Birmingham, Ala., December 16-20.

Rev. John Tillery Lewis, of Charleston, Miss., will preach the Commencement sermon for the High School at Coldwater, Miss., on May 23.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation from the Senior Class of Whitworth College to be present at the Commencement exercises, May 8-11.

A dispatch from Rev. V. C. Curtis, dated May 10, says: "Rev. I. F. Holland died Thursday morning at Nashville, Tenn. An extended notice will follow."

Rev. A. J. Gearheard, pastor of our church at Bogalusa, La., will preach the Commencement sermon for the High School at Franklinton, La., on May 16.

Rev. R. S. Isbell, an honored superannuate member of the Louisiana Conference, who lives at Columbia, La., is on a visit to his daughter in Texarkana, Ark.

Hon. J. P. Carter, of Hattiesburg, Miss., a distinguished citizen and loyal Methodist, has been a subscriber to the Advocate since 1868. The "Old Guard" is a noble company.

Rev. E. T. McKee, a local preacher at Wisner, La., is rendering service as he has opportunity and is hoping to do still more in the future. He reports a growing Sunday school at Wisner.

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of Cockrum, Miss., writes that Sunday School Day has been observed at Independence, on his charge, and that preparations are under way for its observance at other places. His work is making good progress.

The Baltimore Southern Methodist appeared with only eight pages last week, instead of the usual sixteen. There was no editorial explanation, but we presume it was due to the present difficulty in getting out a paper of any kind.

On account of serious illness, announced to President Cooper by telegram, Bishop Kilgo was unable to preach the Commencement sermon for Whitworth College last Sunday. The editor of the Advocate was pressed into service for the occasion.

Rev. Thos. Cameron, of New Albany, Miss., on the "Honor Roll" of the North Mississippi Conference, has lost the use of his eyes to such an extent that he is unable to read anything; he still keeps in touch with the work of the church, however, by having the Advocate read to him.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Epworth Church, this city, is making a fine record. The membership has increased to about thirty, and its work is being carried forward with renewed zeal and energy. The pastor, Rev. J. E. Selfe, has two catechism classes—Junior and Adult—in which he is instructing fifteen applicants for church membership.

Sunday School Day was fittingly observed at Como, Miss., on Sunday, April 25. The program sent out by the Sunday School Board was followed to the letter, and every pupil, teacher and officer present took part in the exercises. The pastor, Rev. R. P. Neblett, made a fine talk on the importance of the Sunday school. A liberal offering for the extension of Sunday school work was taken.

Our church at Homer, La., where Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., is pastor, observed Sunday School Day on May 2. An offering of $62 was taken, in addition to which $50 was raised to pay the pledge to the Wesley Bible Class Federation. The evangelistic survey has been completed in this church, and the pastor will be assisted in a meeting, beginning on May 30, by Rev. C. S. Kirkpatrick, of Spring Garden Church, Greensboro, N. C.

Rev. A. J. Gearheard, of Bogalusa, La., assisted the pastor, Rev. G. A. Morgan, in a good meeting at Jonesboro, La., last week. The singing was led by Rev. A. L. Harper, of Ringgold, La. An unusual feature of the meeting was the fact that the congregation on Monday evening was larger than that on the preceding Sunday evening, extra chairs being necessary to seat the people. The "hard day" of the meeting was evidently one of the best.

President A. F. Watkins, of Millsaps College, has announced that Bishop W. B. Murrah, President of the Board of Trustees, will preach the Commencement sermon for the college at 11 o'clock, Sunday morning, June 6. The annual sermon before the Christian Associations will be preached on Sunday evening by Dr. U. G. Foote, pastor of Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans. The Commencement exercises will begin at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, June 8, in the College chapel, the address being delivered by Dr. R. H. Bennett, of the Department of Teacher-training, Emory University.

The Alabama Christian Advocate, in its issue of May 6, says, in a frank statement to its readers, that it is losing over $100 a week on account of the present high price of paper. It will undertake to maintain for the present the old subscription price of $1.50, but it calls urgently for an increase in its number of subscribers to at least 30,000, with the hope that this increase will enable it to tide over its financial difficulties. The Alabama probably has already the largest circulation of any of our Conference organs—more than 20,000. We sympathize deeply with Dr. Branscomb in the problem he is facing. All papers are being hard put to it to make ends meet.

Dr. John A. Rice, one of the most distinguished preachers and scholars in our church, was requested two or three years ago by the Macmillan Company to write a book on the Old Testament. He has complied with that request, and The Modern Man's Old Testament is now on the press and will be out this fall. The book embodies the substance of his addresses at preachers' institutes and other assemblies for almost twenty years. Professor J. M. Powis Smith, one of the greatest Old Testament scholars of the present day, has read the book in manuscript and has written the author a letter of congratulation. Dr. Rice is well known in Louisiana and Mississippi, having served as pastor of Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans, and having been a frequent visitor and speaker at the Seashore Divinity School.

INCREASE OF PRICE WILL NOT HURT CIRCULATION.

Dear Brother Carley: I have read with interest your editorial on the raising of the price of the Advocate from $1.50 to $2.00 per year. How there can be any objection to this advance, in the light of recent increase in the prices of all commercial commodities, I cannot see. This step taken by the New Orleans Christian Advocate, in my opinion, will not decrease the circulation of the Advocate. I think it will meet with the general approval of all three patronizing Conferences.

Yours sincerely,

C. A. BATTLE.

COLLEGE OF BISHOPS GRATIFIED WITH RESULTS OF MISSIONARY CENTENARY.

The following is a telegram which we received from Rev. Elmer T. Clark, Nashville, Tenn., dated May 10:

"The College of Bishops, in session at Nashville, adopted unanimously a resolution proposed by Bishop James Cannon in hearty praise of the whole Centenary program. The resolution is as follows:

"'The College of Bishops has learned with great satisfaction of the results which have accrued to the church from the Centenary Movement. The monetary contributions by our people have far exceeded anything in our history, and have not only thrilled and strengthened our own church, but have also inspired and encouraged our sister churches. The amount which has already been paid into the treasury of the Boards of Missions and of Church Extension, after all expenses to date have been paid, has totaled over $5,250,000, which money has made possible the greatest advance in our history in every mission field. Moreover, we rejoice that, following in the wake of this ingathering of monetary gifts, there has been a great spiritual awakening and ingathering of souls. We place on record our gratitude to almighty God for His blessing upon this great Movement, and we trust that great success will attend the plans which are made to conserve all its possible financial and spiritual fruitage.'"

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

Mrs. S. A. McKNEELEY was born near Liberty, Miss., Dec. 23, 1853. On April 8, 1920, in Hammond, La., she closed an active and beautiful Christian life. About forty years ago she changed her place of residence from Mississippi to Jackson, La., where she spent the greater part of her married life. She came to Hammond, La., in 1908, at which place she resided until her death. She was not only a loyal member of the Methodist Church, but a strong, earnest and consistent Christian. She was gentle and beautiful in her nature, but uncompromising as regards the truth and the right. She never conformed to this world or surrendered her convictions in order to win worldly popularity or praise. To her the "friendship of the world was enmity with God." While she loved righteousness and hated iniquity and was absolutely fearless in her advocacy of the truth, she loved everybody, and her fervent prayer was that all might be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth. She was not only a regular attendant of the Sunday morning service of her church but of the Sunday evening and mid-week prayer services as well. She prayed the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous person, and at the last-named service her earnest petitions were an inspiration to her pastor and and a benediction to those present. Her intuitive powers were highly developed. She seemed to have the gift of discernment of spirits mentioned in the Bible. While others were deceived as to the real worth of individuals, I have never known one in whom she was deceived or confidence misplaced. Every one who knew her had the utmost confidence in her piety and esteemed and loved her. "Her children rise up and call her blessed," and all her friends unite in praising her. In her closing hours, she said, "Don't weep for me, children, for as soon as I leave the body I'll go sweeping through the gates into Heaven." Well might she say: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

Her Pastor,
LEON I. McCAIN.

On Wednesday night, April 14, 1920, there died at Rush's Sanitarium, in Meridian, Miss., Mrs. EULA LEE EDGAR PUCKETT. She was born on March 20, 1894, in the village of Cushtusha, Miss., the daughter of Joseph E. Edgar and Mrs. Matilda Mars Edgar. When a child her father and mother moved to Newton, Miss., where most of her girlhood was spent. Besides the public schools attended in her childhood, she spent two years in Meridian attending the Moffatt-McLaurin Institute and Mrs. Hart's School of Music. Early in her life she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which she was a consistent member at her death. On December 23, 1915, she was married to Mr. W. T. Puckett, who made their home at Kosciusko, Miss., until she was stricken with illness about one year ago. During this last year she has been a patient sufferer, making a brave battle for life, dying a victorious death, falling asleep like a child, on April 14. She leaves to mourn her loss her mother, Mrs. Edgar, her sisters, Mrs. May Houston, of Meridian, Mrs. M. L. James, of Texas, Mrs. Fred Partin, of Meridian, and Mrs. Lee Thornton, of Union, also her brothers, Evan and Paul Edgar, of Union. Her life was comparatively short, but in these swift-fleeting years she exhibited a character so true and a disposition so sweet as to win the friendship and love of all with whom she came in contact, so that when she is gone she is mourned as a loving daughter, a devoted sister, a true wife and a staunch Christian. "None knew her but to love her, no words but to praise." She was buried in the family burying ground at Union, Miss., on the afternoon of April 15, the funeral services being impressively conducted by the Rev. J. M. Smith, pastor of the Methodist Church. Her loved ones, though left in grief, are left with their faces turned heavenward.

Meridian, Miss.

It has never before been my privilege to eulogize a more thorough Christian character than Sister DOROTHY SPIVA, who passed to her heavenly home on December 24, 1919. She was born September 10, 1851. She was twice married—first to H. W. Long, whom she lost by death after a few years of married life; her last husband was Dr. Ernest Spiva, who preceded her to rest some years ago. She leaves three children to mourn their loss—Dr. J. B. Long, of Oakland, Miss., Dr. J. W. Long and Miss Bertie Long, of Sallis, Miss., one daughter, Mrs. L. L. Boyd, having died February 25, 1920. She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, and a sweeter, more lovable Christian character I have never met. She was a devoted mother and a true friend. Her many deeds of love and kindness will never be forgotten by those who love her memory. Do not grieve for her, dear children; she has gone to her reward, and some sweet day we will all meet in that happy home above.

GEORGE DeWITT, Sr., one of Artesia's oldest and most valued citizens, died April 7, at his home, at the age of 66 years. He was of British parentage. He was born in Aukland, New Zealand, but in early manhood emigrated to America, becoming a naturalized citizen of this republic. He was a man of education, culture, and refinement. He had traveled much, visiting South America, China, Australia, Japan, Egypt, Siberia, and continental Europe. On coming to Artesia he married and settled down, becoming one of the foremost citizens of this place. He became a member of the Methodist Church, loved its doctrines and tenets and died, finally, the death of the righteous. For some fourteen years he was a wheelchair invalid. He bore his discomfiture uncomplainingly, cheerfully. When he died, his soul needed no cleansing to fit it for the companionship of the just. He lived up to the counsel given by the wise father to the son,

"This above all, to thine own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

LIFE WAS A MISERY TO HER

Says this Woman Until Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Carrollton, Ky.—"I suffered almost two years with female weakness. I could not walk any distance, ride or take any exercise at all without resting. If I swept the floor or did any kind of work it would bring my sickness on. I was weak and languid, had no energy, and life was a misery to me. I was under the care of a good physician for several months and tried other remedies. I had read of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. After taking twelve bottles I found myself much improved and I took six more. I have never had any more trouble in that respect since. I have done all kinds of work and at present am an attendant at a State Hospital and am feeling fine. I have recommended your Vegetable Compound to dozens of my friends and shall always recommend it."—LILLIAN THARP, 824 S. 6th St., Carrollton, Ky.

SIMON G. PEAK was born in Washington Parish and died in Livingston Parish, Louisiana, on March 8, 1920. He was 75 years and a few days old when he died. He went to the Civil War; though not old enough, volunteered, going through the four years without a wound. He returned to his home near Franklinton, La., to find that he had a sister there so anxious about him that she had gone into his room every morning and prayed for his safe return. When he came back she asked him to go in with her in the morning prayers to give God praise and he was converted there. Fifty years ago he married Miss Martha Collins. To this union were born five boys and one girl, all living to mourn their loss; but not as those who have no hope, for his life was active in church work. He joined Palmetto church as a charter member. At one time the work was discontinued there for a few years, but he got Brother Scarbe to come and revive his church, and often mentioned the association with that former pastor. His house was a preacher's home. May God bless the sorrowing ones. His pastor,

J. S. RUTLEDGE.

Mrs. T. G. VINING (formerly Mrs. Virginia C. Herrington) entered into the restful abode of the righteous on Sunday, April 18, 1920, at the age of 55 years. Mrs. Vining had been a faithful member of the Methodist Church for the past 45 years. She was not only faithful to her church, but just as faithful in believing that it was her duty as a Christian to do the will of her Maker at all times. She possessed many Christian graces, which developed into strong characteristics of a deeply consecrated life. She became the mother of three little girls during her former marriage, all of whom preceded her to the heavenly kingdom. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. D. Nesom, who spoke in words of tenderest sympathy and comfort, of deepest Christian hope and promise. Her remains were laid to rest in the Shyriah graveyard among the other members of her family, of which she was the last member, to await the resurrection of the just.

GROWTH OF METHODISM IN CUBA.

By Rev. S. A. Neblett.

For the second time in the twenty-one years of Methodism in Cuba the historic city of Santiago was the meeting place of the Conference. All of the clerical members except three, who were detained by sickness, and a goodly number of laymen, were on hand. Bishop W. F. McMurry, of St. Louis, presided. Though it was the first time he had presided over the Conference in Cuba, he was thoroughly conversant with the situation and gave close attention to every detail.

The postponement of the Conference from the latter part of January to the week following Easter had given the preachers an opportunity to join in the united Evangelistic Campaign. The survey had been made in most of the pastoral charges and the pastors came to Conference with glowing reports of their work and of the results of the services held during the two previous weeks. While there is a good increase in membership in Cuba, because of the fact that during the entire year the church has been in a state of revival, still the results of the recent campaign will not show in statistics until the next Conference. In Cuba members are not received into the church until they have been on probation for several months.

Reports from pastors and school men indicate that there has been great progress made during the year. There were received on profession of faith 458 members and the net increase was 375, or more than 8 per cent. The total membership in Cuba is now 4,510. The Sunday school enrollment is about 3,500, which is an increase of about 700 over the previous year. The Sunday school furnished 181 of the 458 new members. Reports from the Epworth Leagues were also very encouraging.

It was the best year financially in the history of the Cuba Mission. The churches contributed $30,235 for all causes. This amount does not include large sums raised in Havana and Camaguey for our colleges. The assessments for self-support and missions were over-paid. The Sunday school raised altogether $2,622, of which $858 was for missions. The Cuban congregation of Havana has assumed the support of its pastor for the coming year, and great progress in self-support is expected in other congregations.

The enrollment in our five schools and colleges was 1,050. Of these, 185 are boarding students. It would have been easy to have had 500 boarding students if we had had room for them. Over $57,000 was received for board and tuition.

Our church now has invested in church buildings, parsonages, school property, and equipment, more than a half million dollars, and this investment will be largely increased during the Centenary period.

The Centenary has been a great success in Cuba. The leaders recognize the necessity of placing continual emphasis upon the Centenary objectives, in order that the church in Cuba may enter into a larger life. The Conference very properly gave two sessions for the consideration of these things. They assumed an apportionment of $1,200 for the support of a missionary in Belgium, thus entering into active participation in the foreign mission program of the church. An active campaign will be carried on during the year for 1,000 intercessors, 1,000 tithers, 10 candidates for the ministry, 20 young people called to teach in Christian schools, and 1,000 new members to be added to the church.

As Cuba is now a Mission Annual Conference, the several quadrennial boards outlined definite policies looking toward large progress in self-support, in the development of our Sunday schools and Epworth Leagues, and the extension of our schools and colleges. A wonderful opportunity is before our church, and the forces in Cuba are unanimous in their purpose to increase the efficiency of all of the agencies of the church.

Two years ago it was my privilege to be called away from Cuba to help in the Centenary Campaign in the homeland. I consider myself fortunate to have been Cuba's contribution to the personnel of the Centenary staff, but the time has now come when I feel I can render my best service to the Kingdom by returning to Cuba. The crying need of the Centenary is consecrated and prepared men and women for service in home and foreign fields. I therefore return to Cuba at this time to take charge of the editing and publication of Christian literature, believing it to be God's call for me. In bidding farewell to the home church I earnestly plead with young men and young women to face up on this question of life service. God and the church need hundreds of the best, and I trust that the call will not go unheeded.

GOD IS THE ANSWER.

You cry, "O Lord, solve me this problem!" and the solution does not come. "What! must I walk in darkness?" your poor soul cries out; and then He comes and takes your hand and says, "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." In place of the answer to your prayer comes He to whom you prayed. You have not got the solution of your problem; it still floats in doubt. You have not got the sure prophecy of the future; it is hid behind the waving and trembling veil. You have not got the brother's dear presence for whose life you cried and wrestled; he is walking beside the River of Life in the new light of Heaven. You have not got what you prayed for, but you have got God! You have the source, the foundation, the sun! You have taken hold of the essential meaning and essence of all things for which you prayed, in taking hold of Him to whom you prayed. In His silence you have pressed back to him. * * * Not in the word He speaks, but in the word He is, you have found your reply.—Phillips Brooks.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Sunday, the 2d. was spent on the Oak Ridge charge. We went out to Bovina Saturday, the 1st. and had a very interesting service with the workers of the school. They will attempt better work for the coming year.

We had three interesting services at Oak Ridge and Brother Higginbothaiu received four into the church on profession of faith Sunday night.

There is much work to be done in this charge and Brother and Sister Higginbotham are doing their best. I believe God will give them success.

We visited the consolidated High School while out there. Brother Selby seemed to have things well in hand. I feel that our visit to this charge was profitable.

Let each Sunday school strive to have a representative at its District Institute. The work can only grow through workers. Do your best to make your district 100 per cent.

Pray for the work and the workers.

The District Institute for the Port Gibson District is just closed. One of the fine things about this Institute was that out of 22 charges 21 were represented, and 19 of these were represented by more than one person. I think this a fine showing and one that will encourage us all.

We had a very fine programme and much interest was manifested by those who attended. The following is the list of officers elected for the coming year:

H. H. Crisler, Port Gibson, Miss., Secretary.

Mrs. Z. M. Davis, Vicksburg, Miss., Elementary Superintendent.

Rev. J. A. Wells, Gloster, Teacher Training.

Miss Lillie Hartwell, Port Gibson, Intermediate-Senior W. B. C.

J. G. Parham, Rolling Fork, Miss., Y. P. A., W. B. C.

Mrs. Olive Millsaps, Fayette, Miss., Missions.

Let every Sunday school in this district get in touch with the district officers, and get a spirit of enthusiasm that we may make great gains throughout the coming year.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

It is not too late to make a canvass for new members; to give the teachers the studies in evangelism; and to take a missionary special. First-class schools are doing these things with profit to themselves and for the glory of God.

If you have an idea that you will attend the Training School at Lake Junaluska July 7 to 21, write to Mr. A. L. Dietrich, Lake Junaluska, N. C., for a room. This is more important than you think.

The records at the office in Nashville show that up to March 20, we have 15 teacher-training classes and 102 individual students taking the course. Of this number 96 have done credit work. I am grateful for this record, but we must have at least 500 preachers, teachers, and superintendents enrolled before the close of the year.

Here is an extract from a letter from one of the teachers at Pickens: "We are having the hardest, best time in the teacher-training class. I can't begin to express the benefit we have derived from our study. We are beginning our second book, "The Life of Jesus," by Rall. If there is a book in the course better than this, we certainly have something to anticipate. We are proud of our certificates. It takes courage and determination to stick to it, but I shall never be satisfied until I hold my complete diploma, and I believe the class of seven feels the same way."

The best of reports are coming in from the schools that observed Sunday School Day. The programs seem to please more than usual. Our plans are larger than usual and the Board will need the funds received from this source to help the Efficiency Conference, to finance our Standard Training School and Wesley Bible Class Federation to be held in August. Stand by us, men, and we will give you the help you need in making our Sunday schools effective soul-saving institutions.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Sunday School Day has been held with some of the schools and an offering equal to the askings of the Sunday School Board has been remitted. Brother Pastor and Sunday School Superintendent, you will do your servant, the Sunday School Board, a great favor if you will hold your special service and skillfully manage the offering on that day and make the amount in full. If you do not do more than read a part of "program" and take the offering, it will be educating your school and a financial blessing to the work of Methodist Sunday schools. The Sunday school is the biggest asset in the church and should have the backing of the whole church and not be compelled to do its work cheaply for the lack of finances. Send your offering to C. V. Breithaupt, Alexandria.

The District-wide Institutes will be held as follows:

New Orleans District—New Orleans, Sunday evening, May 30.

Baton Rouge District—Ponchatoula, Monday evening, night, Tuesday morning, May 31, and June 1.

Alexandria District — Oakdale, Wednesday morning and evening, June 2.

Monroe District — West Monroe, Thursday, three sessions, June 3.

Ruston District—Winnfield, Friday, three sessions, June 4.

Lake Charles District—Rayne, Monday, three sessions, June 7.

The program for these meetings will present two or three departments of the school. They will be a school of methods and principles. The work will be most useful to pastors, superintendents and teachers. I do not know a single pastor who knows too much about the Sunday school and can be excused from attending his district meeting on that ground.

The following field force will be present at each meeting: Rev. E. R. Standford, Intermediate-Senior Superintendent for the church, Nashville, Tenn.; Miss Nell Richardson, who was Elementary Superintendent for this Conference, Baton Rouge; Miss Lettie Van Landingham, of Alexandria, who has just been secured to take the office of Elementary Superintendent for Louisiana Conference (Miss Van Landingham will begin work with us at Oakdale); Alonzo Early, Field Secretary, Alexandria, La.

Let every school be represented and come with salient facts and reports of its school, viz.: Give number enrolled in each department, including Cradle Roll and Home Department, and a full list of officers and teachers.

We will elect district officers for next year at this meeting. Elect your delegates next Sunday and send list of same to pastor or superintendent of entertaining church.

The President of the Wesley Bible Class Federation, Judge W. G. Banks, is planning to do some special work with the Bible Classes and to have them assist him in promoting the great work of Teacher Training in the Conference. We are very anxious to have Judge Banks meet with success and ask you to co-operate with him heartily. It is under the Conference Sunday School Board and by direction of the Field Secretary.

Field Secretary.

NOTABLE SUNDAY SCHOOL OCCASION AT BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

Last Sunday was a day long to be remembered in the Methodist Sunday school. It was the twenty-first anniversary of J. M. Wood's entering upon the duties of Superintendent, a position he has ably filled during the entire time. It has been his heart's desire for a long time, and was his special request for this day, that the attendance should reach the 500 mark, and despite the lowering clouds and the downpour of rain 504 were present at the regular session of the school. Many were there for the first time and were edified by visiting the various departments.

It was a felicitous coincidence that this anniversary should occur on the day set apart as Sunday School Day so that the eleven o'clock service was given to the school. A program of responsive readings showing the development of the Sunday school movement and its possibilities was interspersed with appropriate songs by choir and congregation.

The baptism of infants presented a beautiful picture.

The pastor in fitting words gave to Rev. T. W. Adams, under whose pastorate Mr. Wood accepted his position of responsibility, the honor of making the address of the morning. Mr. Adams' remarks were reminiscent and most interesting. He was followed by Rev. W. L. Spinks, who presented to Mr. Wood, for the Wesley Bible class, a handsome gold-headed cane, not because he needed it, but because he was the oldest looking man they had ever seen celebrating his twenty-first birthday.

Mr. Wood's surprise was manifest and he voiced his appreciation in happy terms. He spoke at some length of his joy in the work, his dependence upon faithful helpers, tenderly mentioning some whose example had been a beacon light and who had gone to their reward, among them Dr. Wesley Martin, his predecessor, for thirty-eight years the superintendent of the school, and Miss Fannie Larkin, its organist for many years. He gave due credit also to those who have labored with him for the upbuilding of the institution.

At the time of Mr. Wood's inception into the office the average attendance was about fifty. Sunday it reached 504. The steadily increasing growth has in no small measure been the result of the unflagging interest and zeal of its superintendent, who in the entire twenty-one years has never lost his enthusiasm, nor his steadfast devotion to high Christian ideals in his work and in his life.—Lincoln County Times, April 29.

FROM DUCK HILL, MISS.

We are moving on nicely here on the Duck Hill Circuit. We have some of the salt of the earth to serve. We have a splendid prayer meeting here at Duck Hill, with 50 regular attendants. Brother Gladney was with us last Wednesday night and gave us one of his very best sermons—and those who know Brother Gladney have an idea what a treat we enjoyed. Our revival meeting at Duck Hill will be held this year by Rev. J. A. Wells, of Gloster, Miss., beginning first Sunday night in June. We covet the prayers of the readers and Editor of the Advocate.

ALL WRONG WAS HER LIVER

Before Taking Black-Draught, Missouri Lady Was Troubled With Constipation, Headache and Bad Taste in Mouth.

Grandin, Mo.—Mrs. Susa Brooks, of this place, writes. "Some time ago I was in a bad fix, with stomach and liver trouble. I did not feel good at any time. I was very constipated, and had headaches from this condition, and had a continual hurting in my stomach, and bad taste in the mouth. Could tell my liver was all wrong.

"I had known of Black-Draught, so decided to try it myself. I began with a large dose or doses, gradually getting to smaller doses. It regulated my bowels, relieved me of the hurting in my stomach, cleansed off my liver and made me feel like a new person."

If you get up in the morning feeling as tired as you did when you went to bed—achy, coated tongue, bad taste in mouth, sallow complexion—then your liver has not done its full duty, and your system has absorbed the poisons which your liver should have taken away.

An occasional dose of Thedford's Black-Draught will help this important organ to function properly.

Get a package of Thedford's Black-Draught liver medicine to-day.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Organization Week.

Remember that organization week begins the first Monday in May. It is our desire and shall be our endeavor to put a Missionary Society in every church in the Conference. If all of our women will carefully make their plans and work diligently, this can be done. You will observe from the Council Bulletin that the North Mississippi Conference led all the Conferences of the church last year in new organizations. We must keep up our record. Let us lead the Conferences of our church in putting a Missionary Society in every church in the Conference. We can do it if we will—and we will.

—Bulletin.

Young People's Department.

Our goal for 1920—60 auxiliaries, 1200 members, $900 pledge, and 16 volunteers. Let our goal for Organization Week be forty new auxiliaries, five in each district, and let each new auxiliary take as its slogan, "Organize in May, We're on the Map to Stay."

—Mrs. T. W. Baker.

News Items.

Rev. and Mrs. R. A. Tucker have organized a Young People's Society at Greenwood with twenty members. This auxiliary is composed of young business women of the city.

Mrs. O. T. Parsons, of Water Valley, has organized a Young People's Society with eight members, with prospects of doubling this number at the next meeting.

Mrs. W. A. Stokes and Mrs. T. M. Brownlee of Grenada, have organized an Adult and Junior Society at Tie Plant, with eight and ten members, respectively.

Aberdeen District has two new auxiliaries—Shannon and Nettleton; Corinth has two—Blue Mountain and Baldwyn; Durant has one—Tchula; Greenville has one — Cleveland, with good prospects at Jonestown, Merigold and Shelby; Holly Springs has one—Coffeeville; Winona has two—Greenwood and Tutwiler.—Bulletin.

Corresponding Secretary Makes Gratifying Report.

Dear Co-Workers: You will be glad to know that the report for the first quarter of this year is far better than that of the same time last year. We have more auxiliaries reporting promptly, more members, more new auxiliaries. First quarter for 1919, we reported 7 new auxiliaries; this quarter, we have 19.

Of course, during the second quarter, we look for a wonderful increase in auxiliaries on account of Organization Week, May 2-9. The secretaries are working hard to make the week a success and while local conditions make it very hard to reach the rural churches at this time, no effort is being spared to get in touch with EVERY church in EVERY district. So where it is impossible to effect an organization now, seed will be sown for future harvesting.

We have set a great goal for this year—an Adult Auxiliary in EVERY church in EVERY district. We can attain that goal only if every member will remember that the responsibility for the work rests on EVERY one. If we remember our KEY WORDS—PRAYER, STUDY, WORK, we can do ANYTHING.

Our slogan is "To the LAST woman in the LAST church." As General Pershing said to his soldier boys, "LET'S GET WHERE WE ARE GOING."

BEULAH S. BOSWELL.

COUNCIL BULLETIN.

Gains in Membership.

Every Conference gained in membership. Twenty-three gained 10 per cent and over. The highest per cent of gain was made by the Northwest Conference, 122 per cent. Central Texas gained 39 per cent; New Mexico, 32 per cent; North Mississippi, 30 per cent; South Georgia, 27 per cent; Denver and North Carolina, 24 per cent; Texas, 23 per cent; Upper South Carolina and Baltimore, 22 per cent; East Oklahoma, Little Rock, and Louisiana, 21 per cent; North Alabama, 19 per cent; West Texas, 18 per cent; Tennessee and Holston, 16 per cent; Virginia and Alabama, 15 per cent; Los Angeles, Louisville, and Western North Carolina, 13 per cent; North Arkansas, 10 per cent.

The largest number of new members represented by these gains is as follows: Central Texas, 1,750; Virginia, 1,400; South Georgia, 1,300; North Carolina, 1,040.

Auxiliary Gains.

The largest number of auxiliaries gained is as follows: North Mississippi, 34; North Carolina, 32; Virginia, 29; Alabama, 28; North Alabama, 25; Louisville, 23; South Georgia, 22.

Twenty-one Conferences gained in the number of auxiliaries, eleven of which gained more than 10 per cent, as follows: North Mississippi, 43 per cent; North Carolina, 19 per cent; Alabama, 18 per cent; Little Rock, 17 per cent; North Alabama, 16 per cent; Northwest and West Oklahoma, 14 per cent; Western Virginia, 11 per cent; Louisville, Virginia, and West Texas, 10 per cent; North Arkansas, South Georgia, and Texas, 9 per cent plus.

Our Constituency.

We now have a constituency of 131,880 adult members in 5,147 auxiliaries; 30,846 young people in 1,527 auxiliaries; 53,523 juniors in 2,069 auxiliaries. This makes a total of 216,249 members in 8,743 auxiliaries. Our constituency is now 14.7 per cent, or one-seventh of the women and children of the church.

Financial Increases.

Even more wonderful than membership and auxiliary gains have been those in finances. Every Conference gained 10 per cent more in finances, and all but three gained the 15 per cent set as the goal for the year. Denver, Illinois, Los Angeles, and North Alabama, gained above 50 per cent; Central Texas, East Oklahoma, New Mexico, and South Carolina, 40 to 50 per cent; Alabama, Baltimore, Northwest, Upper South Carolina, and Virginia, 30 to 40 per cent; Florida, Holston, Little Rock, Louisiana, Memphis, Mississippi, North Arkansas, North Georgia, North Mississippi, Pacific, West Oklahoma, West Texas, and Western Virginia, 20 to 30 per cent; Kentucky, Louisville, Missouri, North Carolina, North Texas, South Georgia, Southwest Missouri, St. Louis, Tennessee, Texas, and Western North Carolina, 10 to 20 per cent. This is a wonderful record and is a cause of deep gratitude. — From the Report of the Home Base Secretary.

RESOLUTIONS CONCERNING CENSORSHIP OF MOVING PICTURES.

Be it hereby resolved:

Fully realizing the great need of censorship of moving pictures, we, the New Orleans District Epworth League, do heartily endorse any movement which will bring about said censorship.

Whereas the Louisiana Conference Missionary Society has appointed a committee to interest all organized societies of the State, both religious and civic, in this matter of censorship, we do hereby pledge said committee our support, and stand ready to aid in any way possible, and would ask that our Secretary write the chairman of said committee, Mrs. W. W. Holmes, of Lake Charles, La., pledging to her committee our co-operation.

We would also request that this matter be brought before the State League Conference, so that the young people of the entire State be interested in securing laws which shall make the moving pictures of our State clean and wholesome.

Respectfully submitted,
LAURA EDWARDS.

THE OIL-FIELD PROBLEM.

By Rev. J. C. Price.

I want to say, Mr. Editor, there is a momentous task before us as a church in North Louisiana. I have been anxious to hear the matter come up and be thrashed out in our Conference. No one is more to blame than myself, as I have never sought the opportunity to be heard. This momentous task is the oil-field problem of North Louisiana. I think I have a right to be heard in this matter, having preached in the oil field for the last five years—possibly longer than any other member of the Conference. I believe there is a solution of the problem, but we as a Methodist Church have been working a long way from the goal. I have studied the situation closely and believe I have outlined a plan that will practically reach the situation.

The neglect in the oil fields is deplorable. There are thousands of people following the oil field work; the nature of their work and the places they are compelled to live in completely ostracize them from church, and school, and from largely every influence that should promote a better life.

There is no mission field in Louisiana or the South that needs attention more than the oil field. There are many noble men and women who are giving their lives to this work. The oil is a much-needed product, and many who are taking their restful drives up and down the gravelled pikes, and going back to a palatially furnished home, screened from flies and mosquitoes, do not think of the men who are out in the field, wading in mud and slush, climbing derricks some cold, rainy night, with all beneath them trembling with a threat of blowing out and sending them to that country from which no traveler ever returns. I expect to submit my plan to my presiding elder, who is the proper man to take the initiative in this matter. Mr. Editor, when you have a little time, come up and I will show you something, so when you go back you will have somewhat to write, that will enable you to place this matter before our people.

AT THE FAG END OF THE DAY

A Woman Feels Blue And Unhappy

She is a "bundle of nerves," suffers from headache and backache, all out of sorts, from girlhood to womanhood.

The modern young woman is often "high strung"—emotional—has fainting spells—is frequently blue and dissatisfied with life. She should be helped by a tonic and nervine that has been sold by druggists and proven successful for over half a century.

Read what this woman says: "I can most highly recommend Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription both to young girls and older women, for from my earliest girlhood I remember well my mother's taking 'Favorite Prescription' whenever she became run-down, nervous, or in need of a tonic. She always praised it very highly as a woman's medicine. After I developed into womanhood I had indication of inward trouble, and I would have severe periodic pains. My mother gave me the medicine that had so benefited her (Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription), and it proved to be the right medicine for me, my trouble ceased and I became a strong and healthy woman.

"I would not hesitate to take it again or to give it to any member of my family if we needed a special tonic or woman's medicine."

PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE.

By H. Croom Armour.

Each and every person has all three of these: past, present, and future. Every man sooner or later recalls that which is past and gone. Memories of bygone days are sometimes brought up before us all. We stop and think back over that time when we were mere children playing and romping in a care-free world. No troubles at all did we have when it came to responsibility—we only knew that we were living and having a good time. No thought of to-morrow worried us. So it is in every one's life. There is a time when we are living in a care-free world, free from all that is evil and degrading. Then there comes a time when we are no longer in that stage. We are living a life of responsibilities and cares and troubles. Then it is that we look back on childhood days and recall memories of our care-free days. Ah! but that is a glorious feeling, to think back over that time when we were but children.

Then there comes the future, which no man can fathom. But if we do our part well now, in the present, God will take care of our future. All that is required of us is to make our present count for something. Live right now and you will be taken care of in the future. The future, in fact, is nothing to us; we are living only in the present. Let your present count for something, and the future will do the rest.

BRING YOUR SON UP OR DOWN.

How to Bring Down a Son.

1. Let him have plenty of spending money.
2. Permit him to choose his own companions without restraint or direction.
3. Give him a latchkey and allow him to return home late at night.
4. Make no inquiry as to where and with whom he spends his leisure moments.
5. Give him to understand that manners make a good substitute for morals.
6. Teach him to expect pay for every act of helpfulness to others.
7. Allow him to occupy a seat in church with the boys rather than in a pew with his parents.
8. Permit him to regard the Sunday school unsuitable for a boy on the verge of young manhood.
9. Let him spend Sunday hours, between services, on the street.
10. Be careful never to let him hear your voice in prayer for his salvation and spiritual growth.

How to Bring Up a Son.

1. Make home the brightest and most attractive place on earth.
2. Make him responsible for the performance of a limited number of daily duties.
3. Never punish him in anger.
4. Do not ridicule his conceits, but rather talk frankly on matters in which he is interested.
5. Let him feel free to invite his friends to your home and table.
6. Encourage his confidence by giving ready sympathy and advice.
7. Do not discourage "collection manias;" they help to give information and fix habits of investigation and perseverance.
8. Be careful to impress upon his mind that making character is more important than making money.
9. Live Christ before him all the time, then you will be able to talk Christ to him with power when occasions offer.
10. Be much in prayer for his salvation and spiritual growth.—William D. Laumaster, in Exchange.

For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that

POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effects on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

KAINIT

20 per cent MANURE SALT

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big Cotton Crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three

Standard GERMAN Potash Salts

that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE M. E. CHURCH.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, now in session in Des Moines, Iowa, is a gathering of such interest and importance to world-wide Methodism that we are sure our readers will be interested in knowing something of its proceedings thus far. We shall note some of its proceedings as we have been able to gather them from our exchanges and The Daily Christian Advocate.

The Conference convened at 10 o'clock Saturday morning, May 1, with Bishop Joseph F. Berry, senior bishop, presiding. After extended devotional exercises, followed by roll call, Dr. E. M. Mills, of the Central New York Conference, was elected secretary. Dr. Mills has been a member of every General Conference since 1888 save one, that of 1908. The Conference is composed of 850 delegates, ministers and laymen in equal numbers, representing 135 Annual Conferences. Forty-one of the delegates are women, the largest number that has been elected to any of the five General Conferences to which they have been eligible. Seventy-seven of the delegates are Negroes, two from Liberia, the others from the United States. One of them, Dr. W. H. Brooks, of New York City, was elected by a white Conference—the first time such a thing has occurred in the history of the church.

The roll call showed that five bishops have passed away during the quadrennium: Bishop William P. Eveland, Bishop Franklin Hamilton, Bishop James W. Bashford, Bishop Alexander P. Camphor, Bishop Matthew S. Hughes. Suitable action was taken to commemorate their virtues.

On the opening day, a resolution was introduced by W. H. Anderson, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of New York State, calling upon the two great political parties to incorporate in their platforms a plank declaring "not only for obedience to and enforcement of the law, but also recognizing that prohibition is now the settled policy of this nation through the placing of it in the fundamental law of the land, and specifically declaring against any weakening of the Federal enforcement act which would legalize the sale of beer or wine for beverage purposes." This resolution was adopted by a rising vote.

A resolution was also introduced on the opening day, and later adopted, providing for a special committee to investigate the overhead expenses of the church, its report to include the number of employees, the salaries paid, and the other expenses of the administrative boards. It was distinctly understood that the resolution implied no distrust of the financial administration of the boards.

On Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, the Episcopal Address was read by Bishop W. F. McDowell. The subject of the Address was, "What Is Our Chief Business At The Present Conference." It was the longest and, in the opinion of those whose expressions we have seen concerning it, the ablest address ever delivered on such an occasion. It takes up eleven pages of The Daily Advocate and is, of course, too long for reproduction; we give extracts, however, from what it says concerning the race question and concerning unification. After laying down two negatives, first, that the world is not a white man's world, and, second, that the church of Jesus Christ is not a white man's church, the Address says, in part: "We may not make a formal economic or geographical world-program concerning races and their relations, but we must reaffirm the principles and standards to which any program should conform. And this must be more than a testimony, however clear. The life of the church must harmonize with the message and witness of the church, so that the grace of a right relation may flow through it into the world. We must have the courage of Christ clear through the race problem. We cannot hold the race problem at arm's length and also hold the races to the heart of Christ. His courage toward races carried him the whole length of the way of suffering and sacrifice. We cannot sit by the fire admiring his life and still be his followers. We must follow him bravely along any way that he goes, even to Calvary. We cannot reach a Christian solution by a partially Christian logic or process. * * * The Methodist Episcopal Church must this month think straight about races clear around the world. Talk of 'lesser breeds,' inferior castes, even of 'white man's burdens,' is not for us to-day. We must not shut any door of hope in any face of any color. * * * We have repudiated election as applied to individuals and largely retained it as applied to races. But our church must cry out this day in Christ's name that in Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek, barbarian, Scythian, bond or free; that no men are at the mercy of their environment or their heredity. * * * The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. This is our gospel. We will not lose heart in it. Blood is thicker than water, and the human family is of one blood. We will labor everywhere to make a unity of spirit in the races of the whole world."

From the discussion of church union, we take the following extracts: "The problem of union is far deeper and more significant than simply fusing two or more denominations, and much deeper than any plan of organization. Because it goes so deep, it cannot rest on a shallow or small motive, or be secured by resolution. The motive for union must be big enough to carry the movement, big enough to last on all lands, in all years. Getting together simply to save a few dollars or to prevent some overlapping is not an end worth while. The real motive for union is the winning of the world to Christ. Such union cannot be secured by letting down essential standards, by reducing churches to their lowest terms, or by fatal compromises of truth and principles.

"Union is not desirable unless it is right. For the union of like-minded bodies that are one in heart and spirit, any person might heartily labor. On the other hand, the prevention of a formal union between bodies that are not one in heart and spirit would be a worthy endeavor. Because of its tremendous importance, the union of any churches must be on the right basis. The goal is so desirable that we must not be tuned aside into a false path or give up our effort to find a true one. * * * We must ask of all movements for union or federation four questions and determine our attitude to them by the answer they make: 1. Does the movement make for a real brotherhood of Christian people? 2. Does the movement make for the real unity of all sections, races, nations, and classes within Christ's church? 3. Does the movement make for unity of life, unity of sacrificial, atoning purpose toward men, unity in the holiness and passion of the church like the unity between Christ and the Father? 4. Does the movement make for evangelistic efficiency and the triumph of the Cross among all peoples, all classes, all races, and on all continents? By its answer to these searching questions, the movement must be tested both in its general and its particular features.

"For the church of Christ is not a racial church. The church of Christ is not a national, sectional, or class church. Plans of union that sectionalize, that racialize the church are not plans for Christian union. * * * 'Possibly our present practice is the best we can do. Possibly we can expect nothing else. Maybe this is good enough. Maybe we can look for no better co-operation than we now have. Maybe the basis of unity and co-operation has not yet appeared. We do not so believe. We go slowly, all too slowly, toward it, but some day the followers of Christ must surely be one in the three-fold passion: 1. A common, co-operative, active, united, passionate opposition to the evil of the world. 2. A common, co-operative, active, united, passionate consecration to the redemption and welfare of the world. 3. A common, passionate, united devotion and obedience to Jesus Christ, the Redeemer and Lord of the world.'

"Therefore, in answer to our new historic question, we ask you to declare in clear and ringing tones that the Methodist Episcopal Church will work together with any church that works with and for Jesus Christ; that we will worship together with any church that worships him and makes him Lord and Master of its life; that we will keep step with any church that marches toward the goal of his desire; that we will live together with any church anywhere, of any color or class, that lives with him, lives for him, and lives like him; that we count our church dear unto us only for the sake of him and his Kingdom, and are willing to lose our life that he may find his in the world. If in the long pull together, the world lift through the years, we find our own dear church melting and merging with others into one church of Christ, we shall cry out joyfully: 'It must Increase.' * * * If the true plan has not yet been found, let us not weaken or falter in our effort to find it. It is not easy to change old relations or to reverse historic movements. Nevertheless we must look forward as well as backward. The church is a living institution whose future is precious and vital to Christ and the world. It is ours to make it worthy of him and useful to him in his total work for the world."

When the Commission on Unification presented its report to the Conference, it was referred, after considerable discussion as to the advisability of considering it in the General Conference as a body, to a special committee consisting of five bishops to be appointed by the Board of Bishops, four representatives—two ministers and two laymen—from each episcopal area in the United States, to be selected by the delegates from the respective areas, and a like number respectively from eastern Asia, Southern Asia, Europe, and Latin-America, and two from Africa. The bishops appointed on the committee are: Bishops Cranston, Hamilton, McDowell, Leete, Cooke.

By action of the Conference, it was decided that the time had come for the election of colored general superintendents, and the election of two was ordered, their election to be on a separate ballot.

Other important actions will probably have been taken by the time this issue of the Advocate is in the hands of our readers, but we go to press too early to make mention of them.

GOD IS A SUN AND SHIELD

By Miss Eddie Bentley.

The clouds of deep sorrow encompassed my soul.
Oh, dear one gone!—
This earthly house a shell,
From whence the chrysalis of love and light hath fled.
Dark was the day, as tho' night's sable curtain
Conspiredst to make my falt'ring steps uncertain
Where next to tread.

In my distress, I cried unto the Lord,
Desolate—my faith took hold upon my God.
Then, thru' the clouds, the Sun of His dear favor
Shone o'er my soul, and bro't me peace—sweet peace.

The woes of stern battle confronted my life,
Oh, my Home-land!—
This foreign soil, a grave
From whence the chivalrous of days gone by ne'er rise.
Gore was the field, and on the sod at Flanders
Comrades lay still—my heart filled with dread wonders—
What next would be?

In this lone hour, I knelt on the cold sod;
Desolate, my faith took hold upon my God.
Then, o'er my breast, the Shield of His dear Presence.
Bro't Hope to me, and Life, and Peace, sweet Peace.

THE CENTENARY MAKING GOOD IN THE ORIENT.

By Bishop Walter R. Lambuth.

The churches in Asia have caught the spirit of the Centenary Movement. These churches are steadily holding forth the gospel of life through the persuasive power of love. They are ready to share with every man the truth and joy of salvation. Great achievements always demand their price, but our Christian men and women in the Orient are willing to pay the price. They feel that they owe the gospel a life, and stand ready to meet the obligation.

Japan.

We have planned to intrench our forces in such cities as Kyoto, the ancient capitol and stronghold of Buddism; in Osaka, the Manchester of Japan and second city in the empire; and in Beppu, a popular resort on the island of Kiushu to which people flock from every section of the country. In each of these places a large and well equipped plant is contemplated. Our women propose a great Central Hall for institutional work in Osaka, and in order to enter the fields and to strengthen the church as a whole, we will transfer to this city the Kindergarten Training School from Hiroshima, and the Lambuth Training School for Christian workers.

Our central church at Kobe will be replaced by a commodious edifice. At the western entrance we propose to build a church in Shimonoseki which will command that populous section and the outlet to China and Korea.

Our educational work expands under this far-reaching program by a new building for Palmore Institute in Kobe, which enrolls over 1,000 students; by the development of the Hiroshima Girls' School into a college, and the Kwansei Gakuin into a University. Never was there a greater opportunity for moulding the Christian leadership of a nation. Never was obligation more imperative. To compass the needs and to meet the government requirements we must add $200,000 to the contemplated endowment of the Kwansei and provide $100,000 for the Hiroshima Girls' School. Parallel with all this is the evangelistic campaign which is to be carried forward with vigor in every district and in every charge.

Korea.

The crisis in the life of the Korean people seems to have been accepted as a challenge to renewed effort in extending the Kingdom of God. Although there is an urgent demand for adding to our equipment in buildings for congregations, schools and hospitals, the evangelistic campaign has the right of way in Korea.

We are strengthening our city churches in Seoul, Songdo, and Choonchum; our Union Methodist Seminary in the capitol; planning for an enlarged hospital plant in the last-named place, and for a union hospital plant in Wonsan, the most important port on the coast; the opening of a new mission station at Chulwon, halfway between Seoul and Wonsan; the better equipment of the institution for girls and women, including Holston Institute, Songdo, Lucy Cunninggim Industrial School, Wonsan, and Carolina Institute, Seoul; and in addition to these the establishment by our women of a Central Institutional plant in the capitol, which, in co-operation with other churches, is intended to reach the young women in the government schools of the city and hundreds who are constantly drifting in from the country.

China.

China is waking to a national consciousness. She is suffering the birth-pangs of a new life, and must have help in the supreme hour of need. Mr. Eddy is credited with saying, "Never was there a time when things looked so dark politically or so bright religiously." I cannot but consider the Centenary in the light of Providence at such a juncture. Our mission at this moment is to bring about an awakened spiritual consciousness.

Our Centenary secretaries are Brother Li Dzong-doen, secretary in chief, a trusted leader of large experience, Brother John C. Hawk, Miss Mary Cullen White, and Mrs. Tsiang. An office has been opened in Shanghai, and a program of large proportions outlined, including church-building, school equipment, evangelistic meetings, stewardship of life, tithing, self-support, preparation and circulation of literature, extension of Sunday school and Epworth League work, and the training of Minute Men and women who will give their time to the campaign.

In Shanghai we have fallen behind in the provision for evangelistic work. Our Centenary plans include the building of three great churches, Allen Memorial, Moore Memorial, and Trinity.

The financing of the old McTyeire property in Shanghai will give us the finest evangelistic center, in connection with Moore Memorial, to be found in all the Far East. Shanghai is the most important port in all the Orient, not excepting Hongkong and Calcutta. There are literally thousands of capable young men pouring annually into the city, who become bankrupt in money and morals. On the other hand, lines of influence for good and evil radiate in every direction as far as Tibet, Eastern Turkestan, Mongolia, Manchuria and Siberia. A mail service by courier extends nearly 2,500 miles up to and upon the very roof of Asia. American sheetings and Standard oil reach the utmost confines of the republic. If so, why not the gospel? The American Tobacco Company has for its motto, "A cigarette in the mouth of every man, woman and child in China." If so, why not the Centenary have for its watch-word, "The Gospel in every Chinese home, and Christ in every heart?"

Then there are the Susan B. Wilson and Hayes-Wilkes Schools in Sungkiang, the Laura Haygood Normal and Davidson School in Soochow, and the Virginia High School in Huchow—the last enjoying the distinction of every student's being a Christian except one. All these and the Mary Black Hospital, which has been moved to Shanghai, are to be enlarged and equipped under the Centenary for more efficient service. The Soochow University must be reinforced by a new science building and additions to its faculty. Plans have been drawn for the rebuilding of the Soochow Hospital on modern lines and a larger scale. Hospitals must likewise be built in the important cities of Changchow and Huchow.

The Language School in Soochow is a new departure, but vital for the new missionaries of our own and other missions; and the Comparative School in Shanghai has attracted the attention of the legal statesmanship.

One might add that the most important matter in all this statement is the necessity of deepening the spiritual life of the missionary, Chinese preacher, Bible woman, and church member. With this must go the pressing of the claims of the ministry upon our students, and of dedication of young women as well as young men to life service. All of the missionaries and native workers are placing great stress upon this feature of the Centenary.

SOUTH AMERICA: THE UNDEVELOPED CONTINENT.

By Rev. A. C. Millar, D. D.

IV.

The Spanish Colonies and Independence.

During the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries, in spite of bad government, the South American colonies made some growth and progress. Men of English blood, who have always been quick to resent and resist every form of tyranny, would not long have endured Spanish misrule. The colonies were not developed for their own good, but were constantly exploited for the benefit of Spain.

The colonist was supposed to be entitled to the same rights and privileges as the Spanish citizen, but this was often mere theory. The form of government was despotic, and administered by greedy and inefficient officials responsible only to the oversea authorities, and it was usually oppressive. The hated Inquisition was established, and, as its revenue was derived from confiscations, cruelty and injustice were common. The economic policy was unreasonable and repressive. Monopolies were granted, offices sold, and heavy taxes collected in such a manner that most of the commercial transactions were tainted with fraud. There was jealousy between the Spanish and native officials, and even the native-born Spaniards were seldom allowed to hold positions of importance. Up to 1910 there had been 160 viceroys and 588 captains-general and governors and presidencies, and of these only eighteen had been native colonists.

In 1780 insurrections were brewing, and the next year 15,000 armed men attacked Bogota, shouting, "Long live the King, but death to bad governors." As the English colonies were in revolt, Spain was apprehensive, and sought to prevent liberal ideas from reaching her own colonies. However, the success of the revolution in North America encouraged the South Americans, and even many of the priests organized secret societies and gave their approval to the revolutionary program. Then, too, there had been protracted commercial competition between Spain and England and the Spanish had permitted the Dutch, French, and English to occupy many of the small islands which were used as centers of propaganda. During the Napoleonic wars Spain and England were enemies, and England captured many Spanish ships and possessions. Certain British attacks in South America occurred, and the colonists were left to take care of themselves, and thus acquired experience and self-confidence. When Napoleon dominated Spain, the Latin-Americans refused to recognize his authority and united with the English to resist. Thus independence from the French usurpation was first secured, and with the taste of self-government the colonists were not long in freeing themselves from the almost helpless government of Spain. To be sure, the revolutions were not bloodless, as there were royalists in the colonies, but various dauntless leaders, such as Miranda, Bolivar, and San Martin, organized in first one and then another of the States, and, after different but similar movements, succeeded in establisbing autonomous governments. Peru, the center of Spanish power, alone gave allegiance to the king, and finally revolution sueceeded even there, when, in Jauuary, 1826, Callao, the last Spanish stronghohl, surrendered.

Brazil, under Portuguese rule, had a different history. In 1807, when Napoleon attacked Portugal, tbe royal family took refuge in Brazil and set up their court. Thus Brazil became a monarchy, the only one that ever flourished in America, aml under a fairly progressive policy prospered. Later, when King John returned to Portugal, his son, Dom Pedro, became regent, and the Brazillans, fearing loss of prestige, sought and obtalned tieir independence, and on October 12, 1822, Dom Pedro was declared constitutional emperor, and In 1825 Portugal reluctantly acknowledged Brazil's independence.

Among the notable incidents of the revolutionary period was the participation of Bolivar and kindred sprits in the movements In several different States. General Bolivar, one of the most picturesque characters of the century, assisted In the liberation of Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia, and then devoteil his remaining years to an effort to unite these States Into a great federal republic. The greatest of their liberators, Bolivar, holds among South Americans the position of Washington in his own country, although, because of hls ambitions and desire for power, he is more like Napoleon. The people almost worshiped him, and he was always able to attract to himself capable subordinates. While he was cruel and sensual, he was also generous and brave. Wbile he was an ardent democrat, yet as an opportunist he was willing to use monarchy to secure democracy. At the close of his life he declared: "I blush to admit it, but Independence is the only benefit we have achieved, and that has been at the cost of all others. Our constitutions are books, our laws papers, our elections combats, and life itself a torment. We shall arrive at such a state that no foreign nation will condescend to conquer us, and we shall be governed by petty tyrants." How unfortunate that his dream of a great federal republic, composed of Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia, was not realized! Is such a consummation yet possible?

THE FUNDAMENTAL, AND DRIVES.

By Rev. J. Tillery Lowis

The fundamental of life is God. Jesus is Immanuel. Immanuel is God dwelling with us. God dwells within the hearts of Christians. Jesus is the only power, source or ageney by which it is made possible that God dwell in the heart of man. God is the fundamental of all life. Jesus is the fundamental of all earthly spiritual life that has its origin in God. Nothing is capable of saving an individual life, a nation or a world, save Jesus Christ. What a man does, says or thinks, of itself, can not save him. "By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God."

You will pardon me, kind readers, but I am constrained to make a protest against the drift of the times. The drift of the day is away from Jesus Christ. I mean by the above that the drift of the times is away from a crucified and risen Lord. The drift of the times is toward setting up a humanitarian church, with the Christ of Gethsemane, the Cross and the Resurrection, left out. This is a day when many are teaching that mankind is not by nature a sinner and therefore lost, but he is just wrong in his conceptions, therefore all you have to do is "get him right in thought" and he is a saved man. The Bible, however, teaches that man must be regenerated before he can even commune with God. Either the Bible is the revealed Word of God, or else it is but a human fabrication. If it be the Word of God, then the whole church must needs repent and get back to the preaching of the fundamental. I believe that the Bible is the revealed Word of God. I believe that in it we find unfolded the "faith once for all delivered to the saints." I believe that the foundational teaching of "the Faith" is that Christ must be the master of our lives and help us "do the will of God" that we may bring forth the fruit of the Spirit. The prize fruit of the Spirit is Love. Love is meek, gentle, kind, forbearing, without envy, malice and hate, and produces self-control in that life where Jesus abides.

Great issues are now before our church for settlement. What we do is going either to advance or retard the coming of the kingdom of Jesus Christ upon earth. What we do will not so much matter as the manner in which we do it. The manner in which we do the things before us will prove by what spirit we are controlled. "Try the spirits to see whether or not they are of God." Let no man, or set of men be so deceived by Satan as to think that either himself, they, or all the world can hinder God in the execution of His plan for this old world. Personally, I am not at all concerned about Unification, the Interchurch World Movement or any other church or State issue that is before us for decision, except as the settling of these issues may retard or advance Christ's kingdom on earth. I believe that there are thousands of other members of our church who are likewise minded, relative to these issues. I also know that we have politicians in church and State who are thinking only of pie for themselves and their henchmen. There has never been a time when the church and the State have not been cursed with self-seekers who are in places of authority. The spirit by which the politician is controlled is the spirit that teaches that "the end justifies the means." We can expect nothing but that there will be politicians on both sides of the great issues that are now before us. Those of us who are interested, alone, in the advancement of Christ's kingdom need expect but little consideration from the politician.

Another thought, right here: all of those who are conscientiously working and praying for the advancement of Christ's kingdom will not be on the same side of these great issues. We have not all the same viewpoint and the same amount of information; then some, are just naturally clearer thinkers than others. Let a man be fully persuaded in his own mind, relative to the course he pursues. By all means, let us pray often and long in these days. Then let's refrain from expressing any thought by which another's motives are impugned. When you and I presume to attribute an ulterior motive to the doings of our fellow-men, we are judging our fellow-men. Christ says: "Judge not, that ye be not judged, for with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged."

Personally, it is my judgment that the coming of the kingdom of Jesus Christ will not be hastened either by Unification or the success of the proposed Interchurch World Movement. My knowledge of human nature and of the history of church and State, leads me to believe that it is unsafe to put too much power in the hands of one man, or one set of men. We are all sinners saved by grace. None of us are yet perfect, nor will any of us be till we shall have been translated into glory. We Methodists both teach and practice the doctrine of "backsliding." The placing of great power in the hands of one man, or one set of men, puts too great temptation before our brethren in the flesh. If we put the temptation before them, then we are parties to their downfall and to the curse that follows their sins. What our church needs to do, and what all the churches need to do, is "preach Jesus and Him crucified" as mankind's only and sufficient Savior, get back to the fundamental, which is Christ.

"I am the way, the truth and the life: no man cometh to the Father, but by me."

Drives.

Carley, that editorial you had in a recent issue of the Advocate, concerning Drives, was both wise and timely. You wrote thereon as one who had had experience with drives and know how some good people are beginning to feel about them. Your suggestion was a good one. Yea, it was wise. If we are a connectional church, then let's act like one. One budget and one drive is all that we should have had for these connectional claims. Since we made the mistake of not beginning that way, let's act with wisdom and get on that basis for the other drives that the various Boards are contemplating putting on. If we do not, our people are going to strike. You, friend Carley, made a suggestion; I am sounding a warning. If those who are higher up do not listen to those of us who are on the ground floor, the whole of us are going to perish.

Our in Texas, just recently, there was a millionaire who had erected in his home-town a twenty-story building. His desire was to own the highest sky-scraper in his city. Before his building was completed a company began the erection of a building to be twenty-two stories high. When the rich fool found out he was being outdone, he went to the contractor and told him to make his building twenty-four stories high. The contractor said, "Why, you old fool, the foundation can not stand another story."

Some of our best and most loyal members are now doing all their financial ability will allow. These good people do not want to appear disloyal nor seem stingy in their contributions, for they love both God and our church. To put on drives continually for money will dishearten and discourage these good people. Of course most of our churches have members who are abundantly able, and some of them are willing, to make large contributions every year to benevolent causes. The opportunity should be given these to make the contributions, but we just must be careful about any more general drives for money right now.

I sincerely trust that the Boards will heed the suggestion of ye editor and postpone any further drives till after General Conference, at which time the Boards will get together, make a budget, and have but one more drive for benevolences. • • • If they will do that, I believe they can get the enthusiastic support of both the ministry and the laymen, but if our Boards persist in putting on one drive after another, until we shall have had some five or more drives, I fear the church will, by then, be actually driven to death.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Meridian District Conference met in Central Church, Meridian, Miss., Tuesday night, April 20, with the opening sermon preached by Rev. W. A. Hays, of the Poplar Springs Church.

The conference opened in regular session Wednesday morning with the presiding elder, Rev. G. H. Thompson, in the chair. Owing to the fact that a portion of the district, including a suburb of Meridian, had been visited by a terrible tornado the day before, some of the pastors were forced to be absent a part or all of the time. But despite the atmosphere of anxiety and sadness that enveloped the session, all the members who could, rallied loyally to the presiding elder, and under his leadership, the work of the conference was done carefully and with dispatch.

The reports from the charges were encouraging, showing a marked increase in finances, and an enthusiastic spirit on the part of the pastors for a great evangelistic effort.

Inspiring and helpful sermons were delivered during the conference by Rev. W. A. Hays, Rev. A. F. Watkins, and Rev. J. T. Abney. The Wednesday night service was devoted to Evangelism and the service was led by Rev. H. B. Watkins and Dr. D. C. Hull. The last night, Thursday, the work of the Centenary was presented by W. D. Hawkins through a stereopticon lecture.

Hon. S. M. Graham was elected lay leader of the district, and the following were elected as delegates to the Annual Conference: D. W. Hehlelberg, C. W. Cochran, Mrs. W. J. Ferguson, J. B. Holland, W. D. Hawkins, Miss Madge Stewart, L. P. Brown, Miss Ella Wayne Ormond. Alternates: S. M. Graham, D. C. Hull, J. H. Mauldin, Mrs. J. A. Gully.

Charles Gregg Stokes was licensed to preach.

Rev. C. M. Massey was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial and for deacon's orders. Rev. E. W. Riley was recommended to the Annual Conference for the recognition of deacon's orders.

Shubuta was chosen as the place of meeting for the next session of the conference.

Rev. H. B. Watkins and the good people of Central Church, in spite of the demand made upon them for the relief of the storm sufferers, proved excellent hosts and were very thoughtful in their attentions, the ladies serving dinner at the church each day for the convenience of the members of the conference and the visitors.

The following paper was adopted by a rising vote of the conference:

"The year 1920 will bring to a close the quadrennium of our present presiding elder, the Rev. G. H. Thompson. The quadrennium has been harmonious, prosperous, and progressive, under an efficient leadership, and Brother Thompson has exhibited a brotherliness and courtesy to preachers and laymen alike that have made him welcome to our pulpits and to our homes.

"We desire to express to him our appreciation of his work, and our friendship, failing to recall an incident in his administration that has not been kindly, thoughtful, and efficient.

"Wherever Brother and Sister Thompson shall go, this District Conference shall follow them with its affection and prayers, believing that God will prosper and use and bless them with many useful years."

VICTOR G. CLIFFORD, Secretary.

"A PLEA FOR THE 500,000."

By Rev. V. C. Curtis

This is the title of a pamphlet written against Unification on the plan of the proposed Constitution, by Rev. E. Nash Broyles, of Clarksdale, Mississippi, and is published for free distribution by the Board of Stewards of that large and influential congregation. Brother Broyles has made some personal investigations, and has compiled statistics from the minutes and year-books of both churches of 1918, which were the latest available when the investigations were made.

He does not charge our Northern brethren with designing motives or sinister purposes, but endeavors to show the power that would be vested in that part of the proposed united church. Whether or not they should use this unusual power that would be conferred upon them would be a matter of choice on their part. It is certainly no indication of the lack of confidence in the sincerity and integrity of men to examine carefully the different clauses of this proposed Constitution from every angle and discover what would be probable or possible under its provisions. Here are some of the conclusions which are drawn from this array of statistics:

1. Supposing that the number of delegates to the General Conference from each Regional Conference will be in the same ratio as the membership of each Regional Jurisdiction is to the total membership of the proposed united church, the M. E. Church would lack but two votes of having two-thirds majority in the General Conference.

2. It would lack less than one and one-half per cent of having three-fourths majority of all the members of the Annual Conferences of the united church.

3. It would have two-thirds majority of the College of Bishops. It now has twenty-eight and the M. E. Church South, has fourteen.

4. The provision for a vote by Regional Conferences would be but little protection. Under the terms of the Constitution there would be seven Regional Conferences; of these, four would belong to the M. E. Church, and three to the M. E. Church, South. But, by the consent of the Northern Regional Conferences, as many more Regional Conferences as the majority of the General Conference may desire can be formed without changing the Constitution or waiting till the twelve-year period has elapsed.

5. Since the nominations of the members of the Judicial Council are to be made by two-thirds majority of the College of Bishops, we have no assurance, after the first election, that the Southern Regional Conferences will have another member in that body; but as large a proportion of negroes may hold membership in it as the General Conference desires.

6. The negroes are to be admitted to membership of the General Conference with the same proportionate representation as the white membership. Unless the wholly improbable thing should happen, that the increase of the negro membership should be greater than the increase of the white membership, the same limitation as to numbers is placed upon the whites as is placed upon the negroes.

7. Through the proposed plan of Associate General Conferences, the M. E. Church having already appointed commissions looking to that end, three Associate General Conferences in the United States may be formed which would admit sixty more negroes to membership in the General Conference, making a total of more than one hundred. It may be said these sixty would not be permitted to vote except upon matters pertaining to their jurisdiction; but that expression can be interpreted so as to cover nearly everything.

8. Southern bishops could be retired at will for "unacceptability" over the protest of the Regional Conference which elected them.

Under this plan, the only protection the members of the Southern Church would have would be the charitable disposition of the members of the Northern Church. It is for the Southern Church to say whether or not that would be a safe guarantee. They can only rely upon the promises of the present and the history of the past.

Of course many may hasten to say that these are "wild assertions," "preposterous statements," "false conclusions," etc., but let them show where these figures are in error. The time has passed for mere assertions to be made when there is no warrant for them in facts.

I hope the time will come when we may have Unification in deed and in spirit, but since this is the best plan that could be agreed upon by the very able body of men who composed the Commission, it is very evident that the time for the union which we desire has not come.

Greenville, Miss.

SEASHORE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Seashore District Conference, which held its session in the antique city of Biloxi, Miss., May 5—6, was a pleasant, harmonious occasion.

The city took its start in 1699, when a colony reached there from France under Iberville. To-day it is a felicitous resort for hundreds of people, and the most cosmopolitan city in the Magnolia State.

It is situated on a peninsula, and there is no lack of genial water to sail upon, or swim in.

Many kinds of fish inhabit its waters, and seem to delight in sending electrical thrills along the line, up the arm, and to the very soul of the sportsman. When a big one bites, the furious strife and throb is a challenge. If he wins the battle, as he often does, he may swim away in piscatorial merriment, into the Gulf Stream, and refuses to bite any more until he reaches Charleston, S. C., or the Banks of Newfoundland. He may even swim in the same Gulf Stream to the arctic regions, or to far-away Norway. Should he then sportively play with hook and line, and permit himself to be caught, he might be heard to say in piscatorial dialect: "I'm from the balmy coast of Mississippi."

Even fishermen on the coast of Norway are supplied with wood from the tropics by the Gulf Stream. That mighty river in the midst of the sea, which never fails, whose flow is perpetual, and which carries its warm waters in kindly influence to other parts of the ocean-world, has its fountain not far away from the Mississippi Coast.

Many influences, primordial and beneficient, are inherent to the southerly South, where luscious fruits are grown without protection, where hoar-frosts seldom come, and where the sea and land breezes make life enjoyable even on a hot day.

The business of the conference was expedited by its president, Rev. W. M. Sullivan, who guided its affairs with courtesy, dignity, and efficiency.

The devotional exercises were conducted by the presiding elder, M. W. David, J. L. Sutton, and H. B. Perritt.

Splendid sermons were preached by C. M. Chapman, H. L. Norton, J. L. McClellan, and J. H. Moore.

The usual committees were appointed, and at proper times they read written reports upon the varied interests of the church.

Six visiting brethren, W. E. Thomas, Robert Selby, B. F. Lewis, W. D. Hawkins, H. G. Hawkins, and L. L. Roberts, addressed the conference, and their speeches were heard with profit, and delight.

Geo. L. Carley was elected District Lay Leader.

Ad Interim Committee: M. B. Sharbrough, W. L. Linfield, H. B. Perritt, and W. B. Waldrop.

Delegates to Annual Conference: A. B. Connelly, Geo. L. Carley, C. H. Wood, J. C. Hardy, A. B. Goff, Dr. J. L. Pope, Miss Nola Saucier, R. P. Linfield.

Alternates: T. F. Smith, J. C. Ross, H. B. Rush, Mrs. R. E. Johnson, and C. B. Gates.

The Conference adopted a report from the trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground School, empowering the trustees to make over that property to the three Annual Conferences now involved, or to any one of them, as the three Annual Conferences may decide, all property rights still to inhere in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and said church to be fully protected in its rights. The object is to relate properly the school to the church, with better facilities provided.

Mrs. I. E. Dowdel presented to the conference a very old Bible, owned by her grandfather, Jacob Rickhow, and also his ordination papers signed by Bishop Asbury. The Conference instructed its secretary to turn the documents over to the Historical Society of the Mississippi Conference. One characteristic of the Bible is, every "S" is printed "F". "If thy brother, the fon of thy mother, or thy fon," etc.

Six former pastors of Biloxi were in attendance upon the conference, and they rejoiced to note the growth of Methodism in the city. It has been a gradual advance, and is taking on additional life, and force under the superb pastorate of M. B. Sharbrough.

All the pastors of the district and about forty lay delegates were present. The attendance by the local membership of the church was small.

The reports by pastors showed that they had been at work, and are alive to the interests of the church.

A subscription was taken to supplement the salary of Rev. W. J. O'Bryant, Hub Circuit, an old preacher doing good work, and walking long distances.

No one was licensed to preach. Rev. H. W. Van Hook, President of the Seashore Camp Ground School, addressed the conference, and was pledged co-operation.

The trustees of the district parsonage property were instructed to sell a certain number of feet on the west side of said property for a certain sum, which can be spared without inconvenience, the money from sale to help pay an indebtedness.

Pascagoula was chosen for the next place of meeting.

The people of Biloxi were thanked for hospitable entertainment. This scribe was treated kindly at the Methodist parsonage, and he sampled several times Brother Sharbrough's wonderful garden on land, and out of sea. Rev. H. L. Norton, a choice spirit, was his associate. Norton is so meek and good natured, if he were hit on his nose in midsummer, he would not get mad till Christmas.

The next meeting at Biloxi worthy of remembering and planning for, is the Divinity School, June 22; and the young preacher who fails to attend will miss a locality where the swimmin' is fine!

JNO. D. ELLIS, Secretary.

CAMPAIGN FOR LOUISIANA METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

The New Orleans District Conference, in session at Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans, Tuesday night unanimously accepted its quota of $25,000 for the half-million-dollar extension fund of the Ruston Orphanage. The Conference also endorsed the raising of the fund, and all present held up their hands pledging their active co-operation and support in the campaign which is to be conducted for the fund throughout the State, beginning June 13.

It is hoped that the entire fund will have been subscribed by July 1, and that at an early date work may be started on the ten cottages to grace the crescent hill surrounding the present orphanage building. In each cottage a group of twenty-five children will be housed, with a lovable Christian matron in charge helping to make each cottage a home wherein the community spirit and the hearth love will be engendered as the basis for real Christian citizenship.

An organization is now being set up throughout the State through which teams will be established in every church, and when the campaign starts not only will each member of the congregation be solicited to do his bit, but the merchants, and the public-spirited men in every community, will be asked to answer this call of humanity, this stirring appeal for real Americanization.

Over 200 children are at present seeking admittance into the Ruston Methodist Orphanage. Many of these children are now living in homes of desolation, where they are denied the advantages of education and even proper food and clothing.

There are now 130 children in the Home and the building was planned to accommodate only a hundred. The work has grown, and with its growth the church's responsibility has increased.

"We cannot fail to meet that increased responsibility," said Rev. R. W. Vaughan, superintendent of the Orphanage, before the District Conference in New Orleans Tuesday night. "It is a clarion call that tugs at our heart-strings; it is a divine admonition; it is a challenge to the humanitarianism of the Methodists of Louisiana and the lovers of their fellow-men throughout the State."

Rev. Mr. Vaughan told of the pangs he suffered when he was compelled, day after day, to answer appealing letters and to deny to some homeless boy or girl the mothering influence they craved.

The Orphanage takes no children under two years old, and no boys over nineteen and no girls over twenty-one. The children are educated in the elementary grades at the institution, and complete their course at the Ruston High School and at the State Industrial School at Ruston. Six of the girls who once came to the Institution as orphans are now teachers in the public schools of Louisiana. A nine-year-old boy will graduate this year as a stenographer at the State Industrial School, and he is a product of Orphanage training.

Girls and boys at the Home every day are being taught domestic science and the homely arts, and all are being reared into stalwart Christian manhood and noble Christ-like womanhood. The Orphanage makes no discrimination as to the creed of those whom it takes in.

The Orphanage campaign is in no way connected with the Interchurch Movement. It is a distinct campaign, fostered by the Board of Directors of the Orphanage, who are sanguine that by thorough co-operation and earnest endeavor the half-million-dollar Fund will be easily subscribed in Louisiana.

RESOLUTIONS ON UNIFICATION.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the Greenville District Conference, and the Secretary was instructed to furnish the Advocate a copy for publication:

Resolved, by the District Conference, Greenville District, North Mississippi Conference, M. E. Church, South, that we protest against the proposed plan of unification set forth in the Constitution adopted by the Joint Commission, January 20, 1920, for the unification of Methodist bodies, and hereby instruct our delegates to the General and Annual Conferences to vote against such plan as now framed, and to use all honorable means to secure its modification, and, in default thereof, its rejection.

We base our attitude in this matter, among others, upon the following grounds:

First—The power of the General Conference to retire bishops for unacceptability is unwise and dangerous.

Second—The number of our church delegates in the proposed General Conference, allotted to the South, is not sufficient under the proposed rules of procedure. Their number should be increased, or the percentage vote required for amending the Constitution should be increased.

Third—There is not sufficient protection for the Southern Church in the provisions concerning the changing of boundaries of Regional Conferences, or the creation of new Conferences.

Fourth—The plan for association in the Conference and in the church of the white and black races is contrary to the experience of the South, dangerous to its civilization, and impossible of practical performance.

Fifth—There is no provision in the proposed plan for the withdrawal of any Conference, upon proper notice of its intention, nor for the disposition of the church's property within its boundaries in the event of such withdrawal.

Sixth—The Southern Church is not sufficiently provided for as to, or guaranteed representation on, the Judicial Council.

Seventh—We believe that co-operation between the Methodist bodies, and conservation of resources and energies and efforts, can be attained in some method preferable to that proposed.

W. C. GALCERAN, Secretary.

TEN LITTLE DUTIES.

Ten little duties; Does no good to whine;
Skip about and do one, then there are nine.
Nine little duties: it never pays to wait;
Do one quick, and, presto; there are eight.
Eight little duties: might have been eleven;
One done in no time; now they're just seven.
Seven little duties: 'tisn't such a fix;
Do one more, and—bless me!—they're only six.
Six little duties, sure as I'm alive!
Never mind, one's over; now there are only five.
Five little duties knocking at our door;
Lead off one to Donelaml, that leaves only four.
Four little duties, plain as plain can be;
Can't be shirked—one's over—leaving only three.
Three little duties: like a sohlier true
Meet them and vanquish one; then there'll be but two.
Two little dutles between you and tun;
In just a minute longer there'll be only one.
One little duty: now what will you do?
Do it! Why surely, now you are through!

THE LIGHT ON THE CLIFF.

The sea thundered against the cliffs of Castle Bluff, and the breakers dashed their spray over the windows of the lighthouse. A snow-squall threatened to break before night. Esther Holly stood at the little round window, so like the port-hole of a ship, and looked with fascinated eyes at the bay.

"There will be a storm to night. I know there will, and won't it be glorious!" she said to herself as the sleet lashed the window-pane. Esther had come from her home in the city anticipating many an adventure in the strange home of her uncle, Joe Willet, the lighthouse-keeper.

"I am not wishing for a wreck on the coast, but if there should be one, I should like to be at Castle Bluff during the excitement." Esther had said the night that Uncle Joe had brought her to the light house.

"We try to prevent wrecks," Joe Willet returned promptly. "We keep the light on the cliff burning bright, as a guide to the vessels. This is a dangerous coast. Before the lighthouse was built there were many ships that went ashore. The tides in the channel are so treacherous that too often they sweep a boat on the rocks."

The quaint lighthouse home nest charmed Esther. The round living room at the base of the lighthouse was a great contrast to the living room in the prosaic city flat from which she had just come. Two tiny rooms, dining room and kitchen, opened into the round living room and their port-hole windows looked out on the rock foundation of the lighthouse. From the second floor, the stairway, straight and steep, ran to the top of the four floors, where in the glass tower, the light revolved. The tiny bedrooms were cornered off on each side of the straight, narrow stairway. And in one of the tiny bedrooms, Esther Holly, with the roar of the surf in her ears, dreamed of wrecks and of thrilling rescues.

Esther was alone in the lighthouse this winter afternoon. Uncle Joe and Aunt Judith Will had gone to the village up the channel to do their weekly marketing. They made the trip in their motor-boat, promising to return early. All the afternoon Esther had busied herself knitting on her new crimson sweater, but the threatening storm fascinated her. The wail of the wind and the roar of the sea sent the blood tingling through her veins. It was certainly the eve of a blizzard.

"I hope aunty and uncle will leave the village before the storm breaks. It will not take them longer than half an hour to come down the channel, but the sea looks angry already," murmured Esther.

Look as she would, she could catch no glimpse of the craft on the water. Suddenly Esther realized that dusk was shutting down on the bay, and that the gray, blinding, snow-storm had broken.

Where were Aunt Judith and Uncle Joe Willet? Surely they would have started for home before dusk. Perhaps the storm was delaying them. If they dared not come down the channel in the motor-boat, they could come on the mainland by the Cliff Road.

Esther slipped on a heavy sweater, and, climbing the straight, narrow stairway, searched the sea with anxious eyes, from the round, glassed tower. She could see nothing but the blinding snow and the spray of the angry breakers.

Suppose Uncle Joe and Aunt Judith did not get home before dark? Who would light the lighthouse lamp? Uncle Joe was proud of the fact that the light on the cliff had never once failed to guide the vessels sailing past that dangerous coast. Esther turned to the revolving light with its curiously shaped fans and prismatic colors. How eagerly she had watched the lightkeeper light the lamp night after night. As he had released the lever and sent the light spinning, her eyes followed the rays sent far out across the sea. At the base of the lighthouse was the little engine room, where, under Uncle Joe's skilled fingers, the machinery kept the revolving light in motion throughout the night.

"Suppose the engine failed some night, would there be any light?" Esther had questioned.

"Yes, there would be a light," the lighthouse-keeper had answered promptly. "If the engine failed, I would come up here and keep the light turning with my hands."

How dark the lighthouse tower had grown! Suppose, in the darkness, Uncle Joe and Aunt Judith had missed the lighthouse slip? With a little cry of determination Esther bent and lighted the lamp. She could not tamper with the machinery in the engine-room, but her hands were strong and willing to spin the revolving light.

Her heart leaped with the cheer that the light of the lamp sent out. Her right hand spun the fans, and she thrilled as the gleam of light shot out across the stormy sea. If only she could keep the light revolving until Uncle Joe came back!

Minutes dragged into hours. Though Esther listened hour after hour, no footsteps came up the steep, narrow stairway, and no reassuring voice called from the rooms below. The only spark of comfort in the wilderness of the night was the bright path of light that the lamp sent over the black waters. Esther's right arm ached dully. The lighthouse swayed with the onslaught of the waves against its rock foundation. Esther shivered and drew her sweater closer about her shoulders.

"Surely Uncle Joe and Aunt Judith will be here before midnight," she murmured.

"Suppose they do not come to-night?" whispered a terrifying thought.

"Then I will keep the light revolving until morning," Esther Holly reassured herself.

The hours of the night dragged on. And all that wild night the light revolved, its bright rays pointing out the dangerous rocks of the coast. With the dawn, the wind died and the sky cleared.

With a sob of relief Esther Holly dropped her aching arms and knelt to put out the light. Then, numb with cold, she crept down the ladder-like stairs to the kitchen, and built a roaring fire in the kitchen stove.

Hearing a step on the rocks at the doorway, she flew to the door and flung it wide. Aunt Judith's arms went around her, and Uncle Joe's voice rang out questioningly.

"Who kept the light revolving all night?"

"My hands did—but what became of you both?" asked Esther, anxiously.

"We started from the village as soon as the storm threatened, but our engine stalled in the channel, and we drifted in the bay. I thanked God when I saw the light. There was a vessel struggling out there in the storm. They picked us up and made us comfortable. We made the village wharf at daybreak. But, Esther, if it had not been for the light on the cliff, the vessel would have gone ashore on the ledges. She was out of her course. There were thirty souls on that vessel. If you had not kept the light shining bright all night, there would have been one more wreck to add to the lists," said Uncle Joe, his eyes aglow with approval for his niece, who in his stead had stood by the light.

Esther stared out at the sea tumbling in white-capped breakers. "I thought it would be wonderful to be at the light house when there was a wreck; but it's far more wonderful to prevent a wreck," she said very thoughtfully. Blanche Gertrude Robbins, in The Christian Register.

Men are still panting for God. They know that nothing is more insipid than technical excellence devoid of spiritual reality. We must have life, and we have it in Christ. Editorial

THE NEW RESPONSIBILITY—A THREE-MINUTE TALK.

In the action of the General Conference providing for the Centenary Movement, specific provision was made that the Movement should have "right of way" for the first two years of the quadrennium, the second two years being assigned to the Educational Campaign. With May, the two years specifically assigned to the Centenary Movement have come to a close, and we are now about to enter upon the campaign in behalf of our educational interests.

But we must not allow ourselves to feel for a moment that the Centenary interests are to be neglected. There will, of course, be less of publicity, fewer group meetings and conferences; but the great work of collecting the millions subscribed by the church, and of carrying out the plans of the Movement will go steadily forward. We must not lose any of the benefits that have accrued thus far, by a failure to conserve the results of this undertaking which has been so wonderfully blessed of God.

In this situation, a new responsibility will rest upon the local church organization in completing the pledges made, and in giving to the people generally information concerning what is being done at home and abroad by the money that has been so generously contributed. This new responsibility will be felt by all the members of the local organization—the pastor, the minute men, the treasurer—and the local church cabinet will have a special responsibility in seeing that every possible effort is made to perfect what has been so splendidly begun. The church as a whole will give itself vigorously and unreservedly to the Educational Campaign; but in doing so, it will not fail to carry on that intensive, it quiet, work which will be the means, through the Centenary, of blessing untold millions of our fellow-men at home and abroad.

PRACTICAL HELP FOR PERSONAL WORKERS.

It has been demonstrated over and over that personal work is an invaluable method of getting people to surrender their lives to God and the church. The value of appeals from the pulpit is not, of course, to be underestimated. Many a person who has gone to church through curiosity, or with no special concern about his own spiritual welfare, has been brought under conviction by the Spirit of God as he has listened to the earnest presentation of the Gospel by the faithful minister, and has been moved to approach the altar in penitence; and there, by faith, he has found peace in the forgiveness of his sins and in the sense of reconciliation with God. We do not know of anything that can take the place of preaching as a means of reaching the unsaved people in all our communities.

But the preaching itself is made more effective by well-directed, intelligent personal work on the part of those who are already active Christians; and many another man who was not touched by the sermon can be brought to a serious realization of his spiritual needs by the tactful and kindly interest of a Christian friend. There are probably some people in every revival meeting who never yield to the call of the Gospel, who could be brought to a surrender of their lives if they could be dealt with in an intimately personal way.

Every church, too, has in it men and women who are willing and anxious to render the very kind of personal service that is so effective in winning people to Christ, but they are handicapped by not knowing just whom to approach. It is probably true that more people are willing for us to talk to them about their salvation than we imagine, but it is a difficult task for most of us to approach a stranger or a chance acquaintance upon such a serious matter. Anything, therefore, that will assure one who is willing to do personal work that he will not be repelled, is a valuable help that would be welcomed by many devout souls.

We have been led to the foregoing reflections by reason of a letter which we received a few days ago from a prominent layman of the Mississippi Conference, in which he lamented the fact that it is often so hard to get done just the kind of personal work that is needed. In connection with the difficulty, he makes a suggestion that we believe is worth putting into use. We take the liberty of quoting from his letter: "It is hard to direct properly the efforts of those who in any meeting are willing to do personal work. There is much time wasted in such work unless it is intelligently directed. It has occurred to me that it would be a good idea to prepare and circulate during the first days of any meeting cards on which persons might indicate that they are interested in their own salvation. Such cards, when returned and canvassed, would give a list of 'prospects' to whom personal workers might profitably give attention, and who would in that way be led to make—by going to the altar, for instance—on a later day of the meeting a public profession of religion. It would be all right to continue from the first the making of the usual propositions from the pulpit, but by the use of the suggested plan it might be that persons who would not, without some personal work, be willing to go forward on a proposition, could be persuaded to do so. I know there is not a chance that this plan has not already been used somewhere before this time. It has not been used, however, in any meeting which I have taken part in; and it seems to me to avoid the objections to the use of the 'decision card,' while getting the advantages that there are in that method of work."

We believe the plan suggested will be of great practical help to many who are desirous of doing all they can to help forward the work of the Kingdom of God, and we commend it to all our brethren who have not already used this or some similar method of work.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

An invitation to take part in the Commencement exercises of Whitworth College, at Brookhaven, Miss., gave us the opportunity recently to spend two or three days pleasantly and profitably on the campus of that really great institution. It is altogether unnecessary to say that the genial and accomplished president, Dr. I. W. Cooper, left nothing undone that would minister to the comfort of the visitor.

Whitworth is an outstanding example of a splendid dream come true. When the present administration took charge eighteen years ago, there was an inheritance of inspiring traditions and noble ideals—and not much else besides. The buildings were few and the equipment was comparatively insignificant, and the outlook was not such as to encourage the hope that a magnificent achievement was in process of realization. But Dr Cooper dreamed his dream of what ought to be, and then, with his corps of able assistants, went to work to make real what he had pictured in his imagination. To-day, the beautiful campus is adorned with numerous buildings that are splendidly adapted to the uses for which they are intended, and others are in process of construction, which, when completed, will make Whitworth one of the most completely equipped schools in the church for the education of girls and young women.

One of these buildings—a great brick dining room and dormitory—will be ready for occupancy at the opening of the next session. It will take the place of the frame building which has stood for many years as a kind of memorial of those early days when the school was in the making. The dining room, on the first floor, will have a seating capacity of about 350, and the two floors above will furnish additional dormitory space to help take care of the students who have taxed the capacity of the school thus far. The entire building will, of course, be thoroughly modern in design and equipment.

A gymnasium and swimming pool, for which the contract has already been let, will furnish ample accommodations for the physical exercise and recreation which have come to be looked upon as such a necessary part of collegiate training. In our opinion this will prove to be one of the most important additions to the school plant.

But the pride of the girls is the "Y Hut," which is already well on the way to completion. It will be the center of the religious and social life of the college community and, as such, it will have a tremendous influence in shaping into well-rounded Christian womanhood the girls who have the opportunity of enjoying its privileges. The money for erecting this building is being raised by the girls themselves, and while the cost will be considerably greater than was at first estimated, nobody can doubt that their enthusiastic efforts will secure the full amount needed. It will be a hard-hearted man indeed, who can refuse the eager appeal of these winsome solicitors as they undertake this summer to raise the funds with which to complete their building.

Dr. Cooper has in mind one other building—a conservatory of music—which, when secured, as it surely will be, will leave little to be desired in the way of material equipment for what is already one of the foremost institutions of the South. After an adequate endowment has been raised—and the provision for this is included in the approaching educational campaign—the Mississippi Conference will have at Brookhaven a college for the education of girls in which all of Methodism may justly take pride.

The financial record of Whitworth is probably without parallel in the history of the church. During the eighteen years of Dr. Cooper's presidency, not a bill has gone unpaid when due; and during the past year more than $100,000 has been placed in his hands by friends for the improvements that are now under way. Such names as Enochs, Hand, Lampton, and others like them, will long be identified with the cause of Christian education in Mississippi.

Dr. Cooper himself expects to leave about July 1 for an extended tour of Europe; the interests of the college, however, will be ably looked after by Miss Drake, the efficient dean of the faculty, and Miss Lois Cooper, both of whom are amply qualified by training and experience to administer the affairs of the school in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. A good many reservations have already been made for next session, and Dr. Cooper expressed the opinion that there would not be an unassigned room by midsummer.

The Commencement exercises were of a very high order, all the participants showing the results of careful and efficient instruction on the part of their teachers. The graduating class, composed of nine young ladies, reflected great credit upon the institution, three of them receiving the A. B. degree, one the B. S., and five the B. L. Mrs. Sue Stuart Brame and Miss Asa May Ramsey, both teachers in the college, were given the honorary degree of Master of Arts.

Among the visitors to the college during the Commencement occasion we noted the following members of the Mississippi Conference: Revs. J. T. Leggett, W. H. Lewis, A. J. Boyles, Chas. Wesley, W. H. Saunders, W. W. Graves, W. A. Terry, A. M. Broadfoot, P. D. Hardin, B. W. Lewis, W. W. Moore, J. M. Morse. In addition to the gracious hospitality of Dr. Cooper and the faculty and students of the college, we were the recipients of delightful courtesies at the hands of Rev. W. H. Lewis and Rev. and Mrs. J. T. Leggett.

THE PRICE OF THE ADVOCATE IS $2 A YEAR.

Some of our friends have evidently overlooked our recent announcements to the effect that the subscription price of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is $2 a year, since they continue to send their renewals at the old rate. The change was made only because of urgent necessity—but it has been made and we will adhere to it strictly. Remittances of $1.50 will be credited for a nine-months' subscription only.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. C. W. Huff, of Live Oak, Calif., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate asks us to say for him that he is irrevocably opposed to unification.

According to press reports, Miss Daisy Davies, president of LaGrange College, has announced her resignation, to become effective at the close of the present session.

Rev. H. M. Young, of Eupora, Miss., has announced a meeting at that place, beginning on May 19, in which he is to be assisted by Rev. Dan Kelly, one of the Mississippi Conference evangelists.

Rev. H. H. Wallace, of Coldwater, Miss., pastor of the Chulahoma charge, is definitely striving to make every service an evangelistic one. We cannot doubt but that he will be greatly blessed in so doing.

Mr. H. H. Ahrens, who has many friends throughout Louisiana and Mississippi, is at present located in Washington, D. C., after having spent several weeks in New York and other cities of the East.

Brother W. W. Williams, of Roff, Oklahoma, in renewing his subscription to the Advocate states that he has been a subscriber for 51 years. No wonder he says he would feel lonesome without its weekly visits.

Rev. L. P. Moreland, pastor of the Anacoco and Pearson charge, Louisiana Conference, who has been living at Hornbeck, La., has changed his residence to Pearson, La. His correspondents will please take note of the change.

Rev. W. S. Selman, of Olive Branch, Miss., gives a good report of his work. He has four active Sunday schools, two missionary societies, and one Epworth League. Collections on Centenary pledges and for other causes are progressing satisfactorily.

Our Conference Epworth Leagues will meet this year as follows: North Mississippi, at Corinth, June 1-3; Louisiana, at Mansfield, June 8-15; Mississippi, at Vicksburg, June 15-18. Representatives from the Central Office will be in attendance at all of them.

Bishop John H. Vincent, the founder of the Chautauqua movement and one of the distinguished leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died suddenly at his home in Chicago on May 9, at the age of 88. He retired from the active episcopacy in 1904.

According to reports reaching us, our church at Oxford, Miss., is in a highly prosperous condition. The Sunday school has the largest attendance in its history, perhaps, and the preaching services are unusually well attended. Rev. L. M. Lipscomb is the pastor.

We learn from Rev. Carroll Varner, of West Point, Miss., that Mrs. Alberta A. Emerson, wife of W. H. Emerson, died at that place on May 3, the body being taken to Dardanell, Ark., for burial. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family.

The Woman's Missionary Council of our church, in session in Kansas City, Mo., April 14-21, unanimously adopted a resolution favoring unification. The financial goal for the year was fixed at $1,000,000. The next session of the Council will be held in Richmond, Va.

Brother T. W. Cooper, a steward in our church at Eupora, Miss., passed away early Monday morning, May 10. He was a noble Christian gentleman, and his death is a great loss to the church and the community. We tender our sympathy to those who are in sorrow.

Rev. W. F. Quillian, pastor of our church at Fort Valley, Ga., has been elected president of Wesleyan College to succeed Dr. C. R. Jenkins, who resigned because he felt himself physically unequal to the task of carrying forward the work of that great educational institution.

Rev. R. H. Harper, pastor of First Methodist Church, New Orleans, will preach the Commencement sermon for the Gulfcoast Military Academy next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, in the First Methodist Church, Gulfport, Miss.

"I am glad you raised the price of the Advocate—I believe subscriptions will be more easily secured," writes Rev. D. B. Boddie, of Rochelle, La. We make grateful acknowledgment of the fact that not a single complaint has reached us thus far concerning the increased rate.

We acknowledge the receipt of a neatly-printed program of the Durant District Conference, to be held at Kilmichael, Miss., May 27-30. The presiding elder, Rev. A. C. McCorkle, has prepared a feast of good things for the occasion. Rev. J. W. Raper will be the conference host.

Rev. J. B. Randolph, of Moore Memorial Church, Winona, Miss., has received 62 members into the church since Conference. The Sunday school is the largest in the history of the church, more room being needed for it and the work of the missionary organizations. Of course finances are in full to date.

Bishop W. N. Ainsworth will make his permanent residence at Macon, Ga., where his friends have presented him with a home. The church will sympathize deeply with Bishop Ainsworth in the continued and serious illness of his daughter, whose condition makes it necessary for him to be near her.

Rev. Ira B. Robertson, one of the noble veterans of the Mississippi Conference, makes his home with his nephew, Mr. Elbert Robertson, at McNair, Miss., where he receives the tenderest care in his declining years. Brother Robertson was the guest of Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Saunders, of Natchez, Miss., for several days recently.

The Central Methodist, the official organ of the Louisville and the Kentucky Conferences, was forced to reduce its size to eight pages last week in order to conserve the small supply of paper it has on hand—about enough to last four weeks with the smaller number of pages. Newsprint is very, very hard to get—and the cost of it!

In the notice in last week's Advocate concerning the Corinth District Conference, the middle initial of Rev. J. W. Ward, of Booneville, Miss., was given as "A." We are sure, however, that our readers detected the error for themselves, since Brother Ward is so well known throughout the North Mississippi and the Mississippi Conferences.

The Presidents of Conference Epworth Leagues and the Presidents of Annual Conference Epworth League Boards adopted a resolution at their meeting in Nashville last January recommending a campaign during the month of May for the organization and development of Leagues in rural communities. Great good will result if this campaign is energetically pushed.

According to a bulletin of the Sunday school of the First Methodist Church, Lake Charles, La., the 15th annual picnic was held on Saturday, May 8. Mothers' Day was observed on May 9, and Sunday School Day will be observed next Sunday. A. M. Mayo and J. A. Foster are Associate Superintendents of the school, with Rev. W. W. Holmes as pastor of the church.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation to attend the graduating exercises of Mansfield Female College, Mansfield, La., Tuesday evening, May 25. The graduating class is composed of twenty young ladies, seventeen of whom will receive the L. I. degree, and three the M. E. L. degree. President Bobbitt has worked wonders in the development of this historic school.

It is with great sorrow that we learn of the death of the mother of Rev. W. J. Ferguson, pastor of our Fifth Street Church, Meridian, Miss., on Thursday, May 6. Brother Ferguson was with her for two weeks preceding the end. Among her last words, were these: "I am on my way to Heaven"—a glorious message to leave loved ones. We extend sincere sympathy to the bereaved family.

Rev. H. W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, organized a church at Tioga, La., on Sunday, May 9, with 47 members, and a Sunday school with 22 members, the result of a ten-days' meeting. On the same Sunday evening, he preached at Pineville and raised $2300 to be used in building a Sunday School Annex to the church. Brother May is now with his brother, Rev. E. C. May, in a meeting at Clanton, Ala.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation to attend the Twenty-seventh Annual Commencement Exercises of the Scarritt Bible and Training School, Kansas City, Mo., May 22-25. The Commencement sermon will be preached by Dr. A. M. Trawick, and the address will be delivered by Dr. Mabel Howell. The graduating class has eighteen members, three of whom, we note, are from Mississippi: Miss Otie Gretchen Branstetter, Jackson; Miss Ella Marzie Hall, Walnut Grove; Miss Lillian Louise Knobles, State Line. Of these, Miss Hall has already been appointed to missionary work in Africa.

Rev. John W. Ramsey recently closed a fine meeting at Chicora, Miss., in which he was assisted by Rev. T. J. Norsworthy, of Meridian, Miss. There was a genuine revival in the church and community, with 28 additions to the church. Brother Ramsey writes concerning Brother Norsworthy: "His logical reasoning was exceedingly forceful, and his impassioned appeals to the unsaved were well-nigh irresistible. His denunciations of sin were terrific. I have never in all my ministry had better or more satisfactory help. Brother Norsworthy would assist the brethren, who may need him, in one or two meetings if dates can be arranged, and I take pleasure in recommending him as safe and efficient help in revival work." The Chicora meeting closed with a "pounding" for the pastor, and a generous purse for his helper. The "pounding" is the fourth Brother Ramsey has received this year.

A WORD FROM BISHOP McMURRY.

To the Members of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dear Brethren: My attention has been called to the campaign in the Mississippi Conference to raise funds with which to build a modern hospital in the city of Hattiesburg. As I understand it, this movement has the endorsement of the Mississippi Conference and is entitled, therefore, to the cordial co-operation and assistance of every member of that body.

As a church, we have been a little slow in undertaking this character of service, but now that we have begun, I am confident that we will do our full duty in thus providing for the sick and suffering. I sincerely hope that the campaign now in progress may have the hearty support of all our preachers and people. Yours sincerely,

W. F. McMURRY.

MRS. ETTA RHODES (nee McDonald) was born April 5, 1877, and died March 11, 1920. At the tender age of 5 years she was converted and joined the Methodist Church. It is significant to note that her father, Rev. C. McDonald, late of the Mississippi Conference, was converted at four years of age. We know that in the Methodist preacher's home Miss Etta received all the advantages of Christian nurture and through the years constantly increased in Christian character and service. On November 20, 1901, she was happily married to E. W. Rhodes, Jr. This happy couple were among the most diligent and faithful members of old Shiloh Church in Rankin County, and their home was ever open to Methodist preachers. Five children survive the precious mother, the youngest an infant, all of whom have lost one of the most faithful mothers one can have. The husband, Brother Ed Rhodes, with his parents, feels keenly the loss of their mother, companion and daughter, but with true Christian fortitude bows in humble submission to God, realizing that their loss is her rich gain in that land of cloudless day. On Saturday, the 13th of March, the funeral services were held at the family residence, attended by a large circle of relatives and friends. The writer, assisted by Rev. A. A. Sims, and Rev. J. M. Lewis, conducted the funeral. The latter's wife is a sister-in-law of the deceased.

"'Tis hard to take the burden up
When these have laid it down;
They brightened all the joy of life,
They softened every frown:
But, O, 'tis good to think of them
When we are troubled sore!
Thanks be to God that such have been,
Though they are here no more."

OSMOND S. LEWIS.

ROY LAMKIN DIXON was born at Gloster, Miss., March 2, 1886, and died at Vicksburg, Miss., January 25, 1920. Born of Christian parents, he early learned to love Christ and the church, and at fourteen years of age united with the Baptist Church. He was happily married to Miss Gladys Freeman, of Fayette, Miss., July 5, 1916. Their devotion to each other was beautiful to see, and both were held in high esteem and affection by all who knew them. Brother Dixon was a valued employee of the Y. & M. V. Railroad and stood high in the esteem of his brothers on the road. In the summer of 1919, during a meeting conducted by Rev. Dan Kelly, he united with the Gibson Memorial Methodist Church with his wife, who was already a Methodist. He gave promise of great usefulness to the church, and the writer was looking forward to the opportunity of developing him into one of the leading workers in the church when death so suddenly ended his life. There was universal grief when the news was given out that Roy Dixon was dead. The sympathy of all went out to the prostrate companion now so suddenly bereaved. He had assured her that he was prepared for death, so with clear vision she and other loved ones and friends look beyond to the Homelaud, where all feel assured he is with his Lord.

OSMOND S. LEWIS.

WILLIAM TURRENTINE BALDRIDGE was born in Jefferson County, Miss., March 6, 1887, and died in Vicksburg, Miss., on January 29, 1920. When a boy he regularly attended the Sunday school at Redbone Church, in Warren County. He was happily converted in childhood and united with the Methodist Church. He was the only son of J. S. and M. T. Baldridge, to whom he was perfectly devoted all his life. Their home was always open to Methodist preachers and he shared with his parents their love for the ministry. When quite young he moved to Vicksburg, where he soon established himself as a mechanic of unusual ability. As an automobile mechanic he was regarded as the best in the city, the fastest, most accurate, painstaking and absolutely reliable. He had the entire confidence of all who knew him. There was universal sorrow when his health broke down under the severe strain of trying to meet the demands of his business. His passing away a year later was a source of grief to all who knew him. On the 10th of January, 1911, he was happily married to Miss Irma Wilson, a woman of rare Christian culture. Their home-life was truly Christian. Three boys blessed this union—William, Albert and Robert. As he had been a dutiful, loving son, so he proved a devoted husband and affectionate father. For a number of years he has been identified with the Gibson Memorial Church. For the past three years he had greatly increased his devotion to God and the church, proving to be one of our most valuable members. At the time of his death he was both steward and trustee. With characteristic liberality and devotion to the needs of his pastor, he fitted up a car at his own expense and presented it to the writer. During the last months of his illness the writer was with him often and spent many happy hours in blessed Christian fellowship. He had the witness of the Spirit that he was a child of God, and firmly believed that all things worked together for good to them that loved the Lord. He has gone from us, but we know where to find him, and with calm resignation his loved ones realize their loss is his gain. So with patience and ever increasing hope we look forward to a blessed reunion with him who has gone to be "forever with the Lord."

OSMOND S. LEWIS.

On May 2, 1920, death, with its icy fingers, touched the heart and brow of one of our fairest and dearest jewels, LOYD NATHAN STAMPER, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Stamper of Conehatta, Miss., and took him to glory land. There was an angel band in heaven not complete, so God called dear little Loyd to fill the vacancy. He was born in September, 1912, and his days were short on earth, for he only budded here to bloom in heaven. He leaves mother, father, one brother, five sisters, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. He sang the beautiful song, "Home, Sweet Home," just before he went to live with Jesus, and we know he is waiting and watching for us just inside the pearly gates. The funeral services were conducted in the Methodist Church by the Rev. Mr. Rutledge. Sweetest thoughts will ever linger round the grave where little Loyd is laid.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God, who doeth all things well, though the veil may be drawn, and we are not permitted to see why, has seen best, suddenly and unexpectedly to take from among us one of our most faithful and loved members, Mrs. Allie Russell, we, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, of Rose Hill, Miss., are grieved beyond words, to part from one who, though not a member of the Methodist Church, was always ready and willing, to work in our Society; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That, though sad to part from Mrs. Russell, we bow in humble submission to His holy will, thanking Him for the beautiful life she lived, which has been an inspiration to us all.

2. That, in her going, our Society has lost a member who could always be counted on to carry her part.

3. That, in her going, the community at large has lost a devoted friend, one who always had a smile and a pleasant word for all.

4. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the broken-hearted loved ones, especially the little daughter, who is left to travel life's way without father, mother, brother or sister.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our Society, that a copy be sent to the daughter, and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and the Messenger, for publication.

RESOLUTIONS.

The committee appointed by the Missionary Society of the Kentwood Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to prepare resolutions on the death of Mrs. Mamie Bales, respectfully submits the following:

Whereas our friend and fellow-worker, Mrs. Mamie Bales, on the evening of April 29, 1920, at her home in Kentwood, La., departed this life; and,

Whereas we desire to give expression to our grief and record our esteem and appreciation of our deceased friend and the noble Christian example before us, and to extend our sympathy to husband, son, sisters and brothers;

Therefore be it resolved, That we, the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, do honor and love her sacred memory as a devout Christian, who has gone to her heavenly home, where sorrowing and suffering are no more.

That we point her loved ones to her God, who sustained her in her deep trials and suffering; and we say to them, "Follow her as she followed her Savior" and bye and bye, we will meet her again and sing the beautiful songs of redeeming love, where parting and good-byes are never said.

Signed by: Mrs. L. L. Chambers, Chairman; Mrs. Herbert Broyles, Mrs. J. L. Waltman.

A Word of Help to Women of Middle Age From Mrs. Raney.

Morse, Okla.—"When I was 45 years old Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound carried me through the critical period of the Change of Life in safety. I am over 60 and have raised a family of eight children and am in fine health. My daughter and daughters-in-law recommend your Vegetable Compound and I still take it occasionally myself. You are at liberty to use my name if you wish."—Mrs. ALICE RANEY, Morse, Oklahoma.

Change of Life is one of the most critical periods of a woman's existence. This good old-fashioned root and herb remedy may be relied upon to overcome the distressing symptoms which accompany it and women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to carry women so successfully through this trying period as Lydia E. THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE STATE OF THE CHURCH.

(Adopted by the Port Gibson District Conference, Mississippi Conference, and published by request of that body).

To the District Conference: Your committee on the state of the church submit their report as follows: From the reports made by the pastors and others on the conference floor, we have gleaned the following facts: received on profession of faith, 35; received by certificate, 123; infants baptized, 15; family altars, 52. Several pastors announced plans for revival services. The one great need of the church today is a Holy Ghost revival. We note with pleasure that throughout the district the attendance on the preaching services was reported as good and improving, especially at the morning services. The evening and mid-week services were reported as being more or less indifferently attended. "It has been said that the morning congregation is a test of the popularity of the church, that the evening congregation is a test of the preacher's popularity, and, that the congregation of the mid-week service is a test of the popularity of Jesus Christ." Judging by this standard, Jesus Christ comes third in popularity, the preacher second, and the church first. A healthy spiritual state will reverse this condition by exalting Christ to the supreme place in the life of the church.

We are glad to note that the indications of the coming revival are not wanting. We would like to stress the need of loyalty to our church and her doctrines. While most of our people are loyal, and Methodism most catholic in her relations to other denominations, yet, in many places our people have become willing to take second place in the church-life of the community. We do not in any way want to cultivate the spirit of bigotry, or ungodly denominational rivalry, yet we are unwilling to concede that we are in any sense inferior to others. We, therefore, consider it hurtful to the best interest of our church for our members to be given to flirting with other churches to the neglect of their own.

In these days of various and sundry isms, we need to look carefully to the foundations of our faith. The inspiration of the Bible is by many denied; and by others, so much of its teachings is repudiated, that what is left resembles a crazy quilt, with this difference, however: one may keep warm under such quilt, but an emasculated, uninspired Bible is unable to guide one unto life eternal.

The doctrines of hell, a personal devil, the future punishment of the wicked, the need to be born of the Spirit, the necessity for holy living, have by many been thrown on the scrap heap of discarded and outworn things. We would emphasize the need of preaching the great Bible doctrines as taught by our church. The pulpit needs to give out no uncertain sound on the necessity of repentance, justification by faith, the witness of the Spirit, and that holiness without which no man shall see God.

In conclusion we would stress the need to cultivate the prayer life and the prayer spirit in the family life, in private and in the prayer services of the church.

W. J. DAWSON,
W. W. HOPPER,
Committee.

A GRACIOUS SERVICE.

Dear Brother Carley: At one service, especially, during the time Brother Jones was with us for our second quarterly conference, we had an old-time spiritual service. He preached at Liberty Saturday and Sunday at 11 a.m. He preached good, strong sermons both these times, but it seemed the Lord had reserved His most precious blessings for the afternoon service, Sunday, at Woodland. His theme was, "Heaven and Who Are on Their Way." The Spirit of the Lord was there as we sang. After the sermon some, who seemed in dead earnest, gave their hands for prayer. Tears flowed freely and the old-time power was unmistakably felt. It was good to be there! There were cars there from both Liberty and Gloster. It is a convenient meeting place for both towns on the highway. Brother W. W. Simmons and wife were there and greatly enjoyed the service. We were all glad they were able to go. Thanks to Brother R. M. Foreman for bringing them. We asked all who would, to fast at least one meal Friday before Conference; and Thursday before, one real saint of Gloster told me she was going to fast and wanted me to pray during fast day for her family, especially. Now, brother, sister, I believe one occasion of this blessed service was because, perhaps four or five fasted and prayed Friday for the Lord's blessings on the occasion. Of course Brother Jones preached good sermons, and that was another occasion of the good service, but "nothing of this kind goeth out except by fasting and prayer."

The quarterly meeting occasion was well attended by the officials, a kind, brotherly spirit prevailed, and the financial reports were encouraging. There is held each month over the territory where three of us preachers operate, about thirty services—twenty-two preaching services. And I'm glad to say, there seems to be general spiritual progress all along the line. "The God of Jacob is with us."

We were indeed glad to have Brother E. C. Gunn, from Rayne, La., to preach for us the fourth Sunday in April. He preached us a good sermon. He and Mrs. Gunn are well pleased with their new work. Still happy,

J. A. WELLS.

Gloster, Miss.

AGAINST DIVIDED INTEREST.

The Centenary of Methodist missions was properly celebrated in a great effort that embraced prayer and the giving of self and money. The outstanding fact is its amazing success; for it exceeded our fondest hopes. It stood on its own merits and God honored it and will continue to honor it through the years to come. By its success other denominations have been inspired to successful efforts. I, for one, am glad it carried no "riders." It was purely missionary.

Now, I hope that when we engage in our Educational Campaign, we will not combine that with the one for our superannuates. Both are important, but the sad stories concerning our needy superannuates have been used too much already to aid in raising money for other purposes.

Let us be both fair and honest. I do not doubt that we shall be able to secure the money necessary for both causes; but when it comes to getting the millions needed for our Superannuate Endowment Fund, don't let us have a divided interest.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The following constitute the Board of Managers of the Standard Training School to be held at Grenada, August 4-11: Rev. E. S. Lewis, Director; Rev. J. E. Stephens, Treasurer; Rev. C. A. Parks, Secretary; Rev. W. W. Woollard, Mr. J. H. Ledyard, Mrs. W. T. Boswell, and Mrs. L. G. Fant. Nothing that has been enterprised in the past means more for the future progress of religious education for the masses of the people than this Training School for our leaders. Who wants the honor of being the first student to enroll in this school?

The Holly Springs District Conference by resolution promised to back up this great movement to the fullest extent. Preachers and laymen expressed themselves as heartily in favor of this school.

Rev. J. H. Holder and the Field Secretary made a trip to Black Jack, in Benton County, about thirty-five miles from Holly Springs, when the roads are fairly good, but on this occasion I will not say how long the road appeared to be. We organized a school, appointed teachers, took up a collection, and ordered the literature needed. We also visited Ashland and enrolled six of the teachers in a training class.

We must hold all our district institutes before the first of August. Again I call upon the preachers and superintendents to open the door for these Institutes that a blessing may come to their own school and to such schools of the district as shall send delegates. Pay attention to this important matter at once, dear fellow-workers.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Last Sunday was spent on the Sharon charge. Sharon, Lone Pine and Millville were visited at this time. Brother Applewhite is doing a good work and this last year seems to be his best.

Millville is a new Sunday school just getting under headway. The school at Sharon is doing good work. Their Sunday school celebration was fine. Many compliments have been passed upon them.

Tuesday, the Jackson District Institute was held at D'Lo, Miss. Counting everything, we had a very good institute. As far as I can remember, the majority, if not all, pledged to put on a campaign for Sabbath Observance, Tithing, and Evangelism. I feel that the Jackson District will meet the Standard. The district officers did good work at the institute. I trust that each Sunday school in the district will get in touch with their officers and make them feel your interest in religious education. The following are the officers: J. M. Morse, Jackson, Presiding Elder; Mrs. J. W. Marley, Jackson, Secretary; Mrs. E. P. Howie, Jackson, Missions; Mrs. J. C. Turner, Canton, Elementary; J. A. Lindsey, Brandon, Teacher-training; H. L. Clark, Yazoo City, Y. P. A. W. B. C.; J. F. Campbell, Madison, Int. Sen. W. B. C.

Fine reports are coming in from the observance of Sunday School Day. W. L. Hilton, the superintendent of the Mt. Pisgah Sunday school, reports an unusual observance of the Day. Dinner on the ground was an added attraction to the services. Their pastor, I. H. Sells, wound up the programme with a strong sermon suitable to the occasion. Brother Hilton says, "We can see good results arising from our services, for which we are very grateful." Their offering was $3.65.

Rev. Chas. Downer, of Seminary, reports the Pleasant Ridge Sunday school observed the day with a fine programme and an offering of $7.20.

If you have not received your Sunday School Day programmes, write me at once. Do not let any one fall to observe the Day.

Make special arrangements to have some one represent your Sunday school at the institute. The institutes held up to this time have been the best I have ever attended. We are praying that this high-water mark will continue.

In regard to the Missionary work in your Sunday school, the Mississippi Conference stands 24th in the list. That's getting in towards the bottom. We have only 29 Specials. This puts us about the middle of the list; 233 out of 451 Sunday schools have reported they are observing Missionary Day. I feel that we are doing better than this, but that the schools have failed to report. Let every school make an effort to have a Special and report what they are doing with Missions.

Those who are interested in Junaluska, please send in your request for a reservation at your earliest convenience. Yours In Him,

Pray for the work and the workers.

JNO. C. CHAMBERS.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

I was sorry to miss the New Orleans District Conference. Other engagements were made before I knew the dates of the conference.

We will meet again in New Orleans in a district-wide meeting on Sunday, May 30. It will be our annual district meeting of the Sunday schools. Presiding elder, pastors, superintendents are members of this district meeting, but others who are not district officers should be elected by the school. Send your names to pastor or superintendent of the church entertaining the institute. Keep dates and places of meeting in your mind, as well as the importance of the meeting.

Schools are observing "Sunday School Day" and making good reports of the same. One school asked for $25 and got $50; another asked for $50 and got $72. We thank you for your interest, prayers and money. Send money at once to C. V. Breithaupt, Alexandria.

Our Training Schools for Sunday school workers will be held at Dallas, June 16-23, and Lake Junaluska, July 7-21. Some schools are planning to send delegates and paying all their expenses. Can you? Write A. L. Dietrich, Lake Junaluska, N. C., for reservations. This is important.

The President of the Wesley Bible Class Federation, Judge W. G. Banks, Shreveport, is planning some good work for the Conference. Help him and he will be a blessing to all of us. All his work is under the auspices of the Conference Sunday School Board.

ALONZO EARLY,
Field Secretary.

BY GOD'S PATH.

We get where we desire to be, but by God's own path. It might seem as though it would have been better for everybody if Paul had been in Rome and also been perfectly free. Yes, but I am not so sure that we should have had those immortal letters. What a life Paul would have lived had he been free to do whatever he pleased, and to go wherever he liked! It is notorious that when a man is made a bishop his days become so crowded that it is a rare thing for him to produce his greatest books! And who knows but that if this great Apostle had had more temporary freedom we might have had less permanent fruit. Sometimes the Lord permits our seclusion in order that we may do a larger work. His merciful sight has long range, and that is why our immediate circumstances are often so contradictory to our aspiration and prayer. The Lord looks beyond the temporary bondage to the ultimate freedom.

"The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower."

—J. H. Jowett.

COMMENCEMENT AT MONTROSE.

Dear Brother Carley: The Mississippi Conference Training School, located at Montrose, closed on April 30, 1920, one of the most thorough and painstaking sessions, taking it as a whole, in the school's history, under the wise and capable presidency of the Rev. E. L. Alford.

The commencement sermon was preached Sunday, May 2, at 11 o'clock, by the Rev. M. L. Burton, of Port Gibson, Miss. He preached to a very large congregation, and his message was not below par excellent. Helpful and inspiring was the message of God's messenger to all those who heard him. It was great because it was calculated to help us to look upward and move forward to attain those higher heights along the pilgrim way in God's economy. He also delivered the address of graduation the following day at 10 o'clock to the class of 1920, which was composed of four lassies, who, we trust, will go from this institution of learning with their minds bent on making good in life's pathway as others have done. And following immediately the splendid address of Brother Burton, Brother Alford, the president, with a few appropriate remarks, awarded each one of the four young ladies a certificate of graduation in her literary work, and one of the class, Miss Fannie Hutto, with a certificate in music.

Let me say by way of parenthesis that if you want your son or daughter to do hard, honest and thorough work, send them to our school here. I have observed this fact, that President Alford is not satisfied unless all are hard at work, in every department.

In a meeting of the Separate High School Board on the evening of May 10, at Montrose, they re-elected Brother Alford to succeed himself for the ensuing term 1920-21. The Board showed their appreciation of his valuable service by a 25 per cent raise in salary; and the other teachers were raised in proportion with his.

From what we have been able to observe since coming this way to take charge of our work as the pastor here, we feel led to believe that this is the logical site for a school of this kind, and, as a church, we should bend every effort possible to make the Training School here a greater success in the future than it has ever been in the past. Blessings upon the future career of the school.

Your brother in Christ,

FROM PICKENS, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Thinking some of your readers would appreciate knowing "how we do" on the Pickens charge, I venture to write a few lines for the Advocate.

We have fine congregations, good Sunday schools, earnest missionary societies, good prayer meetings, and a splendid Sunday school Teachers' training class.

The preacher's salary is paid to date, and all the Conference assessments are paid in full.

Our Goodman church has had a problem for years in a church house that belonged to the Masons, half interest, Presbyterians, fourth interest, and Methodists, fourth interest. We have paid the Presbyterians $1000 for their interest, and are about ready to pay the Masons $1700 for their interest. We want either to build or remodel the house this year.

The spiritual interest of the charge is good—a very pleasant charge indeed. J. H. SMITH, Pastor.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

New Orleans District.

The district meetings are being held. Summer will soon be here, so the women must change the old adage and make hay before the sun shines. This last week the New Orleans District meeting was held jointly with the regular district conference of the church. More and more the work of the church is being blended into one. Men are now members of city mission boards and are taking a large part in missionary affairs. The men were interested before, but not in such a large way as has been manifest since our wonderful Centenary Movement has come and put them to work.

A report of the doings of the City Mission Board was given by Dr. King, the president. In a pleasing manner he mentioned the activities which were being promoted under the direction of the Board, and told of plans and hopes for the future. We believe that the mission work of New Orleans will expand and develop under this efficient Board, made up, as it is, of chosen men and women from all of the city churches.

The sermon at the noon-hour was preached by Rev. S. D. Roberts, of McDonoghville. An appeal was made to the congregation to lead such lives as could be blessed of God in a finer faith—a faith through which God could reach the sin-sick and suffering world.

Social Service was given an impetus when speakers, representative men of the city, and some of the women, presented the causes in which they were deeply interested. Among those presenting phases of social service work were: Dr. Oscar Dowling, on Heaith; Mr. Thompson, Federal Representative, on Enforcement of Prohibition; Mr. W. E. Thomas, city missionary, Rescue Work; Mrs. A. I. Townsley, Censorship of the Moving Picture; Mrs. Snelling, our Work for the Negro.

At the session held for the women alone, Mrs. J. D. Rumph, District Secretary, was in the chair. All reports from auxiliaries were good, showing splendid activity along most lines. The Pledge was taken by Mrs. R. H. Harper, conference vice president; when the amount from each auxiliary was summed up a larger figure was on the board than has ever appeared before.

We are glad to note the organization of two new Junior societies, one at First Church, New Orleans, the other at Bogalusa. No charge is fulfilling its mission in full unless it has a Junior Epworth League or a Junior Missionary Society. Yes, it is perfectly possible, and absolutely imperative.

The State President, Mrs. Niebergall, brought an interesting and timely message from the Council meeting so recently held at Kansas City. Isn't it fine to think about? The Women's Budget for 1920 is one million dollars!

How beautifully and cordially we were entertained by the pastor and the people of Rayne Memorial! There was a spirit of welcome radiating from the countenance of Dr. Foote, the pastor, as he gave greetings in behalf of the church. When the invitation was given to adjourn to the dining-hall a delicious luncheon was ready to be served by a corps of gracious women, adding much good cheer to the occasion. Bogalusa, begin right now to make ready for a large crowd next year.

Baton Rouge District.

PLEASE NOTICE THE NOTICE.

The district meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies, Baton Rouge District, will be held on Tuesday, June 22, at Franklinton. Let every society send delegates. Come with ideas and plans of work that have been most successful to your auxiliary, that all may exchange ideas and help make the day a great one for our Master's cause. Pray for this meeting.

Mrs. C. S. STEWART,
District Secretary.

Amite Women Go Visiting.

From Mrs. S. F. Turner, of Amite Missionary Society, comes news of a visit they made to Hammond. The day was beautiful, spring flowers and sunshine everywhere making the drive from Amite to Hammond a joy indeed. The Hammond women were gathered at the lovely home of Mrs. Robert McGehee to greet them, and together the two societies carried out an excellent program. Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. June, the two presidents gave the greeting and response, after which Mrs. Streak conducted the meeting. Prayer and hymns and a study of Japan, Korea and China made the program both inspirational and instructive.

Mrs. C. S. Stewart, District Secretary, was present and addressed the women. After congratulating the Hammond Society on its great success, she asked what reason could they give for their fine growth? In reply they paid a fine tribute to their pastor, Rev. Leon I. McCain, and it was also the concensus of opinion that the prosperous condition of both societies was due largely to the presidents. The social hour was spent on the lawn, where refreshments were served. When good byes were said and the drive home was begun, all were happy over the good fellowship they had found in a great cause, common to all.

Shreveport District Meeting.

The Shreveport District Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society, met in Mooringsport on Thursday, April 22, for an all-day session. Mrs. Woolworth, District Secretary, was in charge of the meeting. There was a large attendance, 24 societies being represented. Splendid talks were given on the work from each department, and valuable information was obtained. An interesting feature of the program was a demonstration of the need of missionaries, given by Mooringsport children. A bountiful dinner was served to all present by the ladies of Mooringsport.

The next meeting will be held at Bossier City.

YOUTH'S SUPREME SACRIFICE.

To yearning hearts that pray in the night
For solace to ease them of their pain
For those who will ne'er return again,
There shines in the darkness a radiant light—
A vision of service at God's right hand
For the noble, chivalrous, youthful band
Who gave up their all for God and the right.

God will repay what we owe to youth,
Youth that sprang at an empire's call,
Youth ready to give their all
For king and country, freedom and truth,
For love of home and a scathless hearth,
For all that ennobles this transient earth
Imperiled, o'ershadowed, by "woeful ruth."

—Rev. T. McWilliam, In "The Passing Days."

Where Drugs Fail

Many chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from Shivar Mineral Water. If you suffer from chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric acid poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood do not hesitate to accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer as printed below. His records show that only two in a hundred on the average, have reported "no beneficial results." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful spring. Simply sign the following letter:

Gentlemen:—I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and, if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

TO THE EPWORTH LEAGUERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

My Dear Fellow-Epworthians: The eighteenth annual session of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League will convene at Crawford Street Church, Vicksburg, at 8 o'clock p. m., June 15, and will adjourn with the evening service, June 18. A splendid program is being arranged, the topic of which is "Evangelism." We will have with us as visiting speakers: Miss Helen K. Boulware, Junior and Intermediate Superintendent for the entire conference and Field Secretary for the Central Office; Dr. T. A. Mathews, of Nashville, representing the Centenary; and Dr. T. E. Reeves, of Calhoun, Ga., representing the Central Office. We will also have for exhibition the pictures of the European and African fields and the Centenary Celebration; one set of these will be shown at the conclusion of each evening's service. The entire program will be announced later.

Social Entertainment.

The first evening there will be a social given by the local Leaguers; at 1:30 the second day an "auto ride" through the National Park; the last day at 1:30 a "boat ride" on the river.

Who Should Attend.

Each presiding elder, pastor, and president of each local chapter is a member of the Conference and should be present.

Each local chapter should send an enthusiastic delegation, and the churches where there are no Leagues should send two or more delegates, so as to get the inspiration, and when they return they will want to organize a chapter.

Please send the names of the delegates to Miss Louise Preston, care of Vicksburg Infirmary, Vicksburg, Miss., and free entertainment will be provided. Of course this includes the presiding elders, pastors, and presidents of the local chapters.

We have applied for reduced rates on the railroad, but definite announcement will be made later.

This promises to be the greatest gathering of young people in the history of our Conference. If you are there, you will be glad; if you miss it, you will be sorry. Yours sincerely,

W. D. HAWKINS,
Pres. Miss. Conf. Epworth League.

FROM TROUT AND GOOD PINE.

Dear Brother Carley: We closed a gracious revival last night, May 9. Beginning at Trout, April 4, we ran for three weeks; then moved the meeting to Good Pine, just a mile distant, and continued two weeks longer. The church has been revived and inspired, the community generally awakened, and a considerable number professed faith in Christ. We received into our church: unidentified Methodists, 8; by vows, 6; by baptism and vows, 21; total, 35. It is claimed that the largest crowds ever seen in church here, have attended the meetings.

Brother D. B. Boddie assisted us for ten days, and rendered very valuable service. We are greatly rejoiced, and are praising God for victory.

Fraternally,

A. M. SHAW, P. C.

PUBLIC HEALTH INFORMATION SERVICE ESTABLISHED BY A. R. C.

In spite of the fact that in many places hospitals, clinics, nursing service and literature on public health are available to the people, use is not readily made of these resources by the average person because he does not know about them or where he can obtain information in regard to them. The American Red Cross through its chapters, plans therefore to conduct a public health information service. The first service of this kind has been established by the New York County Chapter.

REVIVAL AT OAK RIDGE, MISS.

The revival services which had been running at high tide at Oak Ridge during the week preceding, came to a successful close on Sunday night, April 25, with evidences of a very fruitful meeting. The interest throughout the entire meeting was intense. The congregations were of surprising size and devotion. All seemed deeply interested. The results were indeed gratifying and encouraging. Some solemn confessions and resolutions were made. There were several accessions to the church and many were reclaimed.

Rev. W. T. Grillin, who did the preaching, is of solid piety, and is a high type of evangelistic preacher. Brethren, he will do to tie to and rely on. He preached for us a series of plain, simple, and heart-stirring sermons which commanded the attention of all his auditors. His gospel messages touch the tenderest places and stir the profoundest depth of susceptible human hearts. We are sincerely rejoiced because this season of refreshing has come from the presence of the Lord.

We are now striving to put our church work on a systematic basis, and to have the various departments to assume organized form, so as to conserve the spiritual fires kindled in the revival.

Brother John Chambers came to us in the interest of Sunday school work, and rendered faithful and memorable services on Sunday, May 2, thus coming at a very opportune time. I trust his strong appeals will go a long way toward developing and retaining a strong "after-war" church spirit.

Brethren, pray for us.

The Fiftieth Anniversary

Just fifty years ago this winter Dr. Pierce gave to the world his famous "Favorite Prescription" for the distressing weaknesses and complaints of women. For many years he had been in the active practice of medicine and his specialty was the diseases of women. Later he desired to give this to the public, and he received a trade-mark protection from the United States patent office for this medicine which is an herbal, "temperance" prescription with all the ingredients printed on the bottle wrapper. In his every day practice in the early days he also used a tonic and alterative for the blood, which was so universally beneficial that he determined to place this medicine in the drug stores of the United States, where it could be readily procured by the public. This he called his "Golden Medical Discovery," which he had prescribed many years for the stomach, liver and blood. Both these medicines met with instant success, and during the past half century have sold in greater quantities than any other proprietary medicines. Neither of Dr. Pierce's medicines contains alcohol and both are herbal extracts of native medicinal plants. For the past fifty years forty-eight million bottles have been used by the American public, and they are today the standard tonics for men and women. They are now put up in tablet as well as liquid form, and sold by every druggist in the land. A trial package can be obtained by sending 10 cents to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y. Write Dr. Pierce's if you want free confidential medical advice, or a free booklet on any chronic disease.

A BIRTHDAY DINNER.

On the 30th of March, in response to an invitation extended to me by my friend and brother, Elbert Robertson, and his good wife, to attend a dinner given in honor of their uncle, Rev. Ira B. Robertson, superannuate member of the Mississippi Annual Conference, whose home is at McNair, I ran over on the morning train and spent the day at that little village. I gathered during my stay that it was the wife of this good home that thought of making the heart of this saintly servant of the Most High as happy as it is possible for it to be made. Every touch of the home and the arrangement showed it was the work of loving hands planning to make some heart happy, every desire of which was fully realized. More than one hundred guests were present, with songs and music to suit by the young, prayer by the writer, and a very appropriate sermon by Rev. J. R. Jones, P. E. of the Port Gibson District. Other guests worthy of special mention were: Rev. G. M. Smyley, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Fayette; Rev. A. W. Duck, pastor of the Red Lick Presbyterian Church; and Rev. Claude Jones, pastor of the Methodist Church at Fayette.

After the dinner had been served to the large number of guests, a special table was prepared in the center of the large hall. A large, several-story cake, beautifully decorated with eighty little candles, was burning, indicating the number of mile-stones reached by the honored guest of the occasion. Seated with him at this table were the five other ministers.

The programme of this part of the service was put into the hands of Rev. Mr. Duck, who was very gracious and happy in the conduct of the service and made every one enjoy it very much. At this table dainty ices were served, and the big cake was cut; suitable speeches were made by each preacher; the young ladies sang suitable songs, and quite a number pinned bouquets on the coat of Brother Robertson, making him feel as young as in former days.

Many presents were in evidence, showing the appreciation and esteem of those who were invited, and many were sent by those who could not be present.

An event worthy of special mention, was the baptism of a grandchild of Brother Elbert Robertson, and the great-grandchild of Brother Ira, by Brother Jones, the presiding elder of this district. Brother Ira's face revealed the fact that he was a very happy man, and every one who added anything to the occasion was more than glad to do so.

Brother Robertson has been in the harness, as we preachers call it, for sixty years, and is as happy over it as if he were a millionaire. In all, I am sure that I do not know a man more honored and loved by all his brethren than Brother Robertson, and I count it a special honor to me to be able to claim him as one of my friends.

Brother Robertson has been one of the most effective preachers the Mississppi Conference has ever had. He has served a class of charges from the first that furnished the very best opportunity for a preacher of real evangelistic ability to do real constructive work for the Master's Kingdom. Many hundreds have been convicted and led to the Master to seek forgiveness of their sins; and hundreds have realized a conscious pardon and shouted the praises of a loving Lord under the ministry of this great and good man. His clear, ringing testimony at each session of the Annual Conference love feast furnishes one of the rarest treats of the occasion. Every time, for the last eighteen years since it has been my privilege to attend the Mississippi Conference as a member, his testimony reveals the fact that it is growing sweeter each step of the way, that the foundation upon which he has built, the rock upon which he stands is firm, and the Savior he has loved is more real each day.

My personal relations with Brother Robertson have been very dear, and we of our home count it a blessing to have him as a guest, to share the humble hospitality of the parsonage home. May he remain many years to attend the sessions of the Conference to give to it the benediction of his saintly life and the sweet fellowship of a friend of God. God bless you, Brother Ira; and when you do go over the way, to the house not made with hands, wait, not too far from the door; for your friends will come after you and greet you, and we will never break up that glad day and part and say good bye.

I must say that Brother W. P. Bailey, pastor of the Roxie charge and Brother Rohertson's pastor, was absent on account of sickness, which we all regretted very much. With this exception, the occasion was ideal.

For more than Forty Years
Cotton Growers have known that

POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effects on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

KAINIT

20 per cent MANURE SALT

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big Cotton Crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three
Standard GERMAN Potash Salts
that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

UNCONSCIOUS RECIPROCITY.

People are giving to and taking from one another all the time. In many cases, they are conscious of the exchange; but in many others, the best things—or the worst—are unconsciously given and unconsciously received. Our state of being is constantly being modified by the silent influences that are radiated by those with whom we come into contact, and our own characters, likewise, are making their impress upon the lives of those with whom we are thrown. We ought never to forget that "what we are speaks so loud that people cannot hear what we say."

VICE PRESIDENT MARSHALL AND THE SENATE.

Newspapers recently have given a good deal of space to the reported statement of Vice President Marshall before the Virginia Bar Association that "if prohibition had been considered by the Senate in secret session behind closed doors, not twenty votes would have been cast for it." The onemies of prohibition have seized upon this statement in support of their allegation that the prohibition measure was forced through the Senate by undue means. The statement, if true, implies a very poor opinion on the part of the Vice Presideut of the august body over which he presides. We frankly confess that we do not agree with him. If, however, it be true that the Senate would not have passed the measure if its members could have taken action without going on record, we must pay them the compliment of saying that they were willing to forego their personal preferences in their desire to act in accordance with the desires of their constituents. Tho vast majority of the people of this country want prohibition, and even the Senate would not dare to fly in the face of public opinion. In this connection, we quote the following editorial statement from The Type Metal Magazine, a publication representing one of the greatest business concerns of its kind in the United States: "John Barleycorn will never be revived. I talked with the sales manager of the largest paper company in the country the other day, and he said the efficiency of their selling force had increased 100 per cent since prohibition became effective. In my own city the agencies that take care of deserted mothers and children say that the number of cases they are called upon to handle has decreased 50 per cent. No matter how much any of us may want a drink, we can't meet the evidence that is piling up for prohibition."

WHO GETS THE PRAISE?

We are glad to learn, from newspapor accounts, that there is a marked downward teudency in the retail price of a great many commodities of everyday use. We do not know whether this tendency indicates a return to more normal conditions, or not—we most earnestly hope that it does—but it is interesting, and somewhat amusing, to note with what avidity various classes of our honorable citizenship seize upon the occasion to claim merit for themselves. The politicians and near-statesmen aver that, beyond the shadow of a doubt, the decliue of prices is due to their many investigations and proposed restrictive measures of legislatiou; the bankers claim that the result is due to their gentle but firm insistence that for the present credit shall be extended only for necessary enterprises—not for speculative holding of accumulated stocks; the retailers themselves, in many cases, claim that they are sacrificing legitimate profits from the motive of pure patriotism, being unwilling that their dear fellow-citizens should carry longer the almost unbearable load of exorbitant costs. We are perfectly willing—in fact, it affords us exquisite pleasure—to give credit to all to whom credit is due; but we cannot help wondering why it took the politicians such a long time to produce results, or why the bankers have suddenly discovered that they should no longer aid and abet the promoters of highly speculative enterprises by furnishing them with plenty of cash, or why the retailers have, all at once, become so responsive to the noble sentiment of patriotism. We do believe, however, that a little credit should go to the people themselves because they have discovered that they can get along very well without many of the things the purchase of which has enabled various and sundry firms and corporations to declare dividends at fabulous rates. It were altogether ungenerous to suggest that business, big and little, may have been animated by an eager yearning to "get from under" before the crash comes, instead of a most commendable spirit of altruism—but the people generally get what they are determined to have.

HIS OWN WAY.

The newspapers gave an account recently of a man in Mississippi who lost $4000 in cash when his house was destroyed by fire; he had been afraid to put his money in the bank, and had concealed it in a bedspring. This loss was the result of a man's failure to make use of the best available means of taking care of what he possessed. Depositors in Mississippi banks are guaranteed against loss by the State, and his money would have been perfectly safe in the keeping of those whose business it is to take care of what is entrusted to them. As we read of this incident, we sympathize with the loser while we condemn his lack of confidence in thoroughly sound financial institutions. But what about the man who undertakes to save his soul without committing it into the keeping of Him who alone is able to save? It is easy to imagine that our own way is best—until the catastrophe comes; then it is too late.

WHAT TITHING WOULD DO.

The following figures, based upon the investigations of Dr. W. B. Hollingshead, statistician of the Interchurch World Movement, are worth studying: The total amount raised by Protestant churches in America in 1918 for all purposes was $249,778,835; if two per cent of the members of these churches had an income of $5000 and tithed it, the tithe would amount to the whole sum raised; if four per cent had incomes of $2500 and tithed it, they could pay all the expenses of the churches as recorded in 1918, and the other 96 would not have to pay anything; according to Government statistics, the Alabama waitress is paid at the rate of 57 cents a day—the lowest wage recorded in the table—but if one in two of the registered Protestant church members gave a tithe of that, all expenses of 1918 would be paid, with a margin of $10,681,278. What would tithing as a general practice do? It would solve forever all the financial problems of the church.

PREACHING BY PUBLICITY.

Nothing else can, in our judgment, take the place of the spoken word in proclaiming the gospel of salvation. The world needs, and always will need, men who can stand before the congregation in the public service and, with compelling force, drive home the great truths of redemption. But as an auxiliary means of spreading the gospel, we do not know of anything that holds the promise of more usefulness than the proper employment of what has come to be called "publicity." People read the newspapers, billboards, and street car signs—and they remember much of what they read. Millions of dollars are spent every year in this country in advertising—and those who spend the money, evidently think it is a good investment. Here is a wide field into which the church might profitably enter.

AT EVENTIDE.

The stream is calmest when it nears the tide.
The flowers the sweetest at the eventide,
And birds most musical at close of day,
And saints divinest when they pass away.

Morning is lovely, but a holier charm
Lies folded close in evening's robe of balm,
And weary man must ever love her best.
For morning calls to toil, but night to rest.

She comes from heaven, and on her wings doth bear
A holy fragrance, like the breath of prayer;
Footsteps of angels follow in her trace,
To shut the weary eye of day in peace.

All things are hushed before her as she throws
O'er earth and sky her mantle of repose;
There is a calm, a beauty and a power
That morning knows not, in the evening hour.

Until the evening must we weep and toil,
Plow life's furrows, dig the weedy soil,
Tread with sad feet our rough and stormy way
And bear the heat and burden of the day.

O, when our sun is setting, may we glide
Like summer evening down the golden tide;
And leave behind us, as we pass away,
Sweet, starry twilight 'round our sleeping clay!

JUST TO BE THERE.

By Rev. John A. Rice, D.D.

Some years ago I heard Chaplain John Kelman, who succeeds Dr. Jowet in the great Fifth Avenue pulpit, say of the work of a chaplain in the army, "The greatest thing you can do is just to be there." I have wondered if that is not true of more phases of help than we are accustomed to think. When sorrow overtakes me, I want my friends to be there, but I do not want them to tell me they are there. Nor do I want them to say any conventional words of comfort. Silence is golden. My heart has bled more than once when somebody tried to tell me something with the very best intentions, something that would help me bear the ordeal through which I was passing. There is an inviolate area that surrounds every soul. Into that sacred precinct let no alien feet venture.

No man is equipped for the beautiful ministry of condolence who has not himself passed the way of grief. The noblest contribution any one can make to any situation is the preparation of a chastened and enriched life. Sympathy, broad, simple, tender, sensitive, is born of experience. The culture of the finer, more subtle, more delicate, more understanding heart is needful for all who would serve the suffering and turbulent souls of our brethren. No cost is too great that brings this equipment for living the love life.

This holds also in the whole region of trouble. The greatest thing we can do is just to be there. The saddest phase of the church's relation to economic problems is that we are not there. Our attitude to the question of industrialism is such that we are barred when trouble comes. Capital does not think we have any mission there; nor does labor welcome any sudden sympathy. Long-drawn-out touch with the human side of the whole question, touch that is personal, appreciative, courageous, ready to serve unto the uttermost is necessary. Surely there is some point of contact between the church and the forces that are tearing our world asunder! The common human rights of free speech, free assembly, free association for mutual protection and help, are this minute being denied our brothers in toil. These same brothers are also involved in unbrotherliness. Neither side is without blame. Somebody ought to be able to say to capital: "You cannot longer be an autocracy. Our boys fought to end the tyranny of one man over the many, and you must meet your brethren and talk over your differences with them. You cannot any longer shut the door in the face of those who seek conference. You belong to God." And somebody ought to be able to say to labor: "You cannot any longer be selfish, cruel, unbrotherly, seeking power without limit to be used without love. You belong to God." These things can best be said only by just being there. But we are not there. Methodism is facing a great opportunity in the race issue. Riots are everywhere. Suspicion is rife in the land. When these clashes come, we could be of great service by just being there. But we are not there. In our plans for reorganization there is a chance to get there It is important that the best element in the white race be in close touch with the best element in the colored race as we turn toward reconstruction. No serious harm could come of having a few Negroes in the great conferences, the conferences that determine issues. It were far better to be on the inside with them than that they should pull off and be organized apart without intimate relations with us. We must be in touch with their leaders. Their leaders must be in touch with us. We can then work out our problems with better understanding and better conserve the interests of the Kingdom of God. The highest welfare of both races in the South, where both are going to continue to live, demands cooperation not only in church life, but also in all other enterprises of mutual concern. The spirit of Christ is our guide. What would that spirit prompt us all to do? I do not think we need fear racial equality. That is utterly impossible from every standpoint. It is in no way a serious menace. The spirit of Christ recognized race distinctions and does yet. Can we be provincial, narrow, suspicious, and be Christian?

Times are coming in which it will be all important that we just be there.

THIRTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

By Rev. W. E. Arnold, D.D.

The Thirty-eighth Annual Meeting of the Board of Church Extension was held at the Church Extension Building, in Louisville, Ky., April 29-30, 1920. All but two of the members of the Board were present, and all the bishops were there except Bishop H. C. Morrison, who was detained at home by personal and family afflictions. Rev D. B. Price, having withdrawn from the ministry and membership of our church, tendered his resignation as a member of the Board. His resignation was accepted and Rev. A. P. Lyon, of the Louisville Conference, was elected to take his place. Dr. Lyon has been vice president of the Board, but resigned, and Mr. T. L. Jefferson was elected to this office

In many respects, the past year has been one of the very best in the history of the Board. Receipts from all sources to the Donation Fund Account amount to $667,041.92. All Conference Board funds are included in this total. The Loan Fund Capital is now $1,526,697.09. Of this amount, $331,069.45 has been added this year. Deducting the amount received from the Centenary Collections, $180,891.49 has come from the regular channels, which is nearly $10,000 more than the amount received in any one year before.

On account of the constantly increasing volume of business handled by the Board, it became necessary to increase the office force, and to do this, several changes had to be made in the organization of the Board.

The new office of Secretary of Loans and Insurance was created and the position was offered to Mr. T. L. Jefferson, for fourteen years president of the Board. His acceptance left the presidency of the Board vacant, and Bishop W. F. McMurry was elected to fill the vacancy. There was a general feeling that his intimate knowledge of the work, and long experience as secretary, qualified him to render invaluable service in this position. On account of pressing duties elsewhere, Dr. A. P. Lyon resigned as vice president, and Mr. Jefferson also takes this position.

The Executive Committee of the Board was enlarged from five to seven members. Bishop W. F. McMurry, by his election to the presidency of the Board, becomes ex-officio member of the committee. The By-Laws were amended so as to make the vice president also an ex-officio member. Rev. J. A. Baylor was elected as a member of the committee.

Much to the regret of all, the very efficient Secretary, Rev. H. A. Boaz, D.D., resigned the secretaryship. Rev. S. H. C. Burgin, D.D., pastor of First Church, Dallas, Texas, was elected in his stead. Dr. Boaz came to this office two years ago, and in every way proved himself the man for the place. He has shown great ability in the management of the affairs of the Board, great diligence and success in prosecuting the work, and has impressed the church everywhere as a man and as a preacher of the highest order. The Board passed the following resolution concerning him:

"In accepting the resignation of Dr. Boaz, we desire to go on record as appreciating the service he has rendered. His work, both in the office and on the field, has measured up to the standard set by his distinguished predecessors. He has proved himself in every way an efficient secretary and an able advocate of the cause of Church Extension. We pray that the largest possible usefulness may come to Dr. Boaz in the new field of labor to which he now goes."

The church has already been advised that Dr. Boaz resigned in order to accept the presidency of Southern Methodist University, at Dallas, Texas.

Dr. S. H. C. Burgin is a Missourian by birth. He entered the ministry in his native State, and after filling with marked success the most important charges in his Conference, he was transferred to Texas, where he has had almost phenomenal success as pastor and presiding elder. He is now serving his sixth year at First Church, which is the largest church in Texas Methodism. We see it stated that this church is preparing to build one of the greatest houses of worship in the whole South. Dr. Burgin comes to the secretaryship of the Board of Church Extension with every equipment necessary to brilliant administration of that office, and we are very sure he will make good here as everywhere else.

The applications for donations and loans this year are three times the amount at the disposal of the Board. Since the close of the war, we have entered upon a period of expansion and church building that is unprecedented. Four hundred and two churches and ninety-seven parsonages asked for donations aggregating $1,557,979.13, while one hundred and ninety-six churches and forty-five parsonages asked for loans to the amount of $1,716,650. Each of these sums is a million and a quarter more than was called for last year. Of course, it was not possible to grant all the applications made, or to give to each the amount requested. The Executive Committee had prepared a calendar, showing each place that had applied, with the amount of donation or loan requested, and recommending the amount that, in view of the limitations of the Board, should be granted. This calendar, together with several special applications, and the distribution of money received from the Centenary, were referred to a Special Committee, consisting of five members of the Board and the president and secretary, with instructions to go carefully over the whole matter, revise the list of recommendations, and report back to a called meeting of the Board at the earliest practicable date. This action was made necessary by the decision of the Board to administer the Centenary Funds separately from the regular funds. Of the one million dollars to be received from the Centenary collections for donation purposes, four hundred thousand will be used in the foreign fields, and six hundred thousand in the missionary territory of the home field.

A Department of Property Protection will be established as soon as conditions permit. The number and amount of loans made by the Board have grown until it has become necessary to provide a special secretary to look after their collection and the securities covering these loans. Both of these important departments will be in charge of Mr. T. L. Jefferson. The selection of Mr. Jefferson to this place was wise. He was also elected acting secretary until Dr. Burgin can take up his duties.

A STATEMENT.

To Local Centenary Treasurers and Pastors of the North Mississippi Conference:

Through oversight, the name of Dr. R. A. Meek, Presiding Elder of the Sardis District, was omitted from the statement prepared by the Presiding Elders and the Conference Centenary Cabinet of the North Mississippi Conference, and mailed to each local Treasurer and Pastor. The mistake was unpardonable and I very much regret it. Dr. Meek heartily endorsed the statement, and is very much interested in the collection of the Centenary pledges.

Yours very truly,

S. J. HIGH,

Conference Centenary Treasurer

OUR EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN IMPERATIVE.

By Rev. W. Winans Drake.

As much as I regret the necessity of disagreeing with the Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, whose editorial utterances are usually so sane and helpful, I feel bound to express my utter dissent from the series of recent utterances which have appeared proposing the postponement of the great educational drive ordered by the last General Conference. Aside from any discussion of the validity of the arguments adduced in favor of the suggestion, it seems to me extremely unfortunate to precipitate a public agitation on the eve of the proposed beginning of the campaign. In case the campaign is carried out, as under the order of the General Conference and the evident trend of the situation it is practically certain that it will be, such agitation can only have the effect of hampering and discouraging the movement in its beginning. Such propaganda, if widespread, would go far toward fulfilling the pessimistic prophecies of failure which are offered. It is certain that any private statement of reasons sufficiently convincing to necessitate postponement, would have been entertained by the Board and would have been as effective as public propaganda, without the hurtful effect of raising pessimistic suggestions in the public mind.

But as to the facts of the case: the General Conference, after careful deliberation, ordered the Educational Campaign to follow the Centenary. The Board of Education is not at liberty to disregard this order. Nor is any other loyal Methodist, bishop, presiding elder, pastor or layman, at liberty to oppose or discourage its consummation. The plea that an emergency has arisen prompts the question, What unforeseen contingency has come to pass since the General Conference? The plan was adopted deliberately, and in connection with the plans for the Centenary campaign for $35,000,000, which was ordered to precede it. So far as I can see, the only material changes in the situation which could not be foreseen are that we are enjoying a period of marvelous prosperity, and that the Centenary has given to the church a new and inspiring sense of power as the result of its success.

In no sense has the Centenary strained the resources of our people. In Louisiana, for instance, the largest contribution reported in the campaign was $2500, or $500 a year; and only four persons contributed as much as that. The conclusion is evident that the wealth of Methodism was not touched by the campaign.

If the psychology of successive campaigns is feared, we need only remind ourselves that the educational agencies of the church have never contemplated a drive for funds before the spring of 1921, a year from now. If a united and cooperating ministry, backed by the Board and its agencies, enters upon a campaign to lay upon the heart and conscience of Methodism the vital necessity of our educational institutions and of their adequate equipment, a year of such effort is sufficient to change the psychology of fear into a sense of sacred obligation.

In fact, the men of large means, out of the church as well as in it, will feel the appeal for educational institutions in their own communities and States more strongly than the less tangible appeal for world evangelization. It is inconceivable that an appeal for Centenary and Mansfield Colleges, for instance, to the Methodists and other citizens of Louisiana, enthusiastically promoted by our church press and the rank and file of our ministry, backed by the united and organized agencies of our entire Methodism, would not find very much larger contributions than any realized in our Centenary Campaign. Indeed, with proper preliminary cultivation, I feel sure that numbers of contributions of five and ten times that much will be found, especially when the donors feel that their contributions will be joined with others enough to place our institutions on a basis of real success. This more effective appeal to men of wealth will certainly outweigh any loss because of the fact that our smaller contributors are already pledged to their Centenary offerings.

If, on the other hand, the campaign should be postponed for two more years, it would be to invite disaster. Already our colleges and universities have been held back from campaigns to raise needed funds, by the fact of the Centenary campaign, and with the increased cost of everything, their needs are pressing and cannot wait. In fact in many instances, funds to meet these necessities have been borrowed on the faith of the coming campaign, trusting to the action of the General Conference and the loyalty of the church. If the campaign should be postponed, or if our people should take an antagonistic attitude, it would be little short of the repudiation of a debt, and would not only involve our colleges in disaster, but would bring shame to a great church.

And if we wait, who can say that conditions will be better or as good after the next General Conference? Such prosperity as has followed the depression of war is always followed again by periods of shrinkage. Who can say that in two years or three we will not be caught in the backwash of a financial depression that would be disastrous to all our enterprises? The time to make a forward movement is now.

Aside from the present financial conditions, this is the psychological moment to press for an advance in Christian education. Men are just beginning to see as never before, in the light of the gigantic failure of German secularism, the value of Christian ideals in education. This awakening sentiment ought to be cultivated and crystallized now into an adequate system of Christian institutions for leadership in education.

When the great Centenary campaign was first conceived, a year or so before the final drive, it seemed to most of us a beautiful dream. But a year of education and prayer and organization carried us beyond the dream itself. Now another task, just as sacred, involving, indeed, the completion of the Centenary plans, challenges us. The Christianization of the world demands Christian colleges in Louisiana as well as in China; adequately equipped universities in our Southland as well as in Japan; the training and developing of Christian leadership as well as the extension of the borders of the kingdom, and this challenge can only be met by a great body of more than two million Southern Methodists, growing in wealth and power, by adopting the spirit and motto that have inspired the great achievements of modern missions, "We can do it and we will."

"CENTENARY COMMISSION, M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH—FINANCIAL STATEMENT."

Dear Mr. Editor: Will you please give me a little space in the Advocate for just a few words? Every member in the M. E. Church, South, should feel constrained to congratulate himself or herself over the showing made in the exhibit of the Centenary Commission in your issue of April 29. This showing reveals one fact above all question, and that is that we have a capable, careful and business-like set of men at the head of this great movement whose wisdom and character can be trusted with the further management of the enterprise.

A word as to the Interchurch World Movement: I attended the conference that met in Jackson, in the early part of the year, and later I went to New Orleans. I went to these meetings to see and hear, and to learn all that might be possible about this great movement. I had read many things pro and con about it, and I wanted to know. I had seen the names of men and women against whom, I am sure, not the least suspicion could be held. I do not mean by this that they might not be mistaken in their judgment, for the best of us blunder sometimes. When I got fully informed on the movement and was able to form some idea, intelligently I can say that I am ready to participate in the movement, just as far as my church will officially recommend. I cannot read the 17th chapter of John's Gospel and pray in the spirit of that matchless teaching and then make a move against the Interchurch World Movement. It does not, in the least, propose to interfere with the present denominational lines; it does not propose to spend money raised in denominational bounds without the hearty co-operation of the denomination behind the movement; and it does not propose to originate of itself, any movement to raise funds in any section without the indorsement and co-operation of the denominations occupying that section. Now, if by counsel, co-operation and conservation of forces and agencies, the kingdom of God can be promoted and advanced, I, for one, will not cast anything in its way.

I believe that a wise participation in this great movement would bring to parts of the country, especially the South, much of the overflow benevolence that has accumulated in certain sections of the country, and that the South would be largely blessed by the movement.

I do not take this stand through any sectional feeling, with a desire to pull to the South any more than its just part of this wealth, but with a desire to see this movement hasten to final consummation the time, when in fact, this will be one nation, a great American republic, and when the riches accumulated in the East will be invested to lift up the South. I want it understood that I am not hankering after or coveting this wealth; but if we can get it in the right spirit, in the proper way and spend it for the general good, I am anxious to have it. This will do much to break down denominational rivalry in the unholy ambition to build at the expense of others, and be the means of sending one spirit of the right kind into all parts of the nation.

If our Board of Missions and Centenary Commission see that it is the thing to do, to contribute to the Interchurch World Movement, I for one shall not object, and I am sure that I will not reflect upon the judgment or integrity of those whom the church has put at the head of this great department of the church's work. They have managed it so well up to this time that I am willing to trust them to the end, or until they have shown themselves to be unequal to the task that has been committed to them by the General Conference.

W. H. SAUNDERS.

AN IMPORTANT STATEMENT.

Dear Brother: A meeting of the presiding elders and Centenary officers was held in Tupelo, April 28, for the Eastern side and Winona on May 6 for the Western side of the Conference. After going carefully into the matter of the collection of the Centenary pledges in the Conference, it was determined that a statement should be made to our pastors and churches.

First—We feel that every pastor and church ought to know that we are falling behind seriously in the matter of the payment of the pledges we have made. Two payments are now past due, and we lack much of having completed one full payment as yet. Some churches are doing reasonably well, but others have done very little. We do not undertake to fix blame, but we feel that the fact ought to be put upon the heart and conscience of every Methodist in our territory.

Second—To remedy this we urge that a systematic effort be made whereby every subscriber shall be personally solicited for the amount now due, and that this matter be attended to at once. We call the attention of our pastors and treasurers to the "Church Cabinet" as provided for in the conservation program of the Centenary Commission, and we commend its use unless it is clearly impossible because you have a better one. But whatever be the method employed, let us collect the unpaid pledges NOW.

Third—We ask that our pastors use such report blanks as may be sent to them for making prompt and accurate reports, so that we may know what progress we are making, and what our needs are. We ask that Church Treasurers make regular and prompt remittance of all moneys on hand, sending it to Mr. S. J. High, Treasurer, Tupelo, Miss., and that they be sure to give the name of the charge and the local church from which it comes.

We make this appeal to you with a firm belief that a failure in this matter would mean not only humiliation, but absolute defeat for enterprises ahead of us, and our undoing as respects all benevolence. We MUST not fail. We look to you to bring things up in your field.

WHY SOME OPPOSE UNION.

By Rev. H. Walter Featherstun, D.D.

We have no right to question any one's motive; but if he clearly states his motive, we must accept his statement and may deal with his motive. Some tell us that they oppose union with Northern Methodism because they remember the events of 1844. That a Christian should say such a thing amazes me. It means that he charges our Northern brethren of the '40's with bad motives, and that he will not forgive them. Our Lord said: "If ye forgive not men their tresspasses, neither will your Father forgive your tresspasses." But it is suggested: "He does not ask my forgiveness for the wrongs of 1844." Our Lord puts no such condition there. "Oh," says one, "I can forgive, but I cannot forget, and I fear they of the North have the same spirit yet, and will wrong us again." There is not alive to-day a single participant in the events of 1844; and if there were, how dare any Christian to doubt the sincerity of the Northern Methodist who would seek brotherhood and amity with us? Our Lord said: "Judge not"—i. e., Do not impugn a brother's motive. Paul says: "Love is not provoked, thinketh no evil." When one uses this argument against Methodist unification, he simply confesses that his own motives are very bad—utterly out of harmony with the Christian spirit. In saying this I do not impugn his motives—he has stated them. I do not even suggest that others may oppose union for other reasons—I am dealing only with these very unchristly reasons, and these loveless reasoners. I am profoundly palned that any Southern Methodist should have objected to unification on these grounds.

Others object to unification because they profess to fear social equality with the Negro, or an attempt by the Negro to secure through this church relation such equality. I do not question the motive of those who thus contend, but I insist that fifty years of freedom from slavery have demonstrated that the American Negro, though a child race, has proved himself to be a docile, respectful people, submissive to the higher race; and that the Christian Negro may be trusted to give the white Methodists no trouble. Should he ever change and become troublesome, his numbers are too few and his strength so inferior to the white man's that the danger would be insignificant. To one who has been reared in the South and remembers well the times of African slavery and the "reconstruction period" that followed the Civil War, this fear of Negro trouble in the church appears a ridiculous bogey.

Whether we intended it or not, this distrust of these simple-minded, true-hearted Christians of a child race is bitterly unkind. "Love is kind."

"Holy Father, keep them in thy name which thou hast given me, that they may be one, even as we are. * * * Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one, * * * that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." So prayed the Christ; can any of us refuse to respond, Amen!

THE JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Jackson District Conference convened in the Methodist Church at D'Lo on the evening of May 10, with the Rev. J. M. Morse, presiding elder, in the chair. After the election of a secretary and an assistant secretary, announcement of committees was made and the Rev. S. F. Harkey preached the opening sermon.

Tuesday was given to the Sunday School Institute work. The Rev. H. F. Tolle led the devotions and the Rev. G. G. Yeager closed the work of the Institute with a sermon in the evening. The messages of the day were rare in their helpfulness. Effective appeals were made for the proper training of the youth of our church.

The work of the conference began Wednesday morning. The presiding elder conducted the devotional services, which were not of the conventional type so often given us. The vivid picture of a lost soul and a Christ ready to save, with an earnest appeal, stirred the hearts of men to a more intense searching for the lost among men.

Prof. A. P. Hamilton, of Millsaps College, rendered valuable service to the conference in conducting the song service and the inspiring messages in the solos which he sang with such effect upon the conference.

The Rev. Daniel Dukes came to us from another branch of the Methodist Church and was recommended to the Annual Conference for recognition of his Deacon's Orders.

Brandon was chosen as the next meeting place of the District Conference.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: C. L. Ray, Mrs. J. M. Morse, Mrs. H. F. Tolle, J. A. Lindsey, W. H. Till, H. O. Middleton, A. P. Hamilton, and G. P. Cook.

The Rev. J. M. Morse is finishing his fourth year on the district and this is proving to be one of his best years in the work of the kingdom. Under his capable leadership the district has moved forward with many marks, signs and appearances of better things. The preachers of the district are happy in the rich reward of association with such a brotherly spirit as comes around once a quarter to cheer and inspire them. The conference attempted to express its appreciation of the faithful services rendered by this servant of the church by presenting to him a gold watch. This presentation was a real feature of the conference.

The host of the conference, the Rev. J. L. Smith, and his good people made the visit of every one quite pleasant. Everything was done for the comfort of the visitors that could have been done. Every desire seems to have been anticipated. Prayer must have been made by that church for a good conference, for indeed the Spirit was there. A really spiritual benediction came upon the entire gathering.

The Rev. J. W. Chisholm preached Wednesday morning, the Rev. C. W. Crisler in the evening and the conference closed Thursday at noon with a sermon by the Rev. C. C. Evans.

JOHN W. CHISHOLM,
Assistant Sec'y.

HOLLY SPRINGS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

On Tuesday afternoon, May 11, the Holly Springs District Conference convened at Holcomb, Miss., Rev. J. H. Holder, P. E., presiding. Rev. R. G. Lord was elected secretary. The attendance during the session of the conference was good. Under the able leadership of the efficient presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Holder, the work of the kingdom in this district has been highly successful.

The reports of the preachers in charge showed progress along many lines. The finances are as well in hand as any previous year. Some old debts have been and are being paid off, while new church projects are on in different places. The district is doing its part toward the Methodist Hospital at Memphis. In most of the charges the preachers' salaries have been advanced and are paid up to date. This district is making an unusual effort to collect the Centenary pledges and they are being collected, realizing that the church cannot prosper and the spiritual life of the church be kept up as long as the members repudiate this honest pledge.

Bates Benson, a bright, consecrated young man from Water Valley, was licensed to preach.

The following were elected lay delegates to the Annual Conference: Rev. R. M. Papasan, Lester G. Fant, A. W. Milden, D. H. Bishop, B. S. Elliott, Robt. Sharp, Mrs. A. W. Stokes and Mrs. C. T. Floyd. P. P. Critz and A. M. McClarty were elected alternates.

Coffeeville was selected as the next place of meeting of the conference.

Mrs. L. G. Fant and Rev. R. H. B. Gladney very helpfully represented the Sunday school work. Their addresses were inspiring and at the same time astounding in the facts presented. Much good is being done in the district by Institutes which are being held in many places, and the graded lessons are being used in many of the schools, even in the one-room country churches. The preachers and laymen of the district are highly in favor of the Sunday School Workers' Training School to be held at Grenada College in August, and are looking forward to it with a great deal of pleasure.

In the missionary work this district is making great strides. Under the efficient leadership of Mrs. A. W. Stokes, this district led all the Conference and this Conference led the entire church in the matter of new organizations of Woman's Missionary Societies. The district took high rank in other phases of the Woman's Work. Plans were laid for the development of the mission territory within this district.

Other interests of the church were represented by Dr. M. M. Black, Millsaps College, Dr. Robt. Selby, Emory University; Dr. T. H. Cummings, Memphis Hospital; Mrs. M. L. Riley, Orphanage; G. L. Jones, Conference Lay Leader; Rev. B. P. Jaco, Centenary Commissioner; Rev. G. A. Baker, Conference Evangelist.

Dr. R. S. Stewart, one of our missionaries to Japan, who is now representing the Centenary interests, did the preaching at the morning and evening hours. Under his masterful messages the souls of all who heard him were truly refreshed, for he fed them upon the real bread of the Gospel. Happy were the hearts that listened to him from time to time.

The kind hospitality of the good people of Holcomb could not be excelled. Their hearts and homes were open to all, and the people and the faithful pastor, Rev. W. M. Langley, were untiring in their efforts to make our stay pleasant; that they were successful was shown in the fact that the Conference adopted by a unanimous standing vote a resolution of appreciation for their many favors.

MILD SURPRISES.

By Rev. O. W. Bradley.

The greatest stir, doubtless, since 1844—and not 1860-1865 as some seem to think—caused the division in American Methodism, is on. Well, I tremble, but I am not afraid. I am comforted for at least two reasons: I think 6,000,000 Christian men and women can solve it right, and I also believe God is in it. Some thought Wesley's movement was of the devil, but Methodism is the answer; some thought Luther's movement was of the same origin, but the Reformation refuted the accusation. I think God is in the Interchurch Movement, though I cannot see the matter as clearly as I would like. I cannot say "God was not in the world war," or God has deserted Mexico. I know God hasn't deserted Methodism.

I am for unification on the basis of the proposed Constitution of our Commission which is now before the General Conference of the M. E. Church for consideration. The M. E. Church in the next few days can amend it so I would vote against it, but as it is, I am for it. I am not asking space, Mr. Editor, to write on the advantages of Unification—it has been done by better hands—but I feel constrained to note some surprises. A friend, once in Congress, said, "The greatest surprises of my debates in Congress were the objections given to any argument or proposals of mine"—the surprises of mental attitudes and angles.

Some mental apparitions are as follows:

1. I have found a few, only a few, who allow themselves to be wrought up, almost to anger, and question men's motives. Can men not differ and not get mad, question one another's motives, or become intolerant? There may be a few who can't, and it is far better to be only "on speaking terms" with them than to be unchristlike in conduct.

2. Some seriously contend, "That people are not going to be consulted in this matter. I am for the people who haven't 'a say!'" I am too. I don't want "a few fellows to put it over." I have been wanting for a year to cast my vote for the League of Nations, but I have to do it through my Congressman and Senator. If our church Constitution doesn't guarantee the individual the "say," then, up to this hour, that is the strongest argument I have seen for a revision of our own church's constitution or for unification, with the hope of putting in such a guarantee in the new Constitution of a united church.

3. Some say they are going to quit if unification comes. Hasty! When your property goes and a handful is left out as quitters, are you going to finance this new church from top to bottom, or, after reconsideration, going to stay on with the united church, and live out its treasury depleted by appealing to prejudices? We have a right to oppose, but I have always questioned secession. It is said if Union comes, there will be in Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama and South Carolina a loss of 150,000 members; but if we do not unite, there may be a 300,000 loss or more. Where are we?

4. The negro status. This is not a surprise to be noted, only as it is discussed. The negro status has been, and perhaps always will be, the problem in all Southern social, political and religious life. It is a great problem. I am glad the church as well as politics is trying to help in the solution of it. My only statement to make here relative to the negro in the new church is, can those who object to the proposed provision suggest a better way than this article provides, in justice and truth? It is declared that according to this plan the white congregations will be endangered by negro invasion. The Negro Regional Conference "is bounded solely by color line; he must cease to be a negro and become a white man before he can make the change"—come into our congregations.

5. There are objections to the Regional Conferences of a nature that surprises us. Twelve months ago we said, "Guarantee us our autonomy, and I'm for it." Can you suggest a better guarantee? There are, I believe, 48 States in this Union, and are not the individual State's guaranteed the management of their affairs, or have we suffered in this respect? The North nor East nor West has never outvoted us, or swallowed us to our destruction. I don't believe that the great M. E. Church, with her program of salvation embracing the earth, will turn upon her brothers of the South, even if she had balance of power, and destroy us.

6. This is a surprise! There are those who find not one single fault with the proposed Constitution, but begin at the top and object all the way down to the last article in it, and then don't say "I am against any kind of Union!" I heard a gentleman say some time ago, "The only way I would favor union, is to let them come over and join us." I replied, "Then, when they got in, having no agreement, they might out-vote you to your hurt." Yet, I don't believe they would do that if they had the power.

Yes, on this proposed basis, I am for unification. Some one remarked since this world war had shocked him, "I haven't lost my faith in God, but I have in man." I haven't lost my faith in man, yet. If the union of these two greatest streams of Christian influence on earth fails to become a reality, I shall remain in the M. E. Church, South, gladly; if it comes, I shall go gladly; I shall not quit. I go gladly because as a Government we get along together as North and South well. Commerelally, socially and politically we deal with one another to mutual advantage. Then, because I am a democrat, if the majority of the Annual Conferences and the majority of the General Conference delegates vote for it, I will abide by their decision and if I had to I would surrender my personal wishes in the matter. If the majority of the Methodists of the South can live in the united church, I can live better with them than on the outside.

Then, again, because I see great good to come from it.

A SAD BEREAVEMENT.

Dear Brother Carley: Our brother, A. S. Brisco, pastor of the Winona circuit, is greatly bereaved to-day. His wife died last night about midnight at the Winona Infirmary. Sister Brisco underwent an operation Saturday, the 15th inst., but never really rallied from the shock. She leaves four children and her good husband in her home to endure the sorrow and loss of a mother and wife. Let prayers be offered for our brother in his great affliction.

THE JOY-MAKER.

By Willie C. Page.

I do not know who the laddie was,
As he went whistling along the way,
With now and then a nod—a bow—
A hand-clasp, or a "Pleasant day."

To children on their way to school,
To friend and comrade each a smile;
To strangers and passers-by he gave
A friendly, cheer-making joy the while.

Won't you be a joy-maker, too?
Scattering gladness as you go?
O, children dear, begin to-day,
If a life of happiness you would know.

A RAINY DAY STORY.

There was a great rustling and stamping and slamming of doors in the basement. Mrs. Jewett, who was visiting the Lawrences, looked up from her work and exclaimed: "What can that be?"

"Only May coming in from school," answered Mrs. Lawrence with a smile. "She can make as much noise on a rainy day as any boy."

Even so it proved. In a few minutes up came May, face wet and glowing from encounter with wind and rain, crimps which had ceased to be crimpy, skirts pinned up, waterproof and rubber boots in hand. "Here I am, mamma," she cried.

"Did you get wet, May?"

"No, indeed; I couldn't, all bundled up so. It was fun. I don't see what people did, though, before the days of waterproofs. The children must have stayed at home on stormy days, of course."

"Do you think so?" asked grandma from her corner. "I never did, for one. When I was four years old, I went to a district school two miles away, but I think I was scarcely ever absent in summer, rain or shine."

"Oh, what a brave little grandma'" cried May, curling down on the rug before the fire. "Tell me how you managed it; please do. I should think you must have taken cold, getting so wet."

"We had a way," said her grandmother. "You know, few children ever wore shoes and stockings then, except to church; but as we were the minister's family, our mother thought it proper that we should wear them. When the roads were muddy, however, or very dusty, we used to roll up shoes and stockings in a bundle with a towel or two, and trot along in our bare feet to school. It wouldn't do to soil such expensive things as shoes, for one pair had to last a year, at least, and then be handed over to the next younger child. The older boys and girls would take turns in carrying the little ones over hard places, and a two-mile walk was not much for country children. Then, when we reached the schoolhouse, we would wipe our feet on the towels, put on our stockings and shoes, and be all right again. When it really snowed or rained, the fun was better still. If we were caught in a storm, our great tip cart, with a load of bedquilts, would be seen driving up about the time for school to close. 'Come, children, in with you!' would be the cry; and we, five or six of us, with perhaps twice the number of neighbors' children, would stow ourselves away upon the quilts in the bottom of the cart, have one or two 'comforters' spread over us and tucked in at the sides, and then set off for home. What frolics and giggling there would be in the dark, under these quilts, as the old cart jolted over the stones and shook us all together in a merry heap! Along the way we would stop at this house and that; the ends of the quilt would be lifted, and out would crawl some rumpled traveler. When at last we were at home again, the hired man would take us out—quilts, children, and all, in a squirming bundle—and deposit us on the kitchen floor, to straighten ourselves as best we could. It was better fun than you get in these days, May," ended grandma, laughing heartily at the recollection.

May laughed, too, as she answered, jumping up: "I declare, grandma, you make me wish I'd been a centennial girl."—Illinois Christian Weekly.

DON'T LOOK BACK.

By Dr. Frank Crane.

A woman was crossing a crowded city street. She happened to think of something, stopped and turned back. The traffic policeman caught her, not very gently, by the arm, and said:

"Say, lady, don't do that! Ever. When you're a-crossin' the street you gotta keep on goin'. Don't look back. Nobody gets hurt that keeps movin', regular. It's people that change their mind that get run over."

Wherein is much sound sense, applicable not only to crossing the street, but also to crossing life, which has been called "a narrow isthmus between two eternities."

It is looking back that makes the nagging woman. The best-loved women are the good forgetters.

It is looking back that gives timidity, hesitation, indecision.

"And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought."

Remorse, despair, self pity, and the whole morbid brood of man-eating worms that infest the human soul and gnaw away triumphant courage are bred by looking back.

Go ahead! Keep your chin up! Eyes forward! For only the future is yours. The past is God's, let him attend to it!

The prizes of the world await the forward-minded man. The love of the world is for the forward-minded women.

What if you did break your blue tea-set, little girl; what if you did do a thoughtless act of folly, young man; what if you did weakly and humanly step aside, woman; what if your last business venture failed, merchant; what if you did do wrong, make mistakes and all that, O everybody? Never mind! Don't look back!

"I haven't time to get even with men who have injured me," said Paul Morton.

When Edison's factory burned, and the reporters interviewed him next morning, they found him busy with plans for a new building.

Fear looks back, courage looks forward. Sorrow looks back, joy looks forward. Failure looks back, success looks forward.

A blind and deaf man could walk down Fifth Avenue at 5 o'clock in the afternoon and not one of the thousand automobiles would touch him, if he kept on going at an even pace.

Don't look back!

TWO PENNIES.

Dwight jingled the two pennies that his father had given him as he felt them in his pocket. Then he took them out and looked at them. They were just alike; each was made of bright copper, they were of the same size, and each had a picture of an Indian on one side.

"One lollipop, please," Dwight said as he went into the store and laid one penny down on the counter. "And one pencil," he added, laying the other penny down.

So that was the end of Dwight's pennies, but not exactly.

The lollipop began going at once, and in a very short time it was all gone. The pencil, which was made of lead and very useful, went to work.

It made ever so many pictures to give Dwight pleasure on a rainy day. It went to school with him and wrote such a fine composition that it earned him a high mark. Then it wrote some neat labels, with Dwight's help, for mother's canning jars. She said that they would last as well as inked labels, and she gave Dwight five cents for helping her so much.

If those two pennies could have talked things over, which penny, do you suppose, would feel as if it had amounted to something in the world?—Exchange.

Editorial

THE TEST—A THREE-MINUTE TALK.

The test of Christian character is the ability to stand fast in the face of temptations, opposition, and bitter persecution. It is not often in the homeland that individual Christians are put to such severe test; but on the mission fields it is not unusual for a profession of faith in Christ to involve the loss of all that men are accustomed to hold most dear.

In carrying forward and extending the operations of our missionary agencies in the foreign field, made possible by the success of the Centenary Movement, native converts in increasing numbers are coming into our churches. The question naturally arises, therefore, Are these recruits from heathenism actuated by the high and holy principles of the Gospel, or are they making their profession for the sake of some material benefit? Upon the answer to this question depends the opinion we must form as to the value of missionary work in general. Is Christianity really making progress in the benighted lands where we are sending some of our most consecrated men and women to spend their lives in a glorious but self-sacrificing service?

There is but one answer: one of the shining pages in the history of the progress of Christianity is made up of the record of the supreme devotion of converts in the mission fields. Take China, for instance. When the "Great Persecution" arose during the Boxer Movement, hundreds of native Chinese Christians gladly laid down their lives rather than deny the faith they had professed, though a recantation would have insured their personal safety. There were some who proved to be weak, of course, just as some American Christians would have proved; but the great majority stood steadfast in the faith. When Chang Po-ling was converted, he was at the head of a great Government college in Tientsin; but he gave up that high position in order that he might devote himself humbly to the work of his Lord. Chinese business men have, time after time, given up lucrative employment in order that they might become local preachers at $7.50 a month. Social ostracism and family persecutions are patiently endured by thousands of Chinese converts as the price of allegiance to Christ.

The Gospel is indeed the power of salvation unto those who believe, in foreign lands just as in our own. We can make no better investment of our money than by sending this Gospel to those who are living in heathen darkness.

THREE GREAT ENTERPRISES.

It so happens that each of our three Conferences is engaged at the present time in promoting an enterprise within its own bounds, each of which deserves the most cordial encouragement and support on the part of all our people.

In the North Mississippi Conference, the great Methodist Hospital enterprise is being placed upon the hearts and consciences of the people. A vigorous movement is under way to secure the funds with which this most commendable undertaking may be carried to completion and its equipment adequately provided for. It is gratifying to know that the campaign is meeting with success, and that the indications now are that the entire amount needed will be forthcoming.

In the Mississippi Conference, a campaign is likewise under way to raise $500,000 for a Methodist Hospital at Hattiesburg. The forces have been thoroughly organized under a competent director, and good progress is being made in disseminating information and securing pledges. It is a cause for congratulation that the church is awakening to a realization of the importance of making provision for ministering to the sick and afflicted, and that we are to have at an early date ample facilities under our own auspices for meeting all requirements.

In the Louisiana Conference, a great campaign is being conducted for the purpose of securing $500,000 to enlarge and modernize the Methodist Orphanage at Ruston. This institution has made a notable record in the kind of work in which it is engaged, and its need of additional funds is so well recognized that it is anticipated that a generous response will be made to its appeal, not only by Methodists, but also by many to whom the care of orphan children is a sacred trust. It is confidently expected that the entire amount needed will be contributed during the progress of the campaign.

We heartily endorse all these great enterprises and commend them to the liberal support of those to whom they make their appeals. We can but feel that the successful completion of these undertakings will mean much, not only for the physical welfare of those to whom we should minister as a church, but also for the spiritual quickening of those whose hearts are stirred by the generous impulse to make possible such unselfish service.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE AT DES MOINES.

The daily newspapers in this territory are giving such unsatisfactory reports of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, now in session in Des Moines, Iowa, that we are dependent almost altogether upon the Daily Christian Advocate for information. The Daily Advocate, of course, gives the proceedings in full, but we receive it the third day after publication—not early enough for us to give the latest information in the current issue of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

At the time when this is written (Monday morning), there has been, so far as we have seen, no report from the special committee on unification. From the Western Christian Advocate, we take these words, written by the editor, Dr. E. C. Wareing: "The plan submitted by the Commission is now in the hands of a carefully selected committee, which is having its troubles that multiply more and more. It is understood that many modifications will be made upon and reservations presented in supporting it. Then it is also rumored that a minority report will be presented as a substitute for all before the house, and that this plan will call for a form of organic union that should appeal to all sensible and unprejudiced men. * * * At present, however, no one can predict the outcome of the proposed plan for Methodist unification." Since the General Conference has voted to adjourn on Thursday, May 27, at 12:30 o'clock p.m., the matter will be decided by the time this issue of the Advocate is in the hands of its readers.

After considerable discussion, the Conference decided to elect seventeen general superintendents at this session. The office of missionary bishop was abolished, and the present incumbents of that office, Bishops Frank W. Warne, John W. Robinson, and Eben S. Johnson, were unanimously elected general superintendents. Twelve additional white general superintendents were elected, as follows: L. J. Birney, F. B. Fisher, C. E. Locke, E. L. Waldorf, Edgar Blake, E. G. Richardson, C. W. Burns, H. L. Smith, G. H. Bickley, F. T. Keeney, C. L. Mead, Anton Best.

Two Negro general superintendents were elected, as follows: R. E. Jones, editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate, published in New Orleans, and M. W. Clair. The Negro general superintendents were elected without any restrictions upon their powers, but with the expressed understanding that they would preside only over Conferences of their own race.

As to other elections, the following is the latest information we have: Publishing Agents (three to be elected), J. H. Race, E. R. Graham; Secretaries of the Board of Foreign Missions, F. M. North, S. Earl Taylor; Secretary of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, D. D. Forsyth; Secretary of the Board of Education, A. W. Harris; Secretary of the Board of Sunday Schools, W. S. Bovard; Secretary of the Board of Conference Claimants, J. B. Hingeley; Secretary of the Epworth League, C. E. Guthrie; Secretaries of the Freedmen's Aid Society, I. Garland Penn, P. J. Maveety.

We hope to give, as soon as the facts are available, a brief resume of the important actions taken by this epoch-making General Conference.

ACTION ON UNIFICATION.

We open the forms to insert the following press report of the action of the General Conference of the M. E. Church concerning unification:

"The report of the committee on unification with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was adopted by the Methodist Episcopal General Conference in session here twenty minutes after it was presented.

"The report provides for the organization of a joint convention with representatives of the Methodist Church, South, for the purpose of formulating new plans for unification upon a basis which will be satisfactory to all members of both churches. It reiterates that in its present form unification is not agreeable to a large number in both churches."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. C. F. Sheppard, our pastor at Haughton, La., preached the Commencement sermon for the High School at that place on last Sunday.

Rev. Standifer Raper, of Coldwater, Miss., has the pleasure of preaching to large congregations, Sunday, May 9, being especially notable because of the attendance at both morning and evening services.

Rev. P. H. Howse, of Prentiss, Miss., recently assisted Rev. W. M. Porter in a meeting at Grafton, Miss., where a church was organized with twelve members, seven by certificate and five on profession of faith.

Mrs. M. E. Sewell, of Bunkie, La., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate for another year, says that she has been reading the paper since childhood, and that it has become an important part of the home-life.

Rev. O. S. Lewis, the pastor, is being assisted this week in a meeting at Gibson Memorial Church, Vicksburg, Miss., by Rev. J. V. Bennett, one of the Mississippi Conference evangelists. A great revival is in prospect.

A note from Rev. H. W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference, written from Clanton, Ala., where he was assisting his brother, Rev. E. C. May, in a meeting, indicated that the prospects were good for a great revival.

Rev. H. B. Vandenburg, the pastor, has recently organized an Epworth League at Standard, La., with 57 members. The good results of the meeting at Standard a short time ago, in which the pastor was assisted by Rev. D. B. Boddie, of Rochelle, La., abide.

We acknowledge the receipt of a printed program of the Corinth District Conference, to be held at Myrtle, Miss., June 1-3. Rev. W. W. Mitchell, the presiding elder, has prepared a most attractive bill of fare for the occasion. Rev. W. A. Wilson will be the conference host.

It was with great sorrow that we learned of the recent death of Brother A. P. Holt, one of the most consecrated and active members of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to all those who have been bereaved by his going away.

Mr. Jeff B. Marmon, of Memphis, Tenn., spoke three times in the Methodist Church at Como, Miss., Sunday, May 16. The afternoon service was for men especially, dealing with topics in which all good citizens should be interested. Rev. R. P. Neblett is our progressive pastor in that goodly town.

At its recent meeting in May, the Board of Finance passed felicitous resolutions regarding the work of the Methodist Benevolent Association. While it was not deemed wise to merge the Association with the Board at this time, an attitude of considerate friendliness to the work of the Association was pledged.

All delegates and visitors to the North Mississippi Epworth League Conference, to meet at Corinth, Miss., June 1-3, are requested to notify Miss Adeline Peeples, at Corinth. It is earnestly hoped that all ministers interested in the Conference will make due announcement of it to their Leagues and congregations.

Rev. V. C. Curtis, presiding elder of the Greenville District, North Mississippi Conference, recently assisted the pastor in a meeting at Lyon, Miss. While very few are out of the church in that community, there was much good accomplished within the membership. This is oftentimes the most successful kind of revival that can be had.

Rev. A. Inman Townsley, pastor of Felicity Church, this city, received the distressing news on Monday morning of this week of the sudden death of his brother, William J. Townsley, in Chicago. His home was in Memphis, Tenn. Our sincere sympathy is extended to Brother Townsley and other members of the family in their great sorrow.

Happy is the preacher who has good congregations both morning and evening. We therefore congratulate Rev. E. H. Cunningham, of Kosciusko, Miss., where this most encouraging condition prevails. It is gratifying to know that the evangelistic spirit is being felt in this congregation, and that members are being received into the church.

Dr. U. G. Foote being at Mansfield, La., for the Commencement exercises of the College, the Rayne Memorial pulpit on last Sunday night was filled by Dr. Jno. T. Sawyer. He reports as being present a good summer congregation, and that the best of attention was given his message. The Rev. Jno. H. Stafford read the Scriptures, and led in a most fervent prayer.

Our Sunday school at Clarksdale, Miss., is one of the best organized and most efficient of which we have any knowledge. Under the superintendency of Brother Ellington Fant and his assistant, Dr. C. E. Taylor, it is doing a great work in the community. A splendid write-up of this school and its work appeared in a recent issue of the Clarksdale Daily Register.

The Epworth League at Lake Charles, La., celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary with a banquet on Tuesday evening, May 11, in the church parlors. A large company was present, and a most interesting and appropriate program was given. A paper on "League Reminiscences," written by Miss Evelyn Price and read by Mrs. A. M. Mayo, was printed in full in the American-Press of May 12.

Rev. Lastie N. Hoffpauir has been appointed pastor at Amite, La., in place of Rev. T. H. Mills, who was released at his own request. Brother Mills is now engaged in representing the interests of the Memorial Home, of New Orleans, an institution under the auspices of our church which is doing a great work in behalf of unfortunate girls. His present field of labor is the Mississippi Conference.

Rev. W. Winans Drake, of Noel Memorial Church, Shreveport, La., will preach the Commencement sermon for the State Normal School, at Natchitoches, La., at 10 o'clock a.m., next Sunday. He will preach at the Methodist church at the evening hour. Our church there, under the pastorate of Rev. J. W. Lee, has made splendid progress this year, ninety-nine members having been received since Conference.

The Satterly Young People's Bible Class of Noel Memorial Church, Shreveport, La., has an active membership of 105. The following are the officers: Mrs. John S. Satterly, leader; Bennet Herring, secretary; Rev. J. B. Grambling, teacher. On Thursday evening of last week the class had its annual banquet, at which Mrs. J. A. Stockwell, of Lake Charles, La., who has served several years as a missionary in the Belgian Congo, delivered an inspiring address.

A really great meeting was recently held in First Church, Columbus, Miss., in which the pastor, Rev. J. H. Felts was assisted by Rev. Shade W. Walker, of Sanford, Florida. There were about forty additions to the membership of the church, as well as a genuine revival within the church, as indicated by splendid congregations, a well-attended prayer meeting, a full Sunday school, and a smoothly-running financial plan. No wonder the pastor is very happy—and very busy.

Rev. and Mrs. S. A. Brown, of Lula, Miss., will be the host and hostess of a "Preachers and Preachers' Wives' Social and House Party," June 8 and 9—something new under the sun, so far as we know. A beautiful program of devotions and entertainment has been prepared. The guests will be: Rev. and Mrs. V. C. Curtis, Greenville, Miss.; Rev. and Mrs. W. W. Jones, Shaw, Miss.; Rev. and Mrs. T. M. Bradley, Cleveland, Miss.; Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, Shelby, Miss.; Rev. and Mrs. E. Nash Broyles, Clarksdale, Miss.; Rev. and Mrs. L. A. McKeown, Merigold, Miss.; Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Robertson, Rosedale, Miss.; Rev. and Mrs. C. P. Moss, Friars Point, Miss.; Rev. and Mrs. W. C. Carlisle, Coahoma, Miss.; Rev. and Mrs. W. C. Galceran, Jonestown, Miss.; Rev. and Mrs. C. A. Parks, Tunica, Miss.; Rev. J. H. Holder, Holly Springs, Miss.

RESOLUTIONS UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED BY THE SHREVEPORT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Whereas, it has been suggested in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and by writers in the church press, that the campaign for education, ordered by the General Conference, he postponed until after the next General Conference; therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Shreveport District Conference, in annual session assembled, That we regard as very unfortunate and unwise any public agitation, through the church press or otherwise, looking to the postponement of the campaign which was ordered by the General Conference, because such agitation can only result in the discouragement of effort in advance.

Be it further resolved, That we recognize the pressing importance at this time of laying upon the heart and conscience of the church the vital necessity of an adequate provision for our colleges and universities to the success of our entire work: First, because the public mind is now awakening to the value of Christian education; and, second, because the present period of unprecedented prosperity furnishes the providential opportunity to crystallize the awakening sentiment into actual fact.

Be it further resolved, That we believe that when this matter shall have been laid upon the heart of the church by a campaign of information and inspiration, the response will be sufficient to equip our educational institutions to the point where standard work can be done.

Resolved further, That we urge our preachers and leaders to co-operate with the Educational Campaign Commission with the same loyalty that characterized the Centenary Movement, making our people see the vital significance of Christian education to the very life and the evangelistic and missionary success of the church.

READY TO HELP IN EVANGELISTIC WORK.

Dear Mr. Editor: After more than two years of enforced absence from the evangelistic field, by reason of serious throat trouble, I am very happy to be able to return, in some measure, to my loved employ.

It has been my delightful privilege to conduct two revival campaigns this spring, and I am offering my services, where they may be needed, in two or three more during the summer.

If there are those who feel that I can render the services they need, I will be pleased to have them address me at Meridian, Miss., Box 986.

Yours very truly,

T. J. NORSWORTHY.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE TRAINING SCHOOL.

The executive members of the Conference Sunday School Board met in special session at Winona, May 13. The meeting was more pleasant and profitable because of the presence of Rev. S. L. Pope, P. E., of the Winona District, Mrs. W. T. Boswell, Superintendent of missionary instruction in the Sunday schools and Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, our Field Secretary.

The purpose of the meeting was to lay plans for holding a Conference school for training leaders in the Sunday schools throughout the Conference. It was decided to hold the school at Grenada College, August 4-11. Many prominent speakers will be invited to address the body at the special hours, and instructors of pronounced ability will have charge of the courses of study. We must learn if we would teach. Let's make "efficiency" the key word. The Board purposes to spare no effort nor available means to make this the greatest opportunity of its kind ever offered to those who would become more efficient in the King's business. Watch for further announcements.

C. A. PARKS, Sec'y.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

Please note that the date of the Conference was changed from June 8, 9, 10 to 13, 14, 15 to accommodate the Sunday School Conference; then, at the request of the Efficiency Conference Committee, we swapped dates with them two months ago, thus taking June 1, 2, 3. Speakers were secured for that date. We were sorry not to be able to accommodate a late situation by a third change.

Let every League, if possible, instruct its delegates as to pledges for the new year. We hope all 1919 pledges are in hands of the Conference Treasurer, Mr. V. H. Stephenson, Booneville, Miss.

The conference program will begin at the night service, Tuesday, June 1.

On Saturday morning, May 8, 1920, at 5 o'clock, the death angel came and took little WILLIAM BUTLER home to glory, being the only son of Claude and Fannie Butler. Little William was one year and seven days old. Yes, we were grieved when God took him from us, but God gave and God taketh away—blessed be the name of the Lord. Little William leaves a father, mother, one little sister and a host of relatives and friends to mourn his death. His little body was laid away in the Macedonia cemetery on Sunday morning, May 9, 1920. Weep not, but be prepared to meet little William some sweet day. Two friends.

HARDIE and GLADYS HILTON.

Mrs. ALLA WINTER TALIAFERRO, daughter of the late H. W. Winter and Sallie Davidson Winter, was born on November 26, 1852. She was happily married to Mr. E. L. Taliaferro, January 10, 1871. After a lingering illness for a few days from a stroke of paralysis, she quietly and peacefully passed to her reward, April 23, 1920. She was the mother of two children who preceded her to the other world. She joined the Methodist Church in early life and was a faithful and true Christian to the end. She was a kind and affectionate wife, much beloved and honored by all who knew her. She always enjoyed having her friends and relatives visit her, and she had that happy disposition of making every one feel at ease and at home while in her presence. She will continue to live in the memory of those who knew her best. Her husband and relatives and many friends have the consolation of knowing that she awaits them in the heavenly home. May the Lord sustain her devoted husband and loved ones in this hour of sadness.

W. F. ROGERS.

Oakland, Miss.

On Jan. 30, 1920, God, in his infinite love and wisdom, saw fit to take from us Mrs. ALICE PEARSON, wife of O. M. Pearson, Strayhorn, Miss., to her eternal home. She was 53 years of age. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in early womanhood and lived a faithful Christian to the end. We feel that in her we have lost a wise and faithful teacher in our Sunday school. Her sweet disposition and implicit faith in God were an inspiration to all who knew her. Her home was always a center of good influence; both young and old were welcomed. Her neighbors she loved with true devotion, and was always ready to minister to them in time of need. She leaves a devoted husband, two sisters and two brothers: Mrs. S. B. Gann, Strayhorn, Miss.; Mrs. G. L. Thomason, Strayhorn; Edd Watson, Cleveland, Miss.; Henry Watson, Lula, Miss., and a host of other relatives and friends to mourn their loss. May all these bow humbly to the will of their Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well, and let us remember it can be said of her: Well done, thou good and faithful servant. We loved her, yes, we loved her; but Jesus loved her more and he has gently borne her to heaven's shining shore.

A friend,
MRS. SAMUEL PRESSLEY,
Sarah, Miss.

MR. FRANK E. FRANKLIN died at his home near Ringgold, La., on the morning of February 12, 1920. He was born in the year 1859 and united with the Methodist Church, South, in 1882. He was a faithful member and was ever at his post of duty, with a burden for lost humanity ever resting upon his pure life. I was his pastor for four years, and I always found him true. He was a power in prayer. It seemed that God always turned a listening ear when he would approach him in prayer. It has been my pleasure to see wicked men fall on their knees in true repentance when Uncle Frank (as every one called him) would call on the Master for them. The church will feel the loss of this honored member very keenly. It was his custom to see to the needs and cares of the community in which he lived. Every one was glad to see him come to spend awhile in the home, because he always brought a smile which was seasoned with grace that came from his pure life. He was not a man of wealth—the kind that the world is seeking after—but he was a child of the King and his Master owned the cattle of a thousand hills; he was rich in the grace of God. He gave to the extent of his means for the support of the church, and always did it willingly. Heaven is richer today as he is basking in the sunshine of God's love and waiting the coming of his many friends who mourn his departure. He leaves to mourn his departure his good wife, one stepson, six children, and every one that knew him. May the blessings of God rest on the family in their bereavement, and may they all look forward to the time when they will meet him in that great beyond where no tears or sorrow will ever come, and where we all will meet together and reap the reward of our labors here. One who loved him,

J. F. D.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved member and co-worker, Mrs. Elizabeth Nafman, and while we bow in humble submission to his will, yet we deplore the loss of one whose lovable character and kindly disposition made her generally beloved.

Therefore, be it resolved, That in her death the Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, of Washington, Miss., has lost a member whose character as a devout Christian contributed greatly to its strength and growth.

Be it resolved, That in her death we, each of us, feel keenly the loss of a warm personal friend and counsellor; and be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the sorrowing family and a copy be spread on the minutes of this Society.

Signed by: Members of Woman's Missionary Society of Washington, Miss.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Since last we met, death has invaded our official board, and to-day we lament the passing of our beloved co-worker, friend and brother, F. W. Sherwood.

Brother Sherwood has been a member of the Board of Trustees since the date of the inauguration of the Seashore Camp Ground School and has labored constantly with us in our work. His advice and counsel were always valuable. The patient, hearty and prayerful co-operation in which he assisted us in overcoming the many obstacles and difficulties that confronted us from time to time in establishing and maintaining a Christian institution of learning, which to-day is a credit to our church and State, will never be forgotten by us.

Therefore, be it resolved by the Board of Trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground School, That the above be adopted as an humble expression of our love and esteem for this good Christian brother; That this resolution be incorporated and made a part of the minutes of this meeting, and that a copy of same be sent the family of Brother Sherwood, to whom we express our heartfelt sympathy.

Respectfully submitted,
Signed by: S. H. Meyer, J. R. Abels, J. S. Otis, Committee.

Is Your Blood Starving For Want of Iron?

Iron is Red-Blood Food—Nuxated Iron Helps Put Roses Into the Cheeks of Women and Gives Strength and Energy to Men

If you were to go without eating until you become weak, thin and emaciated, you could not do a more serious harm to yourself than when you let your blood literally starve for want of iron—iron that gives it strength and power to change food into living tissue, muscle and brain. Without plenty of iron in the blood, no matter how much or what you eat, your food simply passes through you without doing you any good—you don't get the strength out of it and instead of being filled with youthful strength and energy you are weak, nervous and all run-down. If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can walk or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks, then test your strength again and see how much you have gained. Numbers of nervous, run-down people who were adding all the while have most astonishingly increased their strength and endurance simply by taking iron in the proper form. But don't take the old kinds of iron salts which cause a lot of pain. You must take iron in a form that can be easily absorbed and assimilated like Nuxated Iron if you want it to do you good, else it may prove worse than useless. You can procure Nuxated Iron from your druggist on an absolute guarantee of satisfaction or your money will be refunded.

REMARKABLE RECOVERY

Extraordinary Curative Power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I want to let you know what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me. I had organic troubles and am going through the Change of Life. I was taken with a pain in my side and a bad headache. I could not lie down, could not eat or sleep. I suffered something terrible and the doctor's medicine did me no good at all—my pains got worse instead of better. I began taking the Vegetable Compound and felt a change from the first. Now I feel fine and advise any one going through the Change of Life to try it, for it cured me after I had given up all hopes of getting better. You can publish this and I will tell any one who writes to me the good it has done me."—Mrs. MARGARET DANZ, 743 N. 25th Street, Phila., Pa.

It hardly seems possible that there is a woman in this country who will continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial after all the evidence that is continually being published, proving beyond contradiction that this grand old medicine has relieved more suffering among women than any other medicine in the world.

YOUR LIBERTY BOND.

The United States Government borrowed money from you to finance the War. You hold the Government's promise to pay you back. This promise is called a Liberty Bond or Victory Note. On this Bond is stated the conditions under which the Government borrowed the money from you.

For instance: If you hold a Bond of the Third Liberty Loan, it states that on April 15 and October 15 of each year until maturity, you will receive interest on the amount you paid for the Bond. Other issues bear other rates of interest and other maturity dates, all of which are clearly stated on the Bond.

Now, if you keep your Bond until the date when the Government pays you in full for it, you do not need to worry if, in the meantime, the price is low one day or high the next. You and Uncle Sam are living up to your agreement with each other, and neither will lose by it.

On the other hand, if you sell your Liberty Bond now, you will find that the man you sell it to will not give you a dollar for every dollar you paid for it. The price has been brought down because so many people are offering to sell their Bonds. If the market is flooded with tomatoes, you can buy them cheap, but if every one is clamoring for tomatoes and there are few to be had, the price goes up. The same is true of Liberty Bonds. Short-sighted people are dumping them on the market, and wise ones are buying them.

The best advice that can be given to the owner of a Liberty Bond is this: Hold the bond you bought during the war; it is as safe and sound as the United States Government itself.

Buy as many more at the present low rate as you can afford. If you hold them to maturity, you are bound to make the difference between what they sell at now and their face value. You will also receive good interest on your investment.

Hold on to your Liberty Bonds and buy more.

THE PLACE OF SECRET PRAYER.

How much do you pray? How much have you prayed to-day? How much time and thought do you give to prayer? How real and vital is prayer in your daily life? Do you know what it is, like Daniel, to have fixed times and places for prayer? Do you know what it is to live in the atmosphere of prayer, that is, to carry out the Bible injunction to pray "without ceasing?" Is it not just at this point that we fail, and fail more hurtfully than at any other point? I make bold to say that just at this point, preachers are prone to fail, as perhaps at no other point. A little while ago I was with a group of preachers one day as they discussed the perils and problems of the preacher. This man and that suggested this peril and that, concerning which the preacher needs ever to be on his guard. When it came my time to question the group of fellow-preachers, this was my question: "How much do you pray?" I may add that every man of us in that group felt conscience-stricken as we searched our hearts with that question. We saw that we were busy here and there, finding texts, making sermons, arranging for funerals, for committees, for visits, for interviews, for exacting and endless tasks, but not a man of us had made enough of prayer. What is your answer, fellow-Christian, to the question: "How much do you pray?" Think again and deeply of these words of Jesus: "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father who is in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." Do you have the daily habit of secret prayer? You cannot afford to neglect such habit. Such neglect cannot be atoned for, whatever else you may say or do. I press the question upon every Christian before me has "the closet with the closed door" been neglected? That closet with the closed door is the trysting place of power. The men and women who go there come out with faces that shine, with visions that inspire, and with power that shakes the world. Keep the path worn to that closet with the closed door, I pray you. It will enable you to know that you are not alone, but that a Divine Presence goes before you and with you.—From "A Quest for Souls."

RED CROSS APPEALS FOR AID IN LOUISIANA.

A State-wide appeal for financial aid has been made to the citizens of Louisiana by the Disaster Relief Committee working on the flood situation in Avoyelles, Catahoula, and Concordia Parishes. Red Cross workers are making a survey of the three districts and report the situation serious.

Judge F. A. Bourdelon, Chairman of the Avoyelles Committee, and L. B. Roy, of the Union Bank, Marksville, report that the homes of 700 families and 10,000 acres of cultivated soil are under water. There is immediate need for feed, and the day the water recedes, seed will be needed for replanting.

Full reports have not yet been received from Concordia and Catahoula, but the situation is serious.

The following telegram has just been sent to the governor:

"Serious flood situation in Avoyelles, Concordia and Catahoula. More than 1,000 families have lost crop and many are homeless. Urgent need for contributions. Red Cross Disaster Relief appeals for contributions to total above $40,000 to be sent to L. B. Roy, care of Union Bank, Marksville, La."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Just to inform you, let me tell you about our new worker in the Elementary Department. You will be sorry to learn that Miss Lettie Van Landingham will not take up the work, on account of sickness. She is a consecrated woman, with ability, and would have done a great work in our Conference. We will remember her in our prayers. I have a telegram from Miss Nell Ingram, of Little Rock, Ark., which reads, "Can come after June 10; letter follows." This was her reply to my telegram asking her to take the vacant place. Will tell you more about her next week.

What about our District-wide Institutes? Everybody would like to attend, but only a few from each church can do so. Pastors will get their workers out to the meeting. I notice that certain pastors always have their schools represented at every meeting of the church, and others never do. Do you know why that is? I know and will tell you if you will not speak it too loud. It is this—they don't care. Let us get under this series of institutes and make them most helpful. Elect your delegates and send names of all who are going to pastor or superintendent of entertaining church.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Last Sunday was spent at Bogue Chitto. It rained and rained and rained; therefore, our visit was not as helpful as it might have been. We were with the people of Norfield at their Sunday school hour, and preached at Bogue Chitto. The rest of the services were rained out. We went with Brother Moore over to the negro church in the afternoon, where he preached to the delight and edification of a large congregation.

Tuesday the Hattiesburg District Institute was held at Broad Street Church. The following officers were elected: G. G. Hurst, Hattiesburg, Secretary; D. D. Cameron, Hattiesburg, Elementary Superintendent; Rev. J. H. Jolly, Heidelberg, Teacher Training; E. R. Campbell, Sumrall, Missions; E. R. Baines, Lucedale, Y. P. A. W. B. C.; Miss Annie Rose Berry, Prentiss, Int.-Sen. W. B. C.

We had a good program, and, from the expressions made to me, a most interesting and enjoyable one. I will never forget the kind, brotherly and sympathetic reception they extended to me at the close of the night services. I will always feel kindly for this affection.

Wednesday was spent at Picayune. We had a most interesting conference with the teachers of this church. I feel that the Sunday school will move forward and much good will be done.

Thursday was spent in Meridian, where the final arrangements for the Training School were made. The school will be held in Meridian, Miss., September 5-10. I am very anxious for other towns to have training school also.

We are receiving the best reports from Sunday School Day that have ever been made. So far as I know the Fernwood Sunday school is ahead of anything ever done in the Mississippi Conference. Their collection was $286.48. To say that the Board appreciates this is very mild indeed. Requests are still coming in for Sunday School Day programs. If you have not received yours, let me know, and I will send you a supply. Many people have told us that this is the best program we have ever had.

I think every school has agreed to put on a Sabbath Observance Campaign. I believe this will mean much for the church in the future.

There are four charges in the Hattiesburg District that were not represented. We had a large and enthusiastic representation.

The District Institutes that are to be held are:

Quitman, Miss., May 26-27.
Gulfport, Miss., May 28-29.
Walnut Grove, Miss., June 15.

Take due notice of this and exert your every nerve to have a representative.

Pray for the work and the workers.

Your brother in Him,
JNO. C. CHAMBERS.

A MODEL SUNDAY SCHOOL.

We take the following interesting account of the Methodist Sunday School from the Clarksdale (Miss.) Daily Register of May 17. It is credited to "E. B. A.," who, evidently, was a friendly visitor. We congratulate the pastor, Rev. E. Nash Broyles, and his efficient corps of assistants upon the fine work they are doing.

The city of Clarksdale is receiving laurels, not only in business, social, educational and sporting events, but in religious lines it is making great progress.

One Sunday school in the town, the Methodist, is now so perfect in organization, so thorough in the training it gives, so progressive in its plans and equipment, that it has reached next to the highest grade in the North Mississippi Conference. At the present rate it will soon go into Grade A.

To people well acquainted with the requirements of the National Methodist Sunday School Board, the statement that the Clarksdale Sunday school has reached this state of proficiency will be very significant.

Officers and teachers are trained for their positions; pupils are graded, pass examinations, and are promoted and graduated with honors just as in the graded day schools. Team work is encouraged; contests are arranged in attendance, lessons, collections and other lines; and every member of this big Sunday school, from the tiny tots of the kindergarten roll, on up through the big class of adults, seems to be keenly interested in Bible study, song service, mission work, and the various other lines of Sunday school activity.

An interested visitor to the Sunday school yesterday found the following organized force at work, with many splendid co-workers assisting: Mayor Fant, superintendent of the Sunday school; Dr. Taylor, superintendent of adult department; Mrs. Hillary Tallbert, superintendent junior department; Mrs. Richard Moore, superintendent of Intermediate department; Mrs. Frank Harris, superintendent of primary department; Mrs. Dr. Taylor, superintendent of beginners' department; Mrs. Heidelberg, superintendent of cradle roll; Mrs. Whitmore, teacher-training class.

It was a noticeable fact that each department has its own secretary, its own pianists, and its own apartment in which to gather and worship in learning the songs and lessons.

Music is being made a very special and very helpful feature of the work in this Sunday school. Superintendent Fant now has a piano in each department, and there is also an orchestra in the adult department. This orchestra, composed of six pieces, is alone worth a trip to the Sunday school to hear. The chorus work being done by the classes is far above the grade of singing usually done in schools. Miss Julia Edwards is in charge of this work and is certainly getting results. Many local musicians are helping in the music.

One reason for the rapid progress in grading that this Sunday school is making is evident in its scheme of preparation for the work being done.

A meeting of the council is held once a month. At this meeting the Sunday school superintendent, the heads of all departments, the teachers, and secretaries of all departments, meet to discuss and plan the work. Once a week the teachers of this large Sunday school meet and study the lesson, directed by Mrs. Whitmire.

In addition to this class of active teachers, the Sunday school has a force preparing to take up the important work of teaching in the Sunday school. About ten or twelve young people, under the instruction of Mrs. Whitmire, are taking a regular course

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle

A LEOPARD CANNOT CHANGE ITS SPOTS

Mr. Dodson, the "Liver Tone" Man, Tells the Treachery of Calomel.

Calomel loses you a day! You know what calomel is. It's mercury; quicksilver. Calomel is dangerous. It crashes into sour bile like dynamite, cramping and sickening you. Calomel attacks the bones and should never be put into your system.

When you feel bilious, sluggish, constipated and all knocked out and believe you need a dose of dangerous calomel just remember that your druggist sells for a few cents a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, which is entirely vegetable and pleasant to take and is a perfect substitute for calomel. It is guaranteed to start your liver without stirring you up inside, and can not salivate.

Don't take calomel! It can not be trusted any more than a leopard or a wild-cat. Take Dodson's Liver Tone which straightens you right up and makes you feel fine. Give it to the children because it is perfectly harmless and doesn't gripe.

Thousands Agree As To This

That Black-Draught Is Excellent for Stomach and Liver Disorders, Hence Its Great Popularity. —Mississippi Planter's Indorsement.

Houston, Miss.—Mr. J. A. Trenor, a well-known planter of this place, recently related his experience in using Thedford's Black-Draught. "I don't believe there is a better liver medicine made," said Mr. Trenor. "I use it for headache, stomach disorders and torpid liver.

It is not bad to take, does not leave a constipated condition, as so many of the liver pills and medicines do. It does its work and leaves you feeling like a new person."

Thousands of others have found Black-Draught as helpful as Mr. Trenor describes, and a valuable remedy for derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels. It is purely vegetable, having an active effect upon the bowels, gently stimulating the liver, and helping to increase the flow of bile.

Black-Draught has been found to assist in the digestion of food, and relieves constipation in a prompt and normal way.

On account of Black-Draught's long-proved merit and immense popularity, many imitations are being offered for sale. For your own satisfaction it will pay you to insist upon the genuine, and be sure the package bears the name "Thedford's Black-Draught."

At your druggist's—ready for instant use—full directions in package. —Adv.

of work and in June will be examined for the teaching force.

On the first Sunday in each month a missionary program is given in each department. This work is under the direction of Mrs. Ernest Moore.

Organized effort is shown throughout the institution, and that big results are being obtained is shown in many ways. One item alone is significant. Out of an enrollment of 488, there were 401 present, an unusually large per cent.

Another feature in the junior department is that both boys and girls have attained such excellent grade in their manual endeavor that their work is frequently sent as gifts in the mission boxes. So genuine is the interest shown by these boys and girls that they are carrying the Bible reading requirements into their homes. In order to reach their grading, a daily Bible reading is necessary. The youngsters, in calling on their elders to help them in this, are unconsciously spreading the gospel.

The kindergarten work, under the guidance of Mrs. Dr. Taylor, is most thorough. The foundation stones being laid there in the characters of that large department will hold firmly throughout the lives of those little ones.

Mrs. Frank Harris, in the primary department, has fifty-four little people in charge. A visit to this department is most enlightening.

Sunday school workers, the world over, are fast realizing that the graded system is best in Sunday schools, as well as in day schools. But Clarksdale is taking the lead in this and is proud of the local Methodist Sunday school's rank in the State.

Two other large Sunday schools in this city are now planning to become graded schools. Before long the public will be given details of their work.

Every Sunday school worker in the county should avail himself of the first opportunity to visit the Methodist Sunday school of Clarksdale. He will receive a most cordial welcome.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE HOSPITAL CAMPAIGN.

The canvass for subscriptions in Hattiesburg and the Hattiesburg District has been almost completed, and a number of the pastoral charges will make a good showing.

May 30-June 5 is the time set for completing the canvass throughout the Mississippi Conference territory. Pledge cards have been sent to every place where a chairman or manager for the Campaign has been appointed. If pastors who have no chairman appointed to attend to the matter, take it up with their congregations on May 30-June 5, they will please send to John A. McLeod, Chairman, Hattiesburg, Miss., a list giving the name of each subscriber and the amount. The subscription cards provide for payments in four installments—July 1, 1920, March 1, 1921, January 1, 1922, and January 1, 1923.

If it is religious to hold a funeral, how about preventing one? Jesus' way of visiting the sick was to heal them. The Methodist Church ought to take a hand in this work which Protestantism has neglected so long.

The Baptists have a hospital in Jackson, Miss., and propose one in New Orleans. Methodists have none in Mississippi, Louisiana or Alabama. The Mississippi Conference ought to build and make a success of the one already proposed for Hattiesburg, and then later on should perhaps have hospitals at some place on the beach, at Jackson, Vicksburg, and Meridian.

The Mississippi Conference has organized for preaching and has 498 preaching places; it has organized for teaching and has 451 Sunday schools, three colleges and two training schools; but the Mississippi Conference has never organized for healing and has no place where people go to get healed.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The Sardis District meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society will be held at Senatobia on June 8.

MRS. W. J. EAST,
District Secretary.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Attention Young People!

To the Young People of Shreveport District: We are anxious that all the Young People of our district make plans to attend the Rally that will be held at Mansfield on the afternoon of June 3. Don't fail to be on hand by 12 o'clock, because at this time we are to have a basket dinner, to which all visitors are cordially invited. After the social hour on the lawn, the program will begin at about 2 o'clock in the church.

We desire very much to have every Young People's auxiliary in the district take some part on the program. There will be no long speeches.

We have invited Mrs. Holt, Conference Corresponding Secretary, to be present at our Rally. Mrs. B. F. Key, Conference Superintendent of Young People's Work, will be in attendance and will be glad of this occasion to become better acquainted with you. There should be a goodly number of Young People from every charge in the district. You can help make this a great occasion.

At the District Meeting for the adults, there were representatives from 19 charges; there were two auxiliaries represented from one city, and five from another. We think the Young Folk ought to be as good "goers" as their elders.

Sincerely yours,
Mrs. J. D. WOOLWORTH,
District Seeretary.

Interesting Letters.

A letter from Mrs. Key, Conference Superintendent of Young People, brings news of the work being done for the Young People of Shreveport District, and of their Rally to be held at Mansfield on June 3. Mrs. Key Is anxious that the remaining six districts soon rally the Young People; progress Is much needed along this line of missionary work. Mrs. Key incloses two letters sent to her by Mrs. Cunningham, former Superintendent of Young People. These letters are indeed interesting, and are published below for the benefit of those who may read them.

Letter From Miss Loudon.

My Dear Young People: This is just a greeting from Scarritt. I happened to find out when you were going to have Young People's night and would surely love to be there, but since I cannot, I can at least write you.

I am sure you would like to know what Scarritt is like. Well, the best way I can describe it is by saying It is the most perfect home I know. The home life is marvelous. The school is out at the edge of the city and the view is wonderful. I wonder if you have the same kind of idea I had of missionaries before I came here. Well, I thought they were all "old maids," who were so dignified that they never laughed and had a good time. When I got here I found I was entirely mistaken, for they were not old maids. Our youngest girl is just eighteen and I wish you could see us play tennis, basket ball, indoor baseball and swim. We do have wonderfully good times.

Last night, we Juniors entertained the Seniors with a Washington's Birthday party. All the Seniors, teachers, and guests, at least most of them, came dressed in colonial costume and they surely looked pretty. We Juniors furnished the entertainment. The first thing was an Indian War Dance; next a Mexican girl sang for us in her native language; the third thing was the minuet, after which the negro band, our own girls, gave us several selections. Then we all went into the dining room, which had been changed into a rose garden, and refreshments were served by negro waitresses. Oh, I forgot the most interesting part—two of the girls were dressed to represent Martha and George Washington, and another two Lafayette and Betty Ross. I am sure every one enjoyed it very much, at least I did. Now that is an inadequate description of one of our many social affairs.

We have seventy-five girls here taking training. A few are not going into special work, but are taking this to make them better workers in their own churches. We have two Chinese girls here and one Mexican girl. They seem to enjoy their work and like us fine. We have one girl here whose parents are missionaries in Japan. We have a few girls from most of the Southern States. Texas has the most. They have ten girls and, just think of it, Louisiana has only one. I wish we could catch up with Texas.

We enjoy all our subjects and especially Missions, Sunday School Pedagogy, and Home Nursing. I wish I could tell you something about each, but just haven't time, for that is one thing Scarritt lacks.

My home is at Zachary, La., and it is just fourteen miles north of Baton Rouge. This is my first year here. I want to go to Japan as a missionary, but am willing to go anywhere.

We would be so glad for some of you to visit us, and if any of you happen to pass through Kansas City, please let me know and stop off for a day at least. I could meet you and bring you out here, and am sure you would enjoy it. Wishing you great success, I am

Your friend,

Letter From Miss Reuteria.

Dearest Mrs. Cunningham: It is a pleasure to me always to say how I was led to consecrate myself to the Master's service, as that is the greatest joy of my life.

I am a Mexican girl and my English is so poor because it has been just two years since I have been in this country.

I became a Christian when I was 18 years old, and it happened in that way because I went as Spanish teacher to Laredo, Tex., to Holding Institute. After three years of teaching I went back to Mexico and was doing missionary work among my people, especially among young women, because I know what a great need they have of Christian friends to lead them to Jesus' feet. As I did not have any special training for that purpose, my work was not so efficient as I wished, so I make up my mind to learn the English and come to Scarritt. So I came to Texas for a while, until I understand some and then last year I came here, so this is my second year.

It will be impossible to explain to you in this letter the many blessings I have received ever since I gave up my life to the service. I am so happy and I want as many girls as possible to have the same privilege. I have been trying to find scholarships from different Missionary Societies and I now have seven Mexican girls in training for religious work in different training schools of this country.

May the Lord bless you, my dear lady, and each one of the members of your Society, and I pray that many, many of your young people will decide to consecrate their lives for the Master's service. Tell them to take these words at heart, and ask themselves what are they doing for the evangelization of the world in this generation: "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the (leaders) laborers are few." Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He send forth laborers into His harvest. Amen. Lovingly,

MARIA REUTERIA.

Exchange Your Old Body For A New One

You can do it in three weeks and thereby renew your health. This article is written by a physician who has seen it demonstrated in numerous cases and explains how it is done.

Listen: If your weight is one hundred and thirty-three pounds your body contains eighty pounds of water, for according to standard medical books the human body contains sixty-seven and one-half per cent of water. Now, disease is invariably caused by impurities which we call poisons, and these are readily dissolved by the right kind of natural mineral water. Drink ten gallons (eighty pounds) of Shivar mineral water (use no other water for twenty-one days), and you will have exchanged your old body for a new one, so far as the soluble part of it is concerned. The impurities will be dissolved and pass away. If you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric acid poisoning, or other curable conditions due to impure blood, accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer which appears below. Read the following letter carefully; then sign and mail it:

"PERILOUS TIMES."

By Mrs. A. C. McKinney.

In this day and time when such a variety of subjects is up for discussion, it is hard for a woman to keep still and, by the way, I read recently this aphorism: "If the women had just kept still, we would still have the still." A greater evil, if possible, than the "still" is threatening our nation, aye, the whole world, because it claims men, women and children alike. I know, Mr. Editor, that you are interested in the subject, because you have given it attention several times on your first page, and so I feel emboldened to send the following, copied from one of our temperance exchanges, "The Open Door" of Tennessee, under the caption "Smoking Rooms for Women," which reads as follows:

"A new club has been organized in Washington, D. C.—The Woman's City Club. More than two thousand representative women of the national capital belong to this club, the membership list including wives of cabinet members, women of congressional circles, and prominent professional and society women. The club is housed in a beautiful residence overlooking Lafayette Square, just across from the White House.

"When the club house was opened in November, 1919, it was proposed that a smoking room be furnished, where members of the club and their friends might smoke. There was opposition to the plan, but after heated discussions, the advocates of smoking won and instructions were given to provide a smoking room.

"Woods Theatre, in Chicago, has added a handsome smoking room for women at a cost of $10,000. 'It was not done,' said the owner of the theatre, 'to encourage smoking among women, but we just had to do it.'"

A real man or woman who can keep still on this subject must be dead. Let no one take comfort in the thought that this evil is confined to Northern cities. One of our women who works among college students told me that she was touring the State of Texas recently, speaking to the young people. A college president told her to ask the boys in his school how many of them had girl friends who smoke; she said only three or four boys in that whole student body did not hold up their hands.

A few years ago we would not have believed that we should ever see grandmothers walking the streets of our Southern towns and cities in knee dresses with peek-a-boo fronts, but the sight is quite common to-day.

Louisiana has a law against the sale of tobacco to minors. Lawyers tell us that there is a "joker" in it—the laws of our State are so "fearfully and wonderfully made," most of them can easily be declared unconstitutional. While our present Legislature is in session would be a good time to bring forth the tobacco law. Some good man might get it sandwiched in between woman suffrage and the Constitutional Convention, if he tried. We are loath to believe that "father," no matter how he is wedded to his "ancestral pipe," would want mother and daughter to suck consolation from the same source. "Ye that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." Strong men and women must stand together against this peril that threatens us today, for indeed it is a real peril.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE DURANT DISTRICT.

You will be asked at the District Conference how you stand as to the payments on the Centenary pledges. As your presiding elder, let me insist that you be ready to answer this important question.

If you let your people fail here, you are surely doing wrong, as it will hurt them spiritually as they will think that a pledge to the church carries no importance, while we well know that it is as important as any other pledge. So let each pastor get busy and from the pulpit tell his people to be sure to meet this imperative need, as it is a great need, for the Centenary Board has arranged for the use or expenditure of this money.

For the woman who is weary dreary and sad

A woman on her feet all day very often has backache, dizzy feelings at times, and pains here or there. If she will listen to what her neighbors say, and to the women who have had the experience, she will go to the nearest drug store and obtain a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This is just the womanly tonic she needs periodically, and many are the women who express themselves as deeply indebted to Dr. Pierce for this wonderful discovery. It is an herbal nerve tonic which strengthens the weak woman and overcomes many of those diseases which cause backache, headache, dizzy feelings, sometimes fainting spells, and those distressing pains and bearing down feelings. Read what this woman says:

Jackson, Miss.—"I was weak, nervous and run-down in health in my early married life and seemed to have inward trouble. I took several bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and found it to be just the tonic my system required. The 'Prescription' gave me renewed health and strength and I take pleasure in recommending it."—MRS. E. A. HOLLIDAY, 946 Central St.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a non-alcoholic remedy, either in liquid or tablet form. All druggists. Send Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c for large trial package. Also write for free confidential medical advice and free booklet.

FROM VIVIAN, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: On the evening of May 2, we closed a meeting, considered by many, the best ever held in Vivian. Rev. A. R. Kasey, of the Louisville Conference, was with us for ten days—preaching twice a day. He is a strong preacher, and his sermons, while not at all sensational, stirred many consciences, being full of "spirit and life." The Christian people were much strengthened, and there were added to the church sixteen persons, the greater part coming by profession. Our congregations were good during the entire meeting, and at times greater than we could seat. The business houses closed for the 10 o'clock service—as is their habit—and we had splendid services in the forenoon.

I have never served a finer people. They surely appreciate the services of a pastor, and always give him a good audience. Our Sunday school has outgrown its quarters, and we are considering plans for an addition to the church. At present, the Wesley Adult Bible Class is meeting in the Presbyterian Church, as they have no regular services at this time. We have now seventy-five enrolled on our Bible class register.

Our singing during the meeting was in charge of Brother McLendon, who is also our choir leader, and his work is fine. One of the strong points in our services is our music. All departments of our work are moving along nicely—W. M. S., E. L., and all the rest. Cordially,

APPRECIATION OF FINE SERVICE.

Dear Brother Carley: For several weeks I have been neglecting to express my appreciation, through your good paper, of Rev. Geo. A. Baker, one of the Conference evangelists of the North Mississippi Conference. This neglect is due, however, to two good reasons. The first is that I have been swamped in work, and the second is equally as good, I think, for I wanted to see how our Easter revival looked at a distance.

Brother Baker was with us at the time of the Simultaneous Evangelistic Campaign in Memphis, and we have never had ministerial help that was more earnest, zealous, companionable and helpful. His one aim was to help the pastor to develop Christian character and to deepen the work of grace in the hearts of the pastor and his people, to win souls for the Master, and thus leave the pastor and his people in closer bonds of Christian fellowship and better able to fight for the Master. All this he succeeded in doing. He went with me from house to house, and we read the Scriptures and prayed with the people. He did as much work outside of the pulpit as he did in it. Brother Baker is a strong preacher—he preaches the whole Gospel, drives straight to the point and is a wonderful help in showing the brethren what it means to do real pastoral work.

Our greatest blessing came in the reviving of our church membership. The members are more spiritual and more loyal than at any time since we have known this congregation. Twenty joined the church at the close of the meeting and fifteen since then, and we will have a dozen or more coming in this Sunday.

Brother Baker has headquarters at Myrtle, Miss., and we can recommend him most heartily to any pastor who desires evangelistic help.

For more than Forty Years Cotton Growers have known that

POTASH PAYS

More than 11,651,200 Tons of Potash Salts had been imported and used in the United States in the 20 years previous to January, 1915, when shipments ceased. Of this 6,460,700 Tons consisted of which the cotton grower knew was both a plant food and a preventive of blight and rust,—with it came also 1,312,400 Tons of which has the same effects on Cotton, but which was used mainly in mixed fertilizers.

KAINIT

20 per cent MANURE SALT

Shipments of both Kainit and Manure Salt have been resumed but the shortage of coal and cars and high freight rates make it more desirable to ship Manure Salt, which contains 20 per cent of actual Potash, instead of Kainit, which contains less than 13 per cent actual Potash.

MANURE SALT can be used as a side dressing on Cotton in just the same way as Kainit and will give the same results. Where you used 100 pounds of Kainit, you need to use but 62 pounds of Manure Salt, or 100 pounds of Manure Salt go as far as 161 pounds of Kainit.

MANURE SALT has been coming forward in considerable amounts and cotton growers, who cannot secure Kainit, should make an effort to get Manure Salt for side dressing to aid in making a big Cotton Crop.

Muriate of Potash

50 per cent actual Potash, has been coming forward also,—100 pounds of Muriate are equivalent to 400 pounds of Kainit or 250 pounds of Manure Salt.

These are the three

Standard GERMAN Potash Salts

that were always used in making cotton fertilizers and have been used for all these years with great profit and without any damage to the crop.

The supply is not at present as large as in former years, but there is enough to greatly increase the Cotton Crop if you insist on your dealer making the necessary effort to get it for you.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

LOVE AS A PASSION.

Love is infinitely more than an amiable sentiment—it is an all-consuming passion. True love does not overlook faults and shortcomings, but it gives itself without reservation to the redemption of the one loved from all the weaknesses, misfortunes, and evils that the pure eye of love can detect. Love does not weigh the cost of its action, but the value of its object. Love does not hold back because effort and pain are involved in the service it would render, but it goes joyously to all lengths to make perfect that which to which it is devoted. It is an idle word for us to say that we love God while, at the same time, we stand quiescently by as our brothers go to destruction. It was Love that came to seek and save that which was lost.

THE ECONOMIC VALUE OF CHURCHES.

While the church's value to the community is to be measured largely in terms of its spiritual ministry, it is not amiss to consider the fact that it has a very real economic value. We once heard a very thoughtful man, not identified with any church, make the remark that he would not live in a community where religious services were not regularly held, his explanation being that religion is the only thing that makes life and property safe. To the same effect are some recent words of Mr. Roger W. Babson, head of the largest organization for gathering and analyzing business statistics in the world. In an address before a business men's organization, he said: "The safety of all we have is due to the churches, even in their present inefficient and inactive state. By all that we hold dear, let us from this very day give more time, money and thought to the churches of our city, for upon these the value of all we own ultimately depends." Without accepting his view that the churches are in an "inefficient and inactive state," we commend his words as worthy of serious consideration by the business men of every community.

THE WICKEDEST PLACE ON EARTH.

"Port Said is the wickedest place on earth," said a chaplain to a group of soldiers recently. He continued: "I know Calcutta, Bombay and Madras better than I know London; I have had to live in the East for a quarter of a century, and I know what Cairo and Ismalia are; but I have seen more sin and appearances of sin in one hour in Port Said than in all the rest of my experiences." Even so, the wickedest place on earth is the human heart in which the love of God is not known.

KILL HORSE RACE GAMBLING IN LOUISIANA.

According to newspaper accounts of the proceedings, a bill has been introduced into the General Assembly of Louisiana, now in session, to prevent betting on horse races, or on any other sport or event of any kind that lends itself readily to the exercise of the gambling instinct. Without being able to say whether or not the bill is so drawn as to stand the test of the courts to which all such measures are inevitably subjected, we wish to commend its purpose, and urge that it or some other similar measure be enacted into law without fail. We are not so presumptuous as to suppose that we have any authority to speak for individual Methodists of the State, though we believe the vast majority of them are heartily in favor of such a law, but we do know the historic position of the great Methodist Church upon such questions, and we can assure the supporters of such a measure that they will be representing correctly the sentiment of one of the most virile forces in American religious life in working and voting for the adoption of a law that means so much for the moral welfare of the State. As we have said time and again, we have no fight to make upon horse racing as such—our opposition directed against the evils that are always attendant upon its establishment as an institution. If horse racing can survive without gambling, we certainly have no disposition to interfere with those who would conduct the sport, under humane conditions, purely for the pleasure involved in contests of speed. We have no idea it can so survive, for the advocates of racing themselves admit that if gambling is eliminated, racing is done for. We are not in favor of a racing commission that will "regulate" gambling—an undertaking as impossible of accomplishment as the "regulation" of the liquor traffic. We want to see, and the moral manhood of the State is demanding, a measure with "teeth" in it that will make impossible a repetition of the demoralizing conditions that have arisen in New Orleans in connection with racing, and wherever else the "sport" has been allowed to flourish. Kill horse race gambling in Louisiana, gentlemen of the General Assembly, and thus complete the step that was taken when the State was redeemed from the curse of the lottery.

USE FOR A PESSIMIST.

We saw this the other day: "Employ an optimist to get results, and a pessimist to figure them up." Very good—except that a pessimist usually dis-figures what has been accomplished.

WHAT WILL YOU DO TO-MORROW?

Yesterday and to-day have had their tasks, have seen their trials, successes and disappointments, and their achievements are recorded upon the indelible pages of history. But how about to-morrow? A new day will bring new opportunities, new hopes, new privileges, new responsibilities—and the record is still to be made. No matter what the past has been, the future may be redeemed by energy, consecration and faith. Let us enter it with high hopes, noble purposes, and an invincible determination to attain.

THE MENACE OF MORMONISM.

In spite of the fact that Mormonism has been outlawed by the United States Government in so far as its iniquitous practice of polygamous marriages is concerned, this sinister organization persists, somehow, in maintaining its activities in a way that cannot but cause concern to all those who are interested in the preservation of the Christian ideal of the home. Its missionaries are actively at work in many foreign countries, and the success of their labors is attested by the number of innocent girls who enter our ports as immigrants on their way to Utah. While the Mormon Church claims to have abandoned polygamy as an ecclesiastically sanctioned practice, there seems to be indisputable evidence that it still flourishes. This matter has been brought to our mind especially because of the recent veto by the President of a bill which, as we understand it, would have given the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing power to determine what information should be given to the people of the country through official publications—and the chairman of that Committee happens to be Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah, a leader of the Mormon Church. We are glad the President refused to sign the bill.

LEADERS AND THE LED.

There seems to prevail in some quarters the idea that certain men are leaders merely by virtue of their positions. We confess that we have great respect for the opinions of those who have, by the votes of their fellow men, been elevated to high places; but we always try to think in terms of principles rather than personalities. Only those men are real leaders who think right thoughts and perform right actions. Those who are led are blindly led if they do not follow the dictates of reason and sound judgment. The most dangerous of all leaders is the one who undertakes, by virtue of his position, to force others to his own way of thinking and acting. They are not leaders at all—they are drivers. There is a vast difference between a keen lash and the gentle hand of love.

THE COURTESY OF CHRISTIAN BROTHERHOOD.

By Wm. C. Allen.

This commandment have we from Him, that he who loveth God love his brother also. John iv:21.

How sweet and gracious, even in common speech,
Is that fine sense which men call courtesy!
Wholesome as air and genial as the light,
Welcome in every clime as breath of flowers,
It transmutes aliens into trusting friends,
And gives its owner passport round the globe.
—J. T. Fields.

It has been well said that brotherhood makes for brotherhood. In many lands I have learned that courtesy invokes courtesy. If we exhibit this feeling towards others, they respond. We can all be very different from each other and yet be glad because we are all brethren and God is the Father of us all.

It has been written that "David Livingstone did not need a machine gun in Africa. The most successful explorers of the world have been those who least frequently had recourse to fire-arms." If Wm. Penn had come to the new world with a challenge of antagonism instead of addressing the red men as his brothers, one more colony would have been drenched in blood. Cecil Rhodes, the empire builder of South Africa, armed only with a riding whip, would successfully argue with the most blood-thirsty African chieftains. He talked with them in the language of common brotherhood.

After a good deal of intercourse with various Christian organizations over the world, I can speak of the spirit of brotherliness that often prevails in the churches. It is remarkable when you think of it. Men among the clergy or laity, who at home are used to exercising their own wills, go to church conventions or conferences and discuss important questions with other men who often sincerely differ from them. These men may voice varied opinions and are possibly persistent in their views. But they generally keep on good terms with one another. They are not often cynical, nor do they snarl at each other. They do not always approve of one another's actions, yet they call themselves "brothers," and they are brothers in Jesus Christ.

In business we frequently see the same thing. Men have their disputes and this, in a sense, is not to their discredit. Conflicting interests bear hard upon all of us—such things cannot be avoided. The sense of wrong is sometimes keen, but the true Christian man, who looks beyond the stress of temporary conflict, feels in his heart that after all those who oppose him are his brothers. He appreciates their difficulties in the commercial struggle. If he has the real love of God in his heart, he stands ready to conciliate and forgive. He does not manifest this by a mere surface geniality. He helps his competitors, remembers for good his employers or employees and is courteous in every relation of life.

If our sense of fraternity is not always reciprocated by others, even possibly by those who are in the family relationship, it must not disconcert us. We must do our part and leave the rest. Occasionally we simply fail to understand the other person's viewpoint. The fact that other men seem weak in brotherhood or politeness should not impair our faith in them. All of us are very, very human. They have their virtues, and their failings, just as we have. We, with them, may humble ourselves as we think of our accountability to God. And to them He may grant much forgiveness because of their errors, even as we may sometime need it so very much for ourselves.

SOUTH AMERICA: THE UNDEVELOPED CONTINENT.

By Rev. A. C. Millar, D.D.

V. The Governments and Peoples.

Whatever we may think of the administration of government in South America, its people are devoted to the republican form. Two types of republic are found. The larger States, Argentine, Brazil, and Venezuela, are subdivided into provinces and these are federated, as are our States, into a republic, with general authority in federal government and local authority in the smaller units. Other States, such as Peru, Chile, and Bolivia, have concentrated authority in the central government and leave little with the local units. In all, as with us, the distinctions between executive, legislative, and judicial departments are fairly well defined. The presidents hold office for four or six years, and in some cases re-election is prohibited. The legislative department consists of a Senate and a Chamber of Deputies. A Supreme Court with appointive judges stands at the head of the judiciary.

One writer says: "Latin Americans are excellent theorists and constitution makers. On paper their instruments of government are almost perfect. Their ideas of justice and liberty are high, as high indeed as those of the Anglo-Saxons of the North. Their constitutions are written in solemn and impressive language in which divine approval is invoked, but a student of Latin America politics will soon learn that it is one thing to make a constitution and quite another to carry it out and abide by it."

The weakness of the Latin American government is the frequency of revolution. This grows partly out of the lack of experience in self-government and partly out of the ancient spirit of intolerance. The people have grown up under a system of political despotism where the only way to secure a change was to revolt. Then their religious training developed a feeling that those who were in authority were right; hence one party imagines that it is wholly right and the other party is absolutely wrong, and, consequently, that opposition must be crushed. Some one has thus characterized this spirit, "The hatred of one's opponents is the first duty of the politician." In our sense of the term, public opinion does not exist. Since the party in power controls the elections and virtually decides results in advance, it is questionable if the people are ever really able to give free expression to their wishes. Change is affected by revolution more frequently than by ballot. This, to us, seems wholly inconsistent with representative government. However surprising, though, it may seem, so far as the majority of the people are concerned, law is enforced and life is reasonably safe. The unsuccessful leaders may be put to death or exiled, but the people know little difference. If we could only get this peculiarity of Latin American politics fully into our minds, we might be more tolerant of Mexico. Our diplomacy should recognize the difference of mental attitude of Latin Americans and Anglo-Saxons. When all things are given due consideration, South American governments are as well adapted to conditions as is ours, and probably give the people equal satisfaction.

The people are not, as we commonly suppose, predominantly European in origin. During the colonial period there was a free intermixture of Spaniards and Portuguese with Indians. This is particularly true where the native civilization was high. The per cent of half-breeds, or mestizos, is large and influential. In some countries, as in Peru and Ecuador, as many as two-thirds are full-blood Indians. Then there are many negroes and mulattoes, and zambos, who are a cross between Indians and Africans. It is true that the white element rules, and yet there are notable exceptions.

Among the ruling class, labor is held in contempt, and, as there are no athletic sports, the physique is usually undeveloped, and human life is held cheap. They are not money makers, and have little regard for those who desire to accumulate wealth, as they value money only for the privileges and the pleasures it brings. Among the lower classes poverty is the rule, but on account of the climate and simple habits it does not seem to pinch as it would among us. Religion is a sentiment and is expressed largely in ritual and formal service rather than in ethics.

A careful writer says: "The weak points in the character of the South Americans may be summed up in these words—mutual distrust, excessive pride, self-indulgence, indolence, and want of persistence. * * * They seem almost incapable of working together in a common work for a common cause."

If they thus distrust one another, is it strange that they distrust us? Is it not our high duty to cultivate the confidence of our Southern neighbors?

A NINETY-DAY REVIVAL CAMPAIGN FOR CIRCUITS.

By Rev. O. E. Goddard, D.D.

Clamorous requests from presiding elders throughout the church are pouring into my office for a special evangelistic campaign during the summer months for circuits. It was a physical impossibility, they say, to put on the campaign in all the circuits. They insist that a special time for the circuits be agreed upon. Accordingly, after conference, the Evangelistic Committee suggested that a ninety-day campaign be launched for the revivals among the circuits. The dates are from July 7 to September 27. Some revivals will go on now and some will be held after the 27th of September. Let all this be understood from the beginning. I have no disposition to stop again and again to explain that we are not dictating a hard and fast program for any pastor. This call comes from the presiding elders on the field.

1. Let the pastors retain the Standard Survey Book, the survey cards, those for tabulating the survey, and the Standard Plan for the Revival. (Some pastor may have already junked these, but that will be his misfortune). Put on the survey in each church a few weeks before beginning the meeting.

2. Retain the blanks for reporting the revival campaign. In making the reports September 27, use these blanks now in hand.

3. My office has but a limited supply of all the materials used in the pre-Easter campaign. The pastors all have all these materials. It is not the purpose of the office to print any more this year. The pastors who have lost their supplies and are very anxious to get them for this summer campaign may be supplied as long as our supplies hold out. After this, each pastor will have to furnish his own supplies. This applies also to the propaganda literature. We have a limited supply of the literature used in promoting the revival up to Easter. We shall not print any additional literature this year. Such as we have on hand will be given free of all charges to pastors on their order.

4. The major part of our pastors are on circuits. The major part of our people live within the bounds of circuits. We ought to reach as many people in the summer campaign as we did in the pre-Easter campaign. It is quite likely that one hundred thousand were reached in the Easter campaign. Shall we not pray for as many during the summer campaign?

It is at the point of human despair that one is nearest to victory, even as the Apostle Paul, as he exclaims, "O wretched man that I am; who shall deliver me?" receives the immediate response of faith: "I thank God through Jesus Christ."—Exchange.

SUPERANNUATE AS JUNIOR P. E.

By Rev. T. W. Adams.

In many things in life it is by no means easy to understand the prompting motlve. When I told Rev. J. M. Morse, my presiding elder, to ask that my name be referred to the committee for the superannuate relation, he did not say a word to dissuade me. He readily agreed. It appeared to me as a pleased acquiescence he gave to my request. It made me feel funny. I rather expected to have to argue the case, and give him facts to win him over to my view of the matter. In this I was altogether mistaken. He said: "All right, Adams." Morse didn't say anything more, but from his looks I judged that he was doing a lot of thinking. His looks said: "Adams, you have more sense than I thought you had. I have known for some time that you were worn to a frazzle, and that you were practically down and out, but I didn't think you had sense enough to see it. I am glad you have not forced me to ask for your superannuation."

About a week after Conference adjourned I met Morse in Jackson. In a very gleeful spirit he said, "Adams, I appoint you junior presiding elder of the Jackson District." That "let the cat out of the wallet." I understood then what had somewhat puzzled me before. I said, "Morse, you are some schemer, to-be-sure—I now see clearly the motive prompting your ready acquiescence in my plans." His plan was for me to go around with him on the district, preach some and give him expert advice on questions of law, and entertain the folks where we would be cared for, and fill his appointments when he was away on more important business. He said, "You can do some work, all of it if you wish, but I must get all of the money." After thinking the matter over, I concluded to accept the proposition; for while there was no money coming to me, the best eating and the finest fellowship possible would be mine. I feasted on presiding elder dinners for ten years, and now comes the opportunity to renew intimate acquaintance with the delicious menu. My, what a time I am going to have! I am sure that mighty few superannuates are so delightfully circumstanced. Of course I am contented and happy. Why shouldn't I be? I had rather be a superannuate than a college president or a presiding elder.

I had a great time at Braxton and Mendenhall on the second Sunday in March. Charlie Stralt and "Jack" Smith are the pastors, respectively, of these churches. They are loved by everybody. It couldn't be otherwise, for they are fine and lovable fellows. They are quite different types of preachers—Charlie laughs and "Jack" cries when they deliver their pulpit philippics to their shrinking congregations. I don't know which is the better way. After having for many years tried both ways I am still undecided. I leave every preacher free to decide the matter for himself. Either way is good if done right.

Morse asked me to preach at 11 o'clock. I told him I just couldn't think of doing it. I know too well what is expected at that hour. It is then the presiding elder pulls off his "whopper." I thought it would be entirely improper for an old, worn-out superannuate to function under such an embarrassing handicap. Morse preached. He didn't, like some I have heard, make an assault and battery with intent to preach, he sure enough preached. It was fine. I haven't heard anything so good for a long time. Preaching over, then came the dinner at Brother McKay's. It was a genuine presiding elder's dinner. It was strictly according to regulations. I wouldn't object to meeting Morse at Braxton every once in awhile. Such a dinner is a drawing attraction.

At night, we were at Mendenhall. The church was full of people. That was the finest congregation, measured by any rule, I have seen lately. They were thoughtful and responsive hearers. It was a service of devout waiting upon the Lord in worship. It was good to be there. The aroma of that service abides with me still. I had to show myself a slacker, or preach for Morse. I can't tolerate slackers, so I preached. Morse introduced me as an ex-presiding elder, fresh out of the penitentiary. Wasn't it bad for Morse to treat the old worn-out preacher that way? I told the congregation that I was guilty of both charges, but I had repented of the "ex" business, and was now out of the penitentiary; so I implored their kindly forbearance. They gave it to me in large measure. People generally are mighty good to preachers. They cheerfully forgive them of almost every bad thing they do.

At the beginning of the services I told the congregation that I didn't feel at all like preaching. I had heard Morse preach a big sermon at 11 o'clock, and the strong, rich pabulum had not agreed with me. I had had mental indigestion all the afternoon.

My feelings improved when I began to preach, and kept on improving as I continued. My sermon was one whole hour long. Wasn't that too bad, Henry? A preacher who has been at it for nearly forty-six years ought to know better than to preach an hour. But, you see, I was filling a presiding elder's place, and I just knew it wouldn't pass muster if it were only a little sermonette. The congregation should share with me in the blame for the indiscretion. They paid wonderful attention to the sermon from beginning to end. It made the old man forget. I tried to stop sooner, but calls came from the congregation, "Go on! Go on!" and "on" I went. I am always happy to preach to eager hearers, who don't snap watches, and fidget about while the message is being delivered. May God bless the people at Mendenhall!

Instead of fussing over having to hear a man preach for an hour, several of them begged me to come back and preach some more for them. I am going to do that very thing, God willing. "Jack" Smith can "bet his bottom dollar" that he will be "pestered" soon with the old preacher.

Henry, if you will come up I am sure Morse will let you go around some with him and me. Come!

REV. LYMAN R. ROBERTS.

Among those who constituted what may be called the old guard of local preachers in the Mississippi Conference, none was more prominent in South Mississippi than Rev. Lyman R. Roberts. He was born August 23, 1850, in Jackson County, and spent his entire life in the same community, except a few years spent in the itinerant ministry as local supply. He was licensed to preach, March 25, 1876, at White Plains church, Harrison County, Rev. Thos. Price, P. E., and D. Merchant, P. C. He was ordained deacon in 1885. For 44 years he exercised his gifts and graces as a local preacher, passing to his eternal reward on March 30, 1920.

He was useful as a local preacher. Several times he was called upon to supply nearby charges, which he did with great acceptability. On none were his services more highly appreciated than on his home charge, the Vancleave circuit, which he served three years in succession. Three times he was in charge of the Escatawpa circuit, and twice of the Americus circuit. His popularity with the people of those charges was evidenced by the fact that he was frequently invited in after years to go back to one and another of those churches to hold protracted meetings.

He was a splendid preacher, and one of the most able men in prayer I have ever known. He knew God, and, like Jacob of old, he knew how to prevail with God and men. His preaching was of the evangelistic type, and many were converted and brought into the church under his ministry.

While we will miss him so much in the community, in the Masonic Lodge, of which he was a faithful member, and at camp meeting, there is no place outside his own home where he will be missed more than in his home church. A life-long member of Mt. Pleasant church, he served it in every capacity possible. In his early ministry he served for many years in succession as superintendent of the Sunday school, as steward, and in the last years he served as teacher of one of the Wesley classes, and was recognized as general leader in all the work of the church. He was the pastor's friend and right-hand man.

His home was the preacher's home. He had a splendid country home, delightfully situated, and he and his good wife and children always made it very comfortable for the pastor or visiting preacher. He leaves his widow, four sons and four daughters to mourn his departure. May his mantle fall upon his sons. His pastor,

PORT GIBSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Port Gibson District Conference for the current year was held in Crawford Street Methodist Church, Vicksburg, Miss., May 5, 6, 7, 1920. Rev. J. R. Jones, our new, and well-beloved presiding elder, directed the affairs of the conference, presiding with ease and true ministerial dignity, bringing into activity his rare native ability, and more than a score of years of ministerial experience, he redeemed every moment of time.

Every pastor of the district except Rev. M. J. Miller, of Rocky Springs, was present, and his attendance was prevented by the illness of his wife. There were several local preachers and a goodly number of lay members present. We think this a remarkable record when we remember the long distance some had to come, and the difficulties, on account of much mud and high water, under which others reached the seat of the conference.

T. L. Smith, of the Woodville circuit, was licensed to preach. Rev. E. C. Terry, of the Methodist Protestant Church, was received in local deacon's orders.

A collection of $31, the apportionment for this district for the Asbury Memorial Fund, was raised.

Dr. Rolfe Hunt, the very efficient president of Port Gibson Female College, was elected district lay leader.

W. H. Saunders, M. L. Burton, C. P. Jones, and T. A. Ferguson were elected Ad Interim Licensing Committee.

H. G. Flowers, S. W. Sharbrough, J. K. Sessions, D. D. Rollins, N. A. Killingsworth, Mrs. E. B. Jones, Mrs. L. E. Prentiss, and Mrs. J. E. Netterville were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, with Misses Magdeline Hallburg and Chesley Hagan, alternates.

Robt. Selby, Commissioner for Emory University, M. M. Black, Commissioner for Millsaps College, W. D. Hawkins, Conference Secretary for the Centenary Missionary Movement, W. E. Thomas, a member of the Louisiana Conference and Superintendent of the Memorial Home, in New Orleans, for unfortunate outcasts, B. F. Lewis and Mrs. S. F. Riley, representing the Mississippi Orphans' Home, and the inimitable John C. Chambers, Sunday School Field Secretary for the Mississippi Conference, visited the conference, and made addresses. Brother Chambers not only addressed the conference, but presided in the Sunday School Institute, which was held in the afternoon of the second day of the conference.

The preaching was well done by W. J. Dawson, Dr. Rolfe Hunt, and M. L. Burton. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, on the first evening of the conference, by W. W. Hopper and O. S. Lewis.

One of the very delightful features of the conference was luncheon served each day at noon, in the Annex of the church.

Rev. N. B. Harmon makes an ideal host for a conference, and Rev. O. S. Lewis seemed almost ubiquitous, always being just in the right place at the right time.

The good people of the city of Vicksburg, where cluster many sacred memories connected with early Mississippi Methodism, loyally entertained the conference, so we would fain have tarried many days, but even the ecstasies of the Mount of Transfiguration must end.

T. J. O'NEIL, Secretary.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

"What is beyond here?" I asked as I detrained at Cross Plains, Texas. "Jack-rabbits and oil prospects," was the answer! But they treated me nicely, and I enjoyed preaching the gospel in the mesquite country. Sometimes I wish I were a bishop, for two reasons: first, to get the salary of a bishop, and, second, to have his influence; but minus both, I enjoy the laurels of a "superannuate," and when asked why I superannuated, I reply, "Ask Kilgo. That is a cabinet secret!" When I got home I found Sister Steel's "Bide-a-wee Cottage" well under way, and the dear woman as happy in the negro cabin where she has been living for sometime as if she were the mistress of a palace. Wonderful woman! Her fortitude and cheerfulness under the trials we have known entitle her to more roses than Dr. Battle piled on me recently. She is just a bit anxious how we are to ever furnish her cottage; but fearing her anxiety will disturb my nerves, she puts on a cheerful mood every time I am around. Once Gladstone had to make an important speech in Parliament. His wife went with him. As she got out of the carriage, the door shut on her hand, and mashed one of her fingers badly. She bit her lips in her effort to suppress her pain, knowing if her husband discovered it, it would unfit him for his work; and she endured it all through the long address, giving her accustomed smiles, as though nothing had happened. The press rang with the praises of Gladstone, with never a word for the heroic woman, whose fortitude and suffering contributed so much to her husband's fame. So it is with the noble women to whom we owe our success and happiness in life. It was a great privilege to sit with her in the pew, and listen to an excellent message from Brother Battle on "Mother's Day."

This is a "Pelican Pines" letter, because that is the title of my scribbles, but I am now at Evansville, Miss., with Rev. J. H. Ingram, in a meeting, if the rain ever quits. This is in the "Delta," and not far from my boyhood stamping ground around Horn Lake. Soon after leaving Lakeview, the train passed across a field I helped to clear sixty years ago! I was one of the "pioneers" of the Delta. It was a vast and dense wilderness when my father moved into it in the winter of 1860, and matched me, a boy of eleven summers, against "the forest primeval" with a brand-new axe! There was a school for you, Carley! You lily-handed gentry, gowned in the soft raiment of this modern age, know nothing of the heroic experience of those who hewed "the architrave" of the temple of your festivities. We had no levees then, and our home was on an island when the Mississippi left its banks; so I became as expert with a canoe as an Indian. What tales I could tell of adventures in the wilds with bears and panthers and wolves! Memory was active all the way from Memphis here, though the country is nearly all cleared up now, and I could identify only a few places. I did locate a spot where I had a memorable encounter with a wolf, and the vicinity of the lake looked familiar. I preached my first sermon on the bluff above the landing at Lakeview. I see now how God was training me by the strenuous toils of that day for the work ahead. I think the vigorous health and sound lung power I enjoy today are the result of the maul and axe I had to use then; and I am glad to be back on the site of the "university of hard knocks" where I was trained for my mission.

Everything is as wet here as it was when Noah told Ham to fasten the door of the Ark! But we had a nice little audience to start with, and, of course, these Delta folks are as fine as silk. When I got off the train, I looked around for the Grand Central Hotel, and landed at Mr. F. A. Owen's comfortable home. Here I am waited on by Francis Asbury (Owen), and am trying to pump some "Hope-for-the-best" serum into the soul of Parson Ingram, who is blue over the unification calamity that has fallen on our church. At this writing I do not know how the thing is going over at Des Moines. I share in all the sorrow it has brought to the church I have served for fifty years, but, having done all I could to prevent it, I can only await the issue in hope. Of one thing I am sure—there is going to be no improvement until we return to the gospel. We have drifted far from it. It is the old story repeated over again of substituting the form for the power of godliness. We have given up the altar, and are building "annexes" with gymnasiums and game rooms. There is not a word about the fundamental things in the Episcopal Address of the Northern Methodist bishops: it is all about surface matters. Tadlock touched on the vital point in his excellent Fraternal Address, but it needs to be put in the forefront as the paramount issue before us—preaching the gospel. I am not blue, however. History is a great stabilizer of faith. The world has often passed through just such zones of trouble before, and emerged into larger and better life; and it will do so again. The main current is onward, and I am steering my tiny craft with the main current now.

When we unite with the Northern Methodists, I won't have a chance to write for our papers any more; so before it is too late, let me quote what General Lee said. It will be treason to quote him after unification. He said: "My experience of men has neither disposed me to think worse of them, nor indisposed me to serve them; nor in spite of failures, which I lament; of errors, which I now see and acknowledge; or of the present aspect of affairs, do I despair of the future. The truth is this: the march of Providence is so slow and our desires are so impatient: the work of progress is so immense and our means of aiding it so feeble; the life of humanity is so long and that of the individual so brief, that we often see only the ebb of the advancing wave, and are thus discouraged. It is history that teaches us to hope."

THE HATTIESBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Hattiesburg District Conference convened in Broad Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., Tuesday at 2:30 p.m., May 18. The afternoon and night were devoted to the District Sunday School Institute, the program of which was under the direction of Rev. J. C. Chambers, Sunday School Field Secretary. The enthusiastic addresses were very helpful.

The conference met in regular session at 8:30 a.m., Wednesday. The presiding elder, Rev. W. B. Jones, gave general satisfaction in his dispatch of the business and brotherly administration, as will be seen by resolutions appearing in this report.

The attendance was very gratifying, twenty-two pastors and fifty-two delegates, including twelve women delegates, answering to roll call.

At the different sessions devotional exercises were conducted by the presiding elder, H. J. Maddox, F. B. Ormond and P. H. Howse.

Our connectional interests were represented by B. F. Lewis, Rabt. Selby, J. C. Chambers, M. M. Black, and Thos. H. Mills of the Louisiana Conference, representing the Memorial Home in New Orleans.

The regular committees were appointed and presented interesting reports during the closing session.

The pastors' reports, in many respects, were encouraging, and revealed the fact that a spirit of enthusiasm and co-operation is evident over the district, with definite plans for the approaching revival season complete.

Impressive addresses were made by Dr. W. W. Crawford, P. D. Hardin, Jno. A. McLeod and S. L. Postlethwait concerning the new hospital at Hattiesburg that is to be erected on the lot where the South Mississippi Infirmary now stands.

Rev. J. H. Jolly preached at 11 a.m., Wednesday, and Rev. H. J. Moore at night. Each message was filled with the Holy Spirit and was an inspiration to the large and attentive congregations. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered at the close of the night service. An interesting stereopticon lecture was also given by Brother W. D. Hawkins, which was very much appreciated.

Election of delegates to Annual Conference resulted as follows: Jno. A. McLeod, W. F. S. Tatum, K. T. Moore, H. V. Waits, G. W. Holloway, Mrs. H. L. McClesky, M. H. Turner and Jas. Hand, as principals; C. W. Carley, Bura Hilburn and Mrs. P. D. Hardin as alternates.

Two local preachers having died recently, Rev. E. J. Taylor and his son, E. J. Taylor, Jr., appropriate memoirs were prepared and read by Rev. L. Carley. A song, "I Want Religion," composed by Rev. E. J. Taylor, Sr., was sung by Rev. W. P. Meador.

Licensing Committee was announced by the presiding elder as follows: P. D. Hardin, C. M. Crossley, J. E. Williams and S. C. Moody.

Rev. D. R. Campbell was elected District Lay Leader. He was also recommended to the Annual Conference for the recognition of deacon's orders.

Rev. T. W. Adams, Rev. R. H. Barr and Geo. L. Carley were welcome visitors. The conference took a "relax session" during a characteristic speech from Brother Adams.

Collins was selected as the next meeting place.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, according to the polity and law of our church, our beloved presiding elder, Rev. W. B. Jones, is completing the full term as presiding elder of the Hattiesburg District,

"Be it, therefore, resolved, That we, the Hattiesburg District Conference, express to him our brotherly love and affection and commend him as a wise administrator and faithful servant of God. We highly esteem him for his warm sympathy and brotherly love, and honor him for the marked measure of success that has attended his four years of labor as presiding elder. We will continue to remember him at a throne of grace and pray that in the providence of God, he may have many years of efficient service in the Master's Vineyard."

Signed by: P. D. Hardin, W. M. Williams, J. L. Greenway, Committee.

Resolutions of thanks and appreciation to the host of the Conference, Rev. J. E. Williams and Broad Street membership, were adopted.

The ladies of Broad Street Church served luncheon Wednesday at Hotel Shelby and immediately after adjournment, Thursday noon, in the Epworth League room at the church.

"THE MOST FOOLISH OF ALL THINGS."

By Rev. Ulysses Grant Foote, D.D.

The above is the title of a neat little volume of parables that has recently come into my hands. The book is written by H. Anthony (Shands, M.D.). Only the first part of the name appears on the volume. Dr. Shands has a host of friends who do not know that he is the author of this book. His modesty persuaded him to leave off his surname—and his modesty is at fault. That was one of "the most foolish of all things" for him to do. But he did and that is so much for modesty.

Now for the parables: They are well written—exceptionally well written. They are new and fresh. They sparkle with the dew of the morning. It is not every one who can put the dew in the dew of a short story and make it sparkle. These stories are not foolish as the title would indicate to the superficial glance. They are wisdom; and they show that moralities, sentiments, posies, snatches of beauty, and the warmth of fellowships are the fruits of wisdom. Their opposites are "the most foolish of all things."

Of course you know that Dr. Shands is the son of the late Governor Garland D. Shands, of Mississippi and New Orleans.

AN INTERESTING BOOK.

By Rev. James H. Felts.

There recently came into my hands for inspection a little book written by Rev. John Wesley, M. A., entitled, "Primitive Physic: An Easy and Natural Method of Curing Most Diseases." (Homo Sum: humani nihil a me alienumpto)—The Twenty-second Edition. Philadelphia: Printed by Parry Hall, No. 149 Chestnut Street; and sold by John Dickens, in Fourth Street, No. 43; near Race Street, M.DCC.XCI.

This book is now owned by Mr. J. O. Banks, Columbus, Miss., a well-known and splendid citizen of our city, and a leading member of the First Baptist Church. It is a family heirloom. The following entries may be of interest: "Ralph Banks book, May 19, 1772;" "June 25, 1808, Thomas Banks;" "Ralph Banks book, bought of Rev. Ruth Ivey, May 19, 1772," etc.

The preface would be interesting reading to many. I copy a few sentences. "When man came first out of the hand of the great Creator, clothed in body as well as in soul, with immortality and incorruption, there was no place for physic, or the art of healing. As he knew no sin, he knew no pain, no sickness, weakness, or bodily disorder—the entire creation was at peace with man, so long as man was at peace with his Creator. So that well might the morning stars sing together, and all the sons of God shout for joy.'"

The author then goes on to recite how man conspired against heaven—"The heavens, the earth, and all things contained therein, conspire to punish the rebels against their Creator." "So has the Lord of all secured the execution of his decree—dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return."

This is followed by a dissertation on the remedies that may be found, insisting that regular exercise is one of the great remedies and preventives. "'Tis probable, physic, as well as religion, was in the first ages chiefly traditional: every father delivering down to his sons." He compares the flesh of the beasts of the field to that of man, and shows how God would not teach the one and leave the other untaught. Then he tells us how to use the remedies suggested—first making some general observations. A few of them are of interest.

"Tender people should have those who lie with them, or are much about them, sound, sweet, and healthy."

"Every one that would preserve health should be as clean and sweet as possible in their houses, clothes, and furniture."

"Nothing conduces more to health than abstinence and plain food, with due labor."

"Water is the wholesomest of all drinks."

"Strong, and more especially spirituous liquors, are a certain, though slow, poison. Experience shows there is very seldom any danger in leaving them off all at once."

"Tender persons ought constantly to go to bed about nine, and rise at four or five."

"Studious persons should frequently shave, and frequently wash their feet." (I must observe that at least an occasional shave and washing of the feet is not bad for others).

"The fewer clothes one uses, by day or night, the hardier he will be." (Our women of this day ought to be hardy).

"The passions have a greater influence on health than most people are aware of."

"The love of God is the most powerful means of health and long life."—London, June 11, 1747.

Two hundred and eighty-nine diseases are mentioned, and many remedies suggested. Some of them may be of interest. I call the attention of several good friends of mine to the following: To Cure Baldness: Rub the part morning and evening, with onions, till red; and rub it afterward with honey. Or with a decoction of boxwood: tried." For both cold and colic, "drink a pint of cold water." For a cold in the head, "Pare very thin the yellow rind of an orange. Roll it up inside out, and thrust a roll into each nostril." For dry colic, "Drink ginger tea." For acute colic, "Parched peas eaten freely, have had the most happy effect when all other means have failed." To prevent the cramp, "Tie your garter smooth and tight under your knee at going to bed; I never knew this to fail." For dull sight, "Drop in two or three drops of juice of rotten apples often." Measles "Immediately consult an honest physician." For old age, "Take tar water morning and evening: tried."

Mr. Wesley must have anticipated the preacher who "carries a sore toe in his pocket for the delectation of his friends:" "For habitual colic, wear a thin, soft flannel on the part." (I am sure that would be an improvement over a "sore toe in the pocket").

Toothache from cold air, "Keep the mouth full of warm water.' To cure warts, "Rub them daily with a radish." The liberal use of water, internal as well as external, is evidently his remedy for the larger number of ills mentioned.

The book is well preserved, and has many features of interest to those of us who live in this larger day. Wesley was a most remarkable man.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

(A copy of a summary of the proceedings, furnished by the Secretary, Rev. A. J. Gearheard, to the presiding elder, Rev. J. G. Snelling).

I beg to hand you herewith, a summary of the work done by the New Orleans District Conference which adjourned on May 11, having been most delightfully entertained by the Rayne Memorial congregation and Dr. U. G. Foote, its pastor.

I have before me the report of all the pastors, and find that the total membership on the district is 4663, and that the average attendance each Sunday is 1688. There have been 215 accessions since Conference by vows, and 271 by letter, making a total of 516 new members. There are 2613 pupils enrolled in the Sunday schools, exclusive of Home Departments and Cradle Rolls, and there are 32 organized Bible classes. Thus far, 136 have joined the church from the Sunday school. The District has 315 Epworth League members and 522 members of the Woman's Missionary Society. The churches are pledged to pay this year to pastoral support $26,900, to which may be added $4000 missionary money, making a total of $30,900, or an average salary of a fraction less than $2000 per year apiece. It might interest you to know that when I became secretary of this district nine years ago, the membership was 3417 and the salary paid was $14,336.

In the deliberations of the conference, many resolutions were passed of some importance. The Committee on Temperance instructed your secretary to wire Governor J. M. Parker, stating that the conference favored the enactment of a State law similar to the Volstead Federal law. The telegram was sent and the Governor answered that he hoped we would leave the liquor question alone, as he had other matters of more pressing importance to look after just now.

The Church Extension Committee favored a radical forward movement in New Orleans and declared itself in favor of extensive aid being lent by the General Board of Church Extension.

The Committee on Quarterly Conference Records found some fault with some records, and found that some charges had no records present. I consider it a grave fault when any charge fails to bring up its record for inspection.

The Committee on Resolutions adopted a measure favoring the postponement of the Educational Campaign for at least two years and combining it with a campaign for Superannuates. This resolution did not in any way indicate that this district is not in heartiest accord with the educational campaign plan, but simply believes for the sake of the success of it, it should be delayed. The same committee endorsed the $500,000 campaign for the Orphanage and accepted $25,000 as a fair quota for the New Orleans District.

The Committee on Christian Literature favored strongly that the three patronizing Conferences assess themselves so that the support of the Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate may no longer be dependent upon the subscription income of the paper.

The Committee on License to Preach recommended J. L. Greenway, Jr., for license to preach and for admission to the Annual Conference on trial. The Conference licensed him and gave proper recommendation. Brother Greenway is a son of Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Greenway, of the Mississippi Conference, and a member of the Bogalusa church.

After the report of the Seashore Camp-ground School had been heard, a resolution was adopted authorizing the trustees of said property to deed it over to the Board of Education of the Louisiana, Mississippi and South Alabama Conferences.

In the elections at the close of the Conference, Bogalusa was selected as the next place of meeting; Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, Mrs. R. H. Harper, W. W. Carre, Dr. T. P. Bell, C. O. Chalmers, C. H. Wasson, W. B. Thomson and W. H. Jennings were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and Mrs. I. N. Niebergall and Mrs. C. F. Niebergall were elected alternates.

I would say, Brother Snelling, that the conference was a success in every way. There were 78 delegates actually present, and every detail was cared for in fine shape, and you, sir, are to be congratulated.

Yours sincerely,

A. J. GEARHEARD, Sec'y

AN OPPORTUNITY TO HELP.

The Newton District suffered severely in the recent cyclones that struck this section of Mississippi. Three pastoral charges—Bay Springs, Deemer and Rose Hill—were affected.

In the matter of church property loss, the Rose Hill charge suffered most. On this charge three of our church buildings were either wrecked or badly damaged.

At Rose Hill a debt of several years' standing on the church building had been but recently paid off. This building is a complete wreck. The loss of the building would have been a severe blow to the church and charge had there been no other loss sustained; but with several lives lost, many homes wrecked and much other property destroyed, the ruin of one church building and the damaging of two others is so much the more serious.

Any assistance in the work of restoring these houses of worship will be gratefully received by the pastor and the people of the charge.

Contributions should be sent to the pastor, Rev. M. R. Jones, Rose Hill, Miss.

THE STORY OF THE CHILD AND THE ROSE.

One afternoon in the summer a little child went out in the garden to play. It was his mother's garden and it was filled with rosebushes. The mother had often taken the child there to walk with her; and as she bent over the bushes and touched the dark green leaves and the hard, prickly buds, she would say: "Soon these buds will open and then the roses will tell you their story."

But the child didn't understand how the buds could open or how the flowers could tell a story. But on this beautiful afternoon, as the child entered the garden, he saw that one of the buds had become a great red rose. He bent over and touched it and said: "Good morning, big red rose! Can you tell me a story?"

And the rose slowly opened its dark red lips and said: "What kind of a story shall I tell you, little child?"

The child waited for a long minute, for he was so surprised to find that the rose could speak. Then he said, "Tell me a story of how you grew. The last time I saw you you were a hard, green bud, and to-day you are a big red rose!"

"Oh," said the rose, "don't you know how I grow? I do just as my Father wants me to do. I let my roots go way down into his warm, moist earth, and I turn my head way up to his warm, bright sun."

"Is that how you grow?" said the little child.

"Yes," said the big red rose. "My Father takes care of me. Don't you see? When the hot sun makes my headache, then God puts me to sleep in my cool, dark bed, which your mother calls the night. When I awake in the morning I find that he has kissed my cheek with dew; and when I'm thirsty, he sends down his showers, and I drink and drink. I just trust and do what he wants me to do."

"Oh, I see," said the child, very much surprised. And he walked to the house to tell his mother. The next morning the child went to the garden again, and beside the big red rose there was standing a rosebud which was trying very hard to open its eyes to the light. But they were still tightly closed. The child bent over the rosebud and said, "Good morning, little rosebud! Can you tell me a story?" But there was no answer. So the child spoke loudly: "Good morning, little rosebud! Why don't you open your lips to speak to me?"

Then he bent down low so that his ear almost touched the rosebud, and he heard this faint whisper: "Little child, I can't open my lips, and I fear that I shall never be beautiful like the big rose, for a green bug has crept into my heart, and it is eating out my life."

"Oh, dear!" said the little child. "Why don't you drive the green bug away?"

"Alas! I can't," said the little rosebud. "If only I had hands like yours, I could brush him away, or if I had feet like yours I could run when I saw him coming. But I must stand here and wait."

The little child sighed, for he was greatly distressed. He bent down close to the rosebud, but he could not see the green bug. It was way down deep in the heart of the rose.

"But listen, little child," said the rosebud, "to what I have been thinking. When I see a little boy like you get angry at his brother or sister, I say to myself: 'A green bug is creeping into the child's heart, and it will keep his life from opening.' I wonder if you boys and girls have no better sense, for you have hands and feet." And when the rosebud had finished this long speech it was all out of breath. And the little child didn't say a word, but he walked slowly towards the house to see his mother.

A few mornings later the child went out again to the garden to play. The big red rose was still standing there, but many of its petals had fallen to the ground, and the edges of the inside petals were turning brown. But the rose was still very sweet. "Good morning, big red rose," said the little child. "Can you tell me another story?"

And the rose opened its dark red lips and said: "What kind of a story shall I tell you to-day, little child?"

And the child bent over the rose and put his nose close down to its upturned face and said: "Tell me why you are so sweet."

And the big red rose said, "I just open my face to the sun, and I open my heart wide to everybody. The bees come and suck honey from my heart, and little children come and kiss my lips. I just open my heart and give it to the world. I suppose that is why I am sweet."

"But your petals are all falling off," said the child.

"Yes," said the rose. "I have opened my heart so wide that I am breaking them off. And soon they will be all gone."

"And I shall not see you any more when I come to your garden?" said the little child sadly.

"No," said the big red rose, "but remember the fine talks we have had together. And I have made you happier, haven't I? And so my life has been worth living."

Two days later the little child went to the garden again. The red rose was gone, and on the ground about the bush were a few faded petals which the wind had not yet blown away. But the child remembered what the roses had said: "I do what my Father wants me to do," "I would run away if I had hands and feet," "I've made you happier, so my life was worth living."

And when the child grew to be a man, he often told his little boy the story of the child and the rose.—Rev. Robert Seneca Smith, in the Congregationalist.

ON TEACHING HISTORY TO CHILDREN.

By Eva March Tappan, Ph.D.

As a child I had a profound dislike for history, and considering that a history recitation in those days was hardly more than a struggle to recite "the lesson" as nearly verbatim as possible, I am inclined to think that my childish judgment was very good. Poor little youngsters that we were, we had to draw plans of battle grounds, to learn the numbers killed and wounded on the opposing sides, and to recite lengthy lists of dates, adjusting its proper event to each. We had no little idea of the relative importance of the events that the burning of a Fox village by the Indians seemed to us quite as momentous as the surrender of Quebec. A child has little background of knowledge. Dates [illegible] to him, and proper names, if he [illegible] of their bearers, might just as well [illegible].

In teaching history to children, there is just one fact that we can generally depend upon, and that is their unfailing interest in people. The children's librarians say that they cannot begin to supply the demand for short, interesting biographies, stories of people and what they did, told in a simple way. "Columbus set sail from Spain to try to find China" will make a child listen. "An attempt was made by Spain to discover China" will make him wonder how soon he can get away!

If I were going to teach the history of the United States to boys and girls of nine or ten, I would try to do it by inducing them to read simple, picturesque, well-written stories of the men who have made our country what it is. Then I would let the children talk of what they had read and ask questions about it. Some of these questions I would answer; some I would ask them to try to answer for themselves. I would say nothing about exact dates, but I would make four or five general divisions of our history, such as discoveries and settlements, Colonial days and Indian wars, the Revolution, etc., and put a copy into every book. There would not be many stories of our American heroes that the children would not soon be able to put into their proper divisions. Then, if more than one book had been read, I would go through the stories rapidly in their chronological order, bringing out any information that the children might have gathered, and occasionally adding a word to connect the stories or to make some point clearer.

What would this accomplish? At the end of the reading the children would be on good terms with twenty-five or more of the chief actors in the story of the United States; they would be well prepared for a "real history," and, best of all, they would look forward to it, not with dread, but with pleasant anticipation. THE ACTION AT DES MOINES CONCERNING UNIFICATION.

In order that our readers may know exactly the action taken by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church concerning unification, we give below the report of the special committee appointed to consider the matter, of which committee Bishop W. F. McDowell was chairman. The report was adopted in the committee by a unanimous vote, 63 of the 103 members being present and voting, and by a unanimous vote of the General Conference, with the amendment that vacancies on the continued Commission on Unification be filled by appointment of the Board of Bishops, and a supplementary motion authorizing the Board of Bishops to appoint the delegates to the proposed Joint General Convention, provided that such Convention is agreed to by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The report is as follows:

Report of Committee.

Your Special Committee on Unification, to which was referred the plan of unification trausmitted to the General Conference by the Joint Commission on Unification, begs to report as follows:

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has received with profound interest and has carefully considered the suggested plan of unification transmitted by the Joint Commission of the Methodist Epipscopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. We commend the Joint Commission for its careful and thorough work and express our deep appreciation of its painstaking efforts. While it has brought us face to face with the difficulties involved in the creation of a plan for unification, it has also revealed the imperative need of union and clearly advanced the church nearer the realization for which we devoutly pray.

In view, however, of the fact that there appears to be in each church considerable numbers who are not entirely satisfied with the plan suggested for consideration, many of whom would be distressed if it were adopted in its present form; and in order that the members of each church shall be in full accord when unification is accomplished, it is our conviction that every possible effort should be made to reach an early conclusion that may be acceptable to all members of both churches at home and abroad.

Realizing the difficulty, and the prolonged delay that must inevitably result from any attempt of the General Conferences of the two churches meeting in separate sessions, at intervals of two years from each other, to modify or amend any proposed constitution, we believe that such amendment, modification, or substitution as may be necessary, can be best and most satisfactorily accomplished by joint and concurrent action, which can only be by a body, in which both churches are represented, meeting together.

We therefore propose, if agreeable to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, that a joint general convention be called, to be composed of a total membership of not less than 200 nor more than 400 members, ministers and laymen in equal numbers from each of the two churches, chosen in such manner as each General Conference may determine, to which shall be committed the plan submitted by the Joint Commission and any other plan or plans that may be proposed.

We further recommend that the suggested general convention be authorized and instructed to consider the whole matter of unification, and to create and submit any plan of union that may seem to it desirable and possible for such constitutional procedure as the Discipline of each church may require; provided that no plan shall be submitted that does not have the approval of each delegation and the approval of the convention as a whole. If the general convention herein suggested is approved by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, it shall determine the number of delegates which shall constitute the convention, and the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church shall be governed accordingly.

We reaffirm our deep conviction that the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, should be reunited in one church. And so earnestly do we desire such a reunion that we declare ourselves ready to accept any equitable plan of union that shall be mutually satisfactory to the membership of both churches. It is our further judgment and conviction that a settlement of the fixed purpose of union will greatly facilitate the preparation of a satisfactory plan of union.

In order to make full provision for further negotiations on whatever basis may be found most desirable we recommend the continuance of a Commission on Unification composed of five bishops, ten ministers and ten laymen, appointed as follows: Five bishops appointed by the Board of Bishops, fifteen members from the General Conference Districts, to be elected by and from the delegates of the General Conference Districts, laymen being chosen from each odd numbered and a minister from each even numbered district; and five members at large, three ministers and two laymen, chosen by the Board of Bishops after the district representatives are chosen.

This Commission is hereby authorized and instructed to act with the Commission from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, either in arranging for the convention proposed above, or in perfecting the plans already before the two churches, or in working out new plans of unification for submission to the churches. It is also directed to communicate this action of the General Conference to the Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

We further recommend that this General Conference shall adjourn its session at Des Moines, Iowa, to meet in an adjourned session on the call of the bishops at such time and place as they may determine for the purpose of considering and acting upon any report or recommendations that may be submitted to it by the Joint Convention or the Commission on Unification; and that the Commission on Entertainment of this General Conference be and are hereby authorized and directed to make the arrangements therefor and to provide entertainment for such adjourned session when it shall be called.

And we further declare that in committing this important subject to our commission we do so in fullest confidence in their wisdom and godly judgment and their knowledge of our desire that in all things the will of God may be accomplished. And we pray that they may be divinely guided, so as to hasten the answer to the Lord's intercessory prayer, "That they may be one;" that united Methodism, unhampered by State or national lines, unhindered by oceans or mountains, undivided by races or languages, may help give speedy answer to the disciple's prayer taught them and us by our Lord himself, "Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as it is in Heaven."

Signed by: William F. McDowell, Chairman; Ernest H. Cherrington, Secretary.

After the report was read, Bishop McDowell, as chairman of the committee, made the statement given below, after which, without discussion, the report was unanimously adopted, as stated above. We reproduce the action, as recorded in the Daily Christian Advocate:

Statement of Bishop McDowell.

Bishop McDowell: Mr. Chairman, four years ago you appointed commissioners to act with commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to consider the subject of unification with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Recalling your action at Saratoga, you will remember that you gave your commission instruction to proceed upon the basis of what were called basic principles. Those basic principles involved what has come now to be called regional conferences and a marked reorganization of the church. The joint commission, and your commissioners, together with the commissioners from the Church, South, together and separately, have worked faithfully in an endeavor to prepare a plan in accordance with what each commission regarded as the instruction, more or less formal and complete, of the General Conference creating the commission. Again and again we came straight up to the difficulty that we were not at liberty to proceed further along certain lines, in view of the instruction that had been given us. This will explain in a very definite way the declaration in the resolution transmitting the proposed constitution without recommendation by the joint commission. You will recall the language of that resolution of transmissal, namely, that this is the best that could be reached under the circumstances and under our instructions. Our brethren from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for instance, originally felt that they were limited to a very small number of regional conferences, and they went quite beyond their own judgment as to what their own freedom permitted them to do in consenting to a larger number. Our brethren also felt that their instructions, not at all in the nature of an ultimatum from their General Conference, called for a certain relation to be granted to the Negro members of our church. But as we went forward during the four years, they consented to a very wide departure from the position which in the beginning, they felt themselves obliged to assume.

Now, in going forward in an effort to reorganize the church upon the basis of regional conferences, we came face to face with the serious difficulties involved in the treatment of our own Negro brethren, and then of the recognition and treatment of our foreign mission fields, with the net result that when we came face to face with what we had reached, we were not quite clear enough about it to ask you formally to adopt it as the basis of a new church. We were clear enough to authorize my saying to you that we believe ourselves to be moving in the right direction, and that we can, with a little more time, with a little further study, make a plan that will conserve the best features of the so-called regional conference, and the best features of organization for our church in what we call, mistakenly, foreign lands—for in the church there are no foreign lands—and we believe we are on the right line, that we can reach a conclusion that will give us a genuinely ecumenical church, universal in its unity and its authority, and at the same time recognizing local interest and initiative, and the right to exercise a certain activity upon the basis of homogeneity, clearness, and commonness of interest.

Therefore your committee, when it came face to face with this program that was submitted, felt that it could not wisely undertake to amend the proposed constitution in detail, and throw those amendments in here, and then, if they were accepted, send them out to the Church, South, for its action at a General Conference two years from now, without endangering what no one wants to endanger, namely, the whole program of union of the churches. We therefore make this recommendation, namely, that the commission—your commission, although not necessarily the same in personnel—be continued, with authority to continue negotiations with the commission in existence from the Church, South, either for the purpose of arranging the joint constitutional convention which is proposed, or if that does not appeal to the commissioners of the Church, South, to continue negotiations upon the basis of the plan now before us, or any modification of that plan, or any new plan that may seem better than anything that is before us; all of this to be resubmitted to the General Conference, four years from now, or to a special session of the General Conference that may be called for the purpose of considering what may be agreed to.

I think that covers the preliminary statement, as far as I wish to make it. I believe it would be worth your while, however, to let me say, before I sit down for the moment, that after days and nights of study of this problem, hours of consideration, reference to subcommittees, and the hearing of all representations that were desired to be made, it is a thing for us to thank God for that at the last the sixty-three persons present, representing many varieties of opinion, and representing every section of the church—the South, the border, the North, and the foreign mission fields—all agreed in adopting this report, and ask you to adopt it with the small amendments or suggestions that I have made. Before the report is finally acted upon I may ask permission to say a closing word. I simply offer this word in explanation of the report, before you consider it.

William F. Burris (Missouri): I move the adoption of the report.

(Motion seconded).

(The vote on this amendment was taken, and was in favor).

Then the report with the incorporated amendment was unanimously adopted.

Bishop McDowell: There be some of you sitting here who shall not taste of death until you see these churches one.

At this point the Conference arose en masse and sang "Praise God from Whom All Blessing Flow."

It is expected that at least 1,000 delegates wil be in attendance from America.

Brother T. Wynn Holloman, Alexandria, La., Chairman of Minute Men for the Louisiana Conference, has recently issued a letter to the district chairmen in which he calls to their attention the various points of the work each is expected to do. Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, General Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, requests that all ministers going to Europe this summer notify him at 105 East 22d Street, New York City. It is hoped that points of contact with Protestant religious work in Europe may be established by these visitors that will be mutually helpful.

Dr. J. H. Reynolds, president of Hendrix College, has been appointed director of the educational campaign soon to begin throughout the church. He is recognized as one of the leading educators of the church, and is especially well qualified for the position to which he has been called. During the absence of Dr. Reynolds, Professor C. J. Greene will be in active charge of Hendrix College.

We take the following from a recent number of the Southern Christian Advocate, contained in a letter from Dr. John O. Willson: "I am visiting Bishop Kilgo at Charlotte, and am glad to say that his condition is not so grave as some may think. * * * He has suffered much from sciatica and has been weakened in nerves and body, but is under skillful treatment and is responding to it." This will be good news to the many friends of Bishop Kilgo in Louisiana and Mississippi.

Miss Cora Godat was consecrated as a deaconess in the chapel of Scarritt Bible and Training School, at Kansas City, Mo., on Sunday, May 23, Bishop E. R. Hendrix officiating. She was to have been consecrated during the Council Meeting, but was unable to be present on account of illness. Her appointment is to the Wesley House, in connection with Mareus Lindsey Memorial Church, Louisville, Ky. Miss Godat is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Godat, prominent members of the Carrollton Avenue Church, this city.

We acknowledge receipt of the splendidly arranged program of the fiftieth annual session of the Sardis District Conference, to be held at Hernando, Miss., June 10-11. Dr. R. A. Meek, presiding elder, and Rev. N. G. Augustus, conference host. An important part of the program, as we view it, is the proposed discussion of some practical questions dealing with unoccupied territory in the district, the development of interest in the weaker places, the status of the rural work, and the problem of keeping up Sunday schools and congregations through the winter.

The Home Missions Council has recently given out the following interesting figures: "There are 202 denominations in the United States. Thirty-one new denominations were born in ten years and seventeen died. Of all the people in the United States 41,926,854 are church members, an increase of 6,860,000 in ten years, or twenty per cent. There are 227,000 churches, an increase of 15,000. The value of church property is $1,676,000,000, an increase of $120,000,000 in ten years. There are 15,721,815 Roman Catholics. From this number should be deducted fifteen per cent for infants and children, all of which are included in the Roman Catholic statistics. Less than one-third of the church members in the United States are Roman Catholics. The Roman Catholic proportion in the total membership was 40½ per cent in 1906, in 1919 it was 37½ per cent. In ten years the Roman Catholic gained 10 3-5 per cent while the Protestant Churches gained 23 2-5 per cent. The Baptists gained 26 1-5 per cent; the Disciples 24 4-5 per cent; the Presbyterians 23 1-5 per cent; the Methodists and Episcopalians 23 1-5 per cent; the Congregationalists and Lutherans 13 per cent. The Universalists are losing, having to-day only 59,000 members. The Unitarians have only 82,000. The percentage of men in nearly all Protestant Churches is increasing. It is now 43 9-10 per cent. The average ministerial salary among the Northern Methodists is $1,223, among the Congregationalists $1,313, Northern Presbyterians $1,474, Episcopalians $1,632 and Unitarians $2,080."

On account of the fact that Monday was observed as a holiday by the post office in New Orleans, no mail deliveries being made, we are unable to publish two or three notices which we received on Tuesday after we had gone to press. These notices will appear next week. We again call attention to the fact that half of the Advocate is "made up" on Friday for the following week, and the other half on Monday. Our ability to comply with the request, "Please get this in this week," is dependent solely upon the time we receive the communication and the number of similar requests that have been made. We do our best to comply with all reasonable requests.

Mrs. Mary Cordelia Simpson was born near Goodman, Holmes County, Miss., June 12, 1841, and died, May 8, 1920, at the advanced age of 79. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Shine. In early life she gave her heart to God and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and remained a worthy and faithful member to the end. She loved her church and was a constant reader of the New Orleans Advocate. It was a pleasure to her pastor to visit her in her home and hear from her lips words of confidence and hope. There seemed to be a restful waiting for the time of her homegoing. Rev. Claude Simpson, of the North Texas Conference, presiding elder of the Gainesville District, came some days before she left us and had the joy of mingling in sympathy with loved ones and friends as she passed through the valley and shadow of death to the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. She was the mother of seven children: one died in infancy; one, William, died at 7, and Joseph at 32; Miss Rena and Thomas, of Camden, Miss.; Emmett, of Texarkana, Ark., and Claude, of Gainsville, Texas. She also reared a nephew, Frank C. Shine, of Water Valley, Miss. Miss Rena and Thomas had the immediate care of her in her last illness, and lovingly cared for her every want. Some days before the end came her suffering was very acute; but in it all she had the sweet spirit of patience, meekness and resignation. She doubtless realized the truth of Ps. 23:4, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and staff they comfort me." On Sunday, May 9, at 4:30 p.m., a large company of loved ones and friends met at Shiloh church to pay their tribute of respect to her memory. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Hutchison. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." C. H. ELLIS.

Camden, Miss., May 22, 1920.

One of the best and brightest of boys has gone to heaven, WILLIAM MALCOLM MYERS, son of Price and Maggie Myers. He was sick one and a half years. We thought surely he would get well. His physician was untiring, his parents showed devotion that is seldom equalled, but to no avail. Malcolm was born June 29, 1903, and went to heaven March 21, 1920. He was a member of the Methodist Church and loved it, ready to contribute at any time and help in any way. He loved books, had read extensively and was a remarkably bright boy, but we need not be surprised, for with Myers on one side and Broadfoot on the other he could hardly fail to be a good and intelligent boy. I am sure the parents are submissive and are expecting to meet him some day. May God deal tenderly with the sorrowing family and let their pathway the balance of the way be strewn with flowers. M. L. WHITE.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas on May 6, 1920, it pleased Almighty God to call from this imperfect to that all perfect and celestial world above, our beloved friend and brother, Rev. I. F. Holland, who labored so earnestly and zealously among us during the trying times of 1918; and whereas we desire to express to his family, relatives and friends, our deepest sympathy in their sad bereavement, and to remind our fellow-man of the esteem in which he was held in our community, as evideneed by the crowded church at the memorial service in honor of our deceased brother, which service was held at the M. E. Church, South, in Gunnison, Miss., on May 7, 1920, and was attended by members of other denominations as well as his former flock; and whereas we desire to commit to writing a simple tribute to the memory of one who was first of all a man, noble, brave and true, lovable, like the "Lowly Nazarene," one who so far as we knew had not an enemy on earth, a gentleman to the core, whose well-spent life has been a blessing to those who knew him best,

Therefore be it resolved, That we, the people of Gunnison, Miss., and surrounding community do hereby extend to his mother, wife, children, brothers, sister, relatives and friends our sincere sympathy in this, their sad bereavement, and remind them that though his death might seem premature and untimely for one of such admirable traits and qualifications, yet the world is better to-day for his having lived the life he did, and we shall point to it with pride and say: "Emulate the life and character of I. F. Holland."

The above resolutions were read at the Methodist Church, Sunday evening, May 9, and adopted by the unanimous vote of a crowded house.

How Coca-Cola Resembles Tea

If you could take about one-third of a glass of tea, add two-thirds glass of carbonated water, then remove the tea flavor and add a little lemon juice, phosphoric acid, sugar, caramel and certain flavors in the correct proportion, you would have an almost perfect glass of Coca-Cola.

In fact, Coca-Cola may be very well described as "a carbonated fruit-flavored counterpart of tea, of approximately one-third the stimulating strength of the average cup of tea."

The following analyses, made and confirmed by the leading chemists throughout America, show the comparative stimulating strength of tea and Coca-Cola stated in terms of the quantity of caffein contained in each:

Black tea—1 cupful (hot) (5 fl. oz.)	1.54 gr.
Green tea—1 glassful (cold) (8 fl. oz., exclusive of ice)	2.02 gr.
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz. (prepared with 1 fl oz of syrup)	.61 gr.

Of all the plants which Nature has provided for man's use and enjoyment, none surpasses tea in its refreshing, wholesome and helpful qualities. This explains its almost universal popularity, and also explains, in part, the wide popularity of Coca-Cola, whose refreshing principle is derived from the tea leaf.

The Coca-Cola Company has issued a booklet giving detailed analysis of its recipe. A copy will be mailed free on request to anyone who is interested. Address:

FAINTING AND DIZZY SPELLS

The Cause of such Symptoms and Remedy Told in This Letter.

Syracuse, N. Y. "When I commenced the Change of Life I was poorly, had no appetite and had fainting spells. I suffered for two or three years before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the Liver Pills which I saw advertised in the papers and in your little books. I took about twelve bottles of your Vegetable Compound and found it a wonderful remedy. I commenced to pick up at once and my suffering was relieved. I have told others about your medicine and know of some who have taken it. I am glad to help others all I can." Mrs. R. E. DEMING, 437 W. Lafayette Ave., Syracuse, N. Y.

While Change of Life is a most critical period of a woman's existence, the annoying symptoms which accompany it may be controlled, and normal health restored by the timely use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Moreover this reliable remedy contains no narcotics or harmful drugs and owes its efficiency to the medicinal extractives of the native roots and herbs which it contains.

EIGHT REASONS WHY PATRIOTIC VOTERS SHOULD NOT SUPPORT BEER AND WINE CANDIDATES.

By Wayne B Wheeler, General Counsel, Anti-Saloon League.

1. The position of such candidates is one of nullification, hence indefensible. The Eighteenth Amendment will not be repealed. It took thirty-six States to ratify it, and it will take thirty-six States to repeal it. The majority in one branch of the Legislature in thirteen States can prevent repeal. Thirty-seven States have now adopted prohibition laws or prohibition enforcement codes. It is clear, therefore, that the Eighteenth Amendment is a fixture in the Constitution of the United States. The Federal Prohibition Code is necessary to secure its enforcement. The proposed beer clause is only a camouflage to give respectability to a nullification effort.

2. The States which have adopted prohibition found that it was impossible to enforce it while containing a beer exemption. Georgia adopted a two per cent beer amendment and the courts and the people soon reached the conclusion that if prohibition was to be enforced, this provision must be eliminated. They adopted even a stronger standard than the one found in the Volstead Enforcement Code. Massachusetts tried a light wine and beer amendment many years ago. It proved a dismal failure and was repudiated.

3. The legislatures of prohibition States as well as Congress have defeated in recent years every attempt made by the liquor interests to adopt beer and wine amendments, because such provisions defeated the purpose and enforcement of prohibition laws.

4. A beer and wine amendment means the continuance and reopening of the old beer saloon. It was a menace to clean politics and common decency. The people will never invite back what they have already abolished as a public nuisance.

5. In all referendum votes in the States, the people have defeated the beer and light wine proposals. Michigan adopted prohibition by 68,000 and a year later defeated the light wine and beer proposal by 207,000. Ohio adopted prohibition in 1918, and a year later, when the soldier boys had returned, a referendum vote was taken on a 2.75 per cent beer amendment and the dry majority was increased. Similar votes with the same results have been recorded in Washington, Oregon, Colorado and Arizona. When the people realize that the issue is one of law enforcement, these beer and wine attacks go to overwhelming defeat.

6. The State Supreme Courts have uniformly upheld laws prohibiting beverage liquors containing one-half of one per cent alcohol or less. They considered this standard essential to the enforcement of law, and to defeat the various schemes used by liquor dealers to evade prohibition. If you give the liquor dealers an inch, they take a mile.

7. The United States Supreme Court, in sustaining one part of the Federal prohibition code with its one half of one per cent standard, held that the experience in the States and the Supreme Court decisions of the States made clear that it was necessary to have such a standard in order to secure "capable and effective law enforcement." The Court said that this standard in the Volstead Act was not "unreasonable or arbitrary." In the face of the Supreme Court decisions, every candidate who champions a beer amendment arrays himself against law and order, and in fact makes an attack upon the Government itself.

8. This is a most inopportune time to encourage lawlessness. In these days of unrest and defiance of law in some places by a small minority, it is vital that all good citizens stand by the Government, its laws and their honest enforcement. If the outlawed brewers can defy the Constitution of the United States because they do not like it, then any other group of citizens who are opposed to any other law can use the same method, and nullify that law, and the Government itself would be in jeopardy. When law and its enforcement are gone, all is gone in orderly government. Now is the time for every 100 per cent American to insist upon a fair and honest enforcement of law. Those who are opposed to the Eighteenth Amendment have the constitutional right to repeal it by legal and orderly methods, but defiance of the law is nullification and anarchy.

FROM ENTERPRISE AND STONEWALL, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: This is our second year on the Enterprise and Stonewall charge, and there is much here to encourage us and make us rejoice. Rev. George H. Thompson, our presiding elder, was with us ten days in April at the Enterprise church, and we had the best revival since I have been on this charge. We received nineteen into the Methodist Church—fourteen on profession of faith; besides which, two went to the Baptist and one to the Episcopal Church. It was truly a season of reviving fire and transforming power, and its fruit abides with us. Brother Thompson is a preacher of rare ability and power, and the association and fellowship of those days was a privilege we shall always remember with pleasure.

Last Sunday night (May 16) brought to a close a week of revival services at Stonewall. We were assisted there by Rev. J. M. Corley, of Lumberton, whose heart-reaching Gospel sermons arrested the hearts and consciences of many. There were several accessions, and a new interest aroused among the church members.

But we have had an element of sadness mixed with our joy. The terrible tornado which swept through this section on the morning of April 20, destroyed the Concord church and laid waste the fields and houses of more than a dozen families in that community. The response for the relief of the people was very generous and prompt and we have supplied their most urgent needs.

We feel that the church in that community must be rebuilt at the earliest possible time, and we appeal to the generosity of Methodists elsewhere to send us aid. We trust that many who are able will help us in this task.

Cordially,

VICTOR G. CLIFFORD, P. C.

Sunday School

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The Winona District Sunday School Institute will be held at Moorhead, June 6. There is but one reason why this district might not be put into the Third-Rank Standard this year. To do this would be a notable achievement. In these district institutes it is expected that each district officer will discuss the department under his charge.

Here is what must be done to put a district in the Third-Rank:

1. Plan of General Board adopted; district organized as far as Secretary and Superintendent of at least two departments.
2. Annual District Institute held, with fifty per cent of charges represented.
3. Sixty per cent of schools observing Sunday School Day and making offering.
4. Forty per cent of schools attaining Third-Rank Standard.
5. At least two departments of district attaining Third-Rank Standard.

You notice the fourth point is the hardest one, but the most important. Let us answer this question: "Is it more important to raise money than to raise children?"

The district institute gives an opportunity to the workers to see what others are doing and how they are getting results. We also find out that we are not the only ones failing to do the work as it ought to be done. Again, we see the standard by which we are to measure our work. My own experience is, I never attended an institute that I did not get something that paid me for attending.

You can go into a school where the teachers are taking the training course and into one where the teachers are not studying and you will see at once why one is vibrant with life and interest and the other cold, dying, almost dead. Any soul on fire will warm other souls. Indifference is catching as truly as interest is catching.

There will be an institute at Webb, June 5, for the benefit of the teachers in that part of the Winona District. Write to Mr. Marvin Geiger, Webb, Miss., and tell him to look for you. Get your car in shape and take a half dozen young people with you and let them see what it means to have a good time.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Last Sunday was spent at First Church, Laurel. It was a most happy occasion. The Sunday School Day Program was put on at this time and it was most enjoyable indeed. They had a larger offering than last year. The program was more definite and it seemed to have been executed easier than heretofore.

The Fernwood Sunday school holds the record for the largest contribution for Sunday School Day in the records of the Conference; $286.48 is the amount they contributed this day. They seem to be the banner charge this year. This amount is more than several of the districts reported last year.

Monday night, a service at Forest was held. Mr. W. W. Brabham, of the Rural Work Department of the Sunday School Board, was with me. Tuesday was spent on the Homewood charge Brother Brabham did us good work. Three Sunday schools on the charge were represented and I feel that much abiding good was done.

The Meridian District Institute is now history. Good work was done by all on the program. The following district officers were elected: E. R. Lowery, Secretary, Meridian; Mrs. H. H. Huntley, Elementary Supt., Shuhuta; Miss Madge Stewart, Inter-Sr. W. B. C., Meridian; R. C. Weems, Young-People-Adult W. B. C., Shubuta; S. M. Graham, Missions, Meridian; Rev. M. L. White, DeKalb, Teacher-training.

The Institute was interesting, but the attendance was short on account of the farmers being busy at this time and the other excuses handed in.

Pray for the work and the workers.
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

FROM EPWORTH, NEW ORLEANS.

Dear Brother Carley: Six months of our Conference year have come and gone. They have been full of activity for all. There are times when it would seem as if all our efforts, even though they are continuous and with the best of motives and with a sincere desire that our Savior would lead us, are not fruit-bearing. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God."

When we came to Epworth it was with a feeling of uncertainty, but the people received us with an earnestness and a welcome which have grown as the months have passed.

At our second quarterly conference we reported a few dollars short of one-fourth of our total subscriptions to the Centenary, paid; twenty-three members taken into the church since Conference; Sunday school averaging 90 in attendance, and a Missionary Society re-organized and already working with a membership of thirty.

We had a public installation of the officers of the Missionary Society last night, which was very impressive. Furnishings for that new parsonage which we hope to have soon have been purchased to the amount of $125, and paid for.

Then last Friday night, when the pastor and his family had settled themselves for the evening a knock was heard at the door and such a procession has not been seen for many a day in the city of New Orleans, for about forty of our members came with packages and bundles and baskets and a baby carriage, with a fine baby which the pastor baptized a few weeks ago. Well, it was an old-fashioned "pounding"—a table piled full of flour, new potatoes, snap beans, rice, grits, salt, beans, tomatoes, peas, corned beef, roast beef, plum pudding, and—think of it—sugar.

Then there was prayer, singing, and games—a real good time. Do you wonder that the pastor and his wife think they are serving the best people in the Louisiana Conference?

Say, Brother Carley, let's go fishing.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago, folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle.

POWER FROM ON HIGH.

By Rev. C. B. Powell.

From Galilee the disciples found their way back to Jerusalem, where their Lord showed Himself to them once more to give them their final instructions and to bid them farewell. Jesus in His last conversation with His disciples spoke to them of their apostolic duties as witnesses unto Himself, as preachers of His gospel; he also spoke concerning the promise of the Spirit, whose descent was to fit them for their work; also what they should do until the promise be fulfilled. First, was the apostolic commission to preach repentance and remission of sins, in the name of Jesus, among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, with a virtual injunction to be faithful witnesses to what they had seen and heard, especially with reference to His resurrection from the dead. Then finally the direction to wait for the promise at Jerusalem until clothed with power from on high.

Power from on high—the expression itself has a mystical sound, and its sense seems difficult to define; yet the general meaning is surely plain enough, for the thing signified is not altogether a power to work miracles, but just what Jesus had spoken to them about in His farewell address before His death. It meant all that the apostles were from the mission of the Comforter: enlightenment of the mind, enlargement of the heart, transformation of their characters, sanctification of their faculties, whetting and polishing their swords for subduing the world unto the truth. These, or the effects of these, constituted the power for which Jesus directed the eleven to wait. It was a spiritual power, not a magical; an inspiration, not a possession alone; a power which was not to act as a blind fanatical force, but to manifest itself as a spirit of love and of a sound mind. They were to be less like themselves, and more like their Master—no longer childish, weak, and carnal, but initiated into the mysteries of Kingdom, under the guidance of the Spirit of grace and holiness.

Such power promised, it was evidently successful in that day, and it is successful to-day. Vain were the official titles at that time, and vain are they to-day. The world is to be evangelized, not by men invested with church dignity, and with parti-colored garments, but by men who have experienced the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and who are visibly endued with the divine power. They were directed to tarry until the power came, to be much in prayer, and concerned about this special baptism of power. They fully understood that it was needful, and comprehended the fact that it would take such power to save the world, knowing that men and women were tied to sin and could not be freed unless such power came into their lives.

Those facts were true then, and they are true now. While we may to some extent resist such power, it is the only power that will free one from sin, and, at the same time, give to the individual a sense of peace, experience of righteousness, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Satan hates it, the worldly side of life hates it, but it is the only way, and the one way, that the world is to be saved.

I believe that the day is dawning, or rather has already dawned, when the ministers of Christ who are true, and remain so, must be and will be endued with power from on high. The church is awaiting a great revival: not waiting for a great number as only additions in membership, but a real revival of the heart, breaking away from sin, a separation from the world. Tell me that a man is a child of God and walks with the world? No, indeed!

My Christian brethren, God is calling you and me to go. Go where? "Preach my Gospel." Is that all? "I will make you a power." A power for what? To turn men from sin to a life of righteousness in Christ.

May God bless our great church and her great preachers.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

Mission Study.

According to reports, wonderful progress was made in Mission Study during the past year throughout the entire church. Let us all unite in earnest prayer that our goal for 1920 may be fully realized—a Mission Study class in every auxiliary and every woman and child a member. The year 1920 has been designated as Bible year and the general theme, "The Conservation of Human Life," is in line with the thought of the leaders who ask that this year be observed with special reference to the study and distribution of the Bible throughout the world. The following are some of the books recommended for study during the year: For the adult societies: "The Bible and Missions," by Helen Barrett Montgomery; "The Church and the Community," by Ralph E. Diffendorfer. Young People—"A Better World," by Tyler Dennett; Juniors—"Lamplighters Aeross the Sea," by Margaret T. Applegarth. In addition to these, two books on stewardship are recommended for study: "Money the Acid Test," by David McConaughy, and "The New Christian," by Ralph Cushman. You can secure these books from Smith & Lamar, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

MRS. BROWNLEE,
Conference Supt. Publicity.

Social Service Work.

The social service rendered by the various auxiliaries of the different Conferences may be classified under the following heads:

1. Health—Co-operating with the health authorities in clean-up campaigns and for the eradication of the hookworm and tuberculosis.

2. Enactment of Laws regarding (1) marriage, (2) Sunday observance, (3) prohibition, (4) picture censorship, (5) compulsory education, (6) cleaner politics.

3. Labor—(1) Investigation of local labor conditions, (2) finding employment for the unemployed.

4. Education—(1) Co-operation for moonlight schools, (2) night schools, (3) improvement of sanitary conditions in schools, (4) provision of reading rooms for young men on Sunday afternoon.

5. Amusement—(1) Investigation of dance halls, (2) closing of street carnivals.

6. Institutional Co-operation—(1) County prisons, (2) State schools for delinquent girls, (3) home for incurables, (4) children's home, (5) public clinic, (6) Settlement Houses.

7. For Negroes—(1) Community Clubs, (2) co-operation with Negro Parent-Teachers' Clubs.

8. For Immigrants — Community clubs.—Council Bulletin.

Woman's Missionary Societies.

Just what the Woman's Missionary Societies mean to the women of America, they are meaning to the women of the East, and even more. It is their one training school in religious life, their chance for self-expression, their place of leadership.

In Japan—The women of the West Japan Conferences are already organized into a Conference society. This is the Conference in which our work is located. The district and local work is pretty well developed. The two Conferences unite their gifts in the support of a missionary, Mr. Kihara, in Liberia. The women of the two Conferences of the Japan Methodist Church are taking steps to unite organically so as to form one society for all Japan.

In Korea—The women everywhere are organized into societies. The Bible women, as they itinerate from place to place, give these societies special attention. Some one is appointed at the mission meeting each year to prepare the programs and material for them. Most of the society members tithe or give systematically. In Korea one-tenth of the collection is sent to the work in Africa, and the rest supports native Bible women in heathen villages of Korea.

In China—The woman's societies are rapidly spreading. Women come for miles to attend them. They have a fine Executive Committee of the Conference and good district secretaries. Mrs. Tsiang, the treasurer, who was at Council last year, brought a great inspiration to them on her return. It is not uncommon to find societies of fifty or sixty members. There are young people's societies in most of our mission schools. The Life Certificates mean much to Chinese women. It is a substitute for some of the practices connected with ancestor worship. A large part of the women's money in China is raised by life certificates. The women in China give one-tenth to support the work in the interior provinces of Yunnan and the rest to support Bible women.—Council Bulletin.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

More Good News From Baton Rouge.

Just recently we published an account of the organizing of a very large Missionary Society in the First Methodist Church of Baton Rouge. This new organization was made up of the former members of the missionary society together with the members of what had been, for years, a large and useful "Ladies' Aid."

Now, Mrs. Brown, Publicity Superintendent, sends the good news of the same forward movement in the Keener Memorial Church of Baton Rouge. For several months they have been enjoying the work of a missionary auxiliary rather than the entirely localized avenue of service found in the "Ladies' Aid."

Some of the results of their efforts are: Two boxes of supplies, valued at $95, sent to St. Mark's Hall. They are just lacking one of having half a hundred members. The Mission Study class has completed "Women Workers of the Orient," and will study next, "The Conservation of Human Life." The Bible class is studying the Book of Acts. Meetings are all well attended. Mrs. J. W. Booth, the pastor's wife, is president, supported by enthusiastic officers and members.

Baton Rouge is on the map to stay!

FROM ST. FRANCISVILLE, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We closed a successful meeting in St. Francisville last Tuesday night, May 11. Rev. L. I. McCain, of Hammond, La., came to us on Monday, May 3, and remained with us until May 11. The meeting was a blessing to every one and many expressed their appreciation for the Gospel messages delivered by Brother McCain. On Sunday morning he preached his sermon on tithing, and fifteen pledged themselves to tithe. This alone will prove a great blessing to the church. Four were added to the church and there are more to follow.

J. L. CADY, P. C.

FROM MOOREVILLE, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Will you please allow space in our fine Conference organ for one report from Mooreville charge?

Will say, to begin with, that we started off well in the beginning, and the interest still grows. Our first quarterly conference met on February 10, with one or more stewards from each church. Owing to sickness in the family, and a great deal of bad weather, we were not able to report anything on our Conference assessments, but the stewards voluntarily raised the pastor's salary more than one and a half times above what it had been, and paid at that time one third of the whole assessment of both pastor and presiding elder. Well, you know this makes a pastor and presiding elder feel good.

Our second quarterly conference met May 10, with a fine attendance if it was on Monday. The stewards raised $222 on pastor's and presiding elder's salary, which pays to present about 60 per cent of the salary. And the pastor had collected up to this about one-third of the Conference assessments, and $161.35 for furnishing and repairing parsonage and churches. In other words, our financial report this quarter amounted to $416.35. I would not forget to say that Rev. W. W. Mitchell, P. E., has been on hand each time with the most able sermons. Well, he is the right man, in the right place anyway.

We have large crowds at our eleven o'clock hours for preaching. The people seem to love their pastor, and the pastor has learned to love all the people. You know this is what it takes to make co-operation, and co-operation mixed with effort, and backed by the grace of God, can bring things to pass worth while.

The people of Mooreville charge love their parsonage, and often, when the pastor is away, they come—the ladies—and fix everything neat and nice in the house. It would be a very poor pastor that would not appreciate kind deeds like this.

And this is not all—the parsonage and circuit are out of debt, pastor and all. I must say in conclusion, that we are praying for some great revivals this year, and an ingathering of many souls into the Kingdom and the church.

Love to all the brethren,

J. R. JAMES, P. E.

TO MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE EP. WORTH LEAGUERS.

Plans for the Epworth League Conference at Vicksburg, June 15-18, seem to be working out in fine shape. A number of splendid speakers have been secured, among whom are Miss Helen K. Boulware, Dr. T. E. Reeve, Dr. T. A. Matthews, Bishop McMurry, and Rev. H. B. Watkins.

Several excellent special features are planned, but particular emphasis is being laid upon the work of the Juniors.

Of course we are expecting every League Chapter to be represented. Furthermore, we should be glad to have delegates from interested communities where organizations of Epworth League do not even exist. We believe that we have a worth while program and we want to share it.

ERMA M. KILE,
Sec'y., Miss. Conf. Epworth League.

The human system must be a laboratory for the constant manufacture of rich, red blood, and the blood depends upon the stomach.

After many years of study in the active practice of medicine, Dr. Pierce found that when the stomach was out of order, the blood impure and there were symptoms of general break-down, a tonic made of the alterative extracts of certain herbs and roots was the best corrective. This he called: Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. For over half of a century this tonic and alterative has been more largely sold than any other blood medicine or nerve tonic.

For those who are weakened by the after effects of grip or a bad cold or cough during the winter, nothing will increase the number of red blood corpuscles and eradicate poison from the blood so quickly as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is sold by almost every druggist in the land in tablets or liquid. Send 10c for trial package of the tablets. Write for free medical advice to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, in Buffalo, N. Y.

TO MEET THE LORD.

(1 Thess. 4:17.)

Here and there are devout spirits living in the expectation of the coming of the Lord to earth again. They would not be surprised beyond their expectations to see Him any time. As we lift our eyes and look around us, it seems dark enough already to hope that His coming may not be far away. They have their loins girded and their lamps trimmed and burning brightly, ready for the bridegroom's coming, and their watching thus in no way hinders them from keeping busy in the Master's work. He wants us to work; drones are a hindrance and not an asset. I am of the opinion that a lazy man will be weighed in the balances and found wanting. We are admonished by our Lord to work the works of him that sent us, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work. They who have had their robes washed in the blood of the Lamb will be found at their very best when He shall suddenly appear to make up His jewels; and He will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. The Record of Christian Work puts it thus:

I know not when—I only know the fact
That He is coming, and He bids me wait
In joyful expectation day by day.
Uncertainty does not one whit detract
From me the joy of watching at the gate;
It rather adds delight and buoyancy
To my fair hope—
That any night, or any day,
I quickly may be called away
"To meet the Lord."

But though I do not know the how, or when,
I know my Lord, and 'tis for Him, I wait.
Long years the blessed hope of seeing Him
Has been my joy. And though beyond my ken
The day and hour of the opening gate,
And many happ'nings to my mind are dim,
Yet this I know—
That any night, or any day,
I gently may be caught away
"To meet the Lord."

THE STATUS OF OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

By Rev. W. F. Henderson, Jr.

Mr. Editor: It may display ignorance on my part, but I should like some one who can do so to inform me, and I think there are others, also, whether or not we are pledged to support our Methodist Sunday school work? When I joined the church some 30 years since, I vowed to support the church and its institutions, considering at that time, and at this time, that that meant all of its institutions, including our Sunday schools. I was brought up in the Sunday school and the Methodist Church, have always put my best into each, and am yet a loyal Southern Methodist.

I am ready in any way possible to build up the Sunday school, but every once in awhile we get an order from the Louisiana Sunday School Association to announce that they are sending a worker on a certain date, without reference to local affairs; they come among our people (granted that they do some good work), but stand for a half-hour or more pleading for pledges for their work; when these are obtained, they go their way until some more pledges are wanted. Then, when we talk money for the support of our Field Secretary and the advancement of the work, we are met with the plea that "We have pledged to the Association. Why didn't the Methodists do the work that the Association is doing?" That is very easy to understand when we do a little figuring. My work paid to this Association last year $60, and to our own work $3, and when you read an account of an association meeting, pledges, etc., it sounds as if you were at a Methodist Conference. It looks as if we were liberal almost to the point of disloyalty. Should I contribute to my neighbor's family and let my own suffer? I am willing to divide with a needy neighbor, but not at the absolute neglect of my own folks. Are we under any obligation to support these independent organizations? Personally I withdrew a long time ago—I try to treat them courteously when they come, but nothing else.

I think it is time that we, as a Conference, were taking some stand in this matter. If we are going to have our own field workers, and Institutes, and Federations, then we must get behind them and let these others go; or let us say we cannot (will not) do it, and give them all our support.

Our Sunday School Board is continually calling for support, and it can and must be given. We need a worker in every district in the Conference, and I believe the support will come, and the work be done better than ever before, if we Methodists will re-read 1 Tim. 5-8, in connection with 2 Tim. 2-15.

Our Brother Early is a most capable man; let us give him and his coworkers the hearty support that they deserve, and, if necessary, then we may contribute to the work of the Association.

I hope to see this matter agitated until our Conference will take some definite stand, so we may know "where we are at."

UPPER ROOM OR SUPPER ROOM?

Dan Shannon says in the Bible Course Magazine: "The early church prayed in the upper room; the twentieth-century church cooks in the supper room." Evangelist Shannon has certainly hit the mark, for in a multitude of churches the "supper room" has taken the place of the "upper room." Play has taken the place of prayer, and feasting the place of fasting. There are more full stomachs than there are bended knees and broken hearts. There is more fire in the gas range in the kitchen than there is in the pulpit. When you build a fire in the kitchen, it often, if not always, puts out the fire in the pulpit. Too much ice cream chills the fervor of the spiritual life, and oysters are not known to be conducive to aid in the digestion of spiritual foods.

The early disciples were not cooking supper in the supper room on the day the Holy Ghost came; they were praying in the upper room. They were not waiting on tables; they were waiting on God. The fire for which they were waiting was not in the gas stove, but from above. They were not feasting; they were fasting. They were detained there by the command of God; they were not entertained there by the cunning of men. They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, not stuffed with a stew and a roast. O, I should like to see the cooking squad put out and the praying band put in! Let us have less gravy and more grace, less pie and more piety, less soup and more salvation, less ham and sham and more love and life. Let us have less leaven and more heaven. Let us have less use for the cookbook and more use for the Old Book. Let us put out the fire in the kitchen and build it on the altar. Beans and brown bread are not necessary for those who are "alive from the dead." Let us give fewer dinners and go out after sinners.

Let us have a church full of waiters, but waiters on God; a church full of servers, but they who are serving God and waiting for his Son from heaven. —Selected.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

DRIFTING.

A few days ago, a ferry boat, laden with passengers, got from under control while crossing from the New Orleans to the Algiers side of the Mississippi River, and those aboard were in serious danger as the boat drifted down the swift current, until tugs answered its distress signals and towed it to safety. The incident is a vivid picture of what is happening every day upon the broad river of life. Many a soul is adrift, in imminent danger of destruction—but with this difference: the danger is not realized, and no distress signals are being sent out. Aid is available, and a Master Pilot is ready to guide the bark to a safe mooring. What a tragedy that men will wreck their lives by simply drifting with the current of things that ought not to be!

THE GROWTH OF POPULATION.

A great many municipalities throughout the country have watched with considerable anxiety the announcements from the Census Bureau concerning their populations according to the statistics of the latest enumeration. In many cases the figures have shown a gratifying increase, but in some instances there has been deep disappointment because an actual decrease has been shown. We are interested in these things; but we often think, too, of that city not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, whose citizenship will ultimately include all those who have learned to walk in the paths of righteousness. Considerations of community pride make us anxious to see our own towns and cities grow, year by year; what are we doing to add to the number of those who claim the Celestial City as their place of residence? "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

"CREDIT TO WHOM CREDIT IS DUE."

It is certainly a most ungracious thing to refuse to accord recognition to individuals, organizations, or institutions for the good they have accomplished in their efforts to promote the welfare of mankind. The laborer is worthy of his hire, not only in the pecuniary compensation he receives for his labors, but also in the credit that is due him for the results he has accomplished. It must be a churlish spirit that would detract in the slightest degree from the value of what has been accomplished by diligent and faithful work. It is likewise unseemly for those who have been the means of doing good to insist strenuously that they alone are to be recognized as the responsible agents of what has been done. "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth," is still a pretty good rule for those who would serve unselfishly.

A SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATE.

As is usual once in every four years, the country generally, and a good many individuals in particular, are wondering who will occupy the President's chair after the November elections. Vigorous campaigns are being waged in behalf of "favorite sons," and not a few outstanding citizens are spending all of their time and, some of them, at least, hundreds of thousands of dollars in the eager effort to have themselves declared the nominees of their parties for the highest office in the land. Only one, of course, can be elected, and nobody knows his name as yet. In connection with the honor sought, is almost infinite responsibility, with its burden upon mind and heart—a burden, however, that men are willing to bear for the sake of the exalted office to which they aspire. It will be a good day when men are as eager to secure the favor of God as they are the approval of their fellow-men.

MAKING AND SPENDING.

Everybody realizes that the economic world is in a state of unstable equilibrium, but nobody seems to know exactly what is the matter. We do not profess to understand the situation any better than anybody else, and we are willing to sit at the feet of the humblest teacher of economic wisdom for even the meagerest increase of our store of knowledge. But it is almost self-evident that one great trouble is the artificial standards by which most of us are trying to live. As a people, we are straining every nerve to reach a plane just a little above the one upon which we could manage to get along comfortably. Too many of us want to spend more than we make, eat more than we raise, get more than we earn, loaf more than we work. We are placing luxuries ahead of necessities clamoring for cake when we need bread. When the reaction comes—as it surely will—we may be glad to pick up the crumbs that we now so contemptuously brush from our tables. In the meantime, we might profitably meditate upon the truth that "an honest day's work for an honest day's pay will bring prices down."

MUSH AGAIN.

According to a news item in a daily paper, a professor in Harvard University has discovered that mush is a great stimulant for sluggish brains, and the Harvard students are advised to use it during examinations. We should be very glad to write an interesting paragraph on this remarkable discovery—but we need some mush!

THE ATMOSPHERE OF THE CHURCH.

The main thing about a church service is the service itself. Hearty singing, devout praying, good preaching—these are the outstanding features of an inspiring hour of worship. But there is something else that adds immeasurably to the value of the meeting of the congregation—the atmosphere of the service. It is something to be recognized rather than defined, yet it is unmistakable and all pervasive. We sometimes go away from a beautifully rendered religious program with the vague feeling that something is lacking, while, on the other hand, we sometimes leave the simplest service with heart aglow because of what we have felt. This atmosphere of devotion, good will and Christian fellowship cannot be artificially created—it arises spontaneously from the attitude of those who have assembled for worship. A cheerful smile, a kindly word, a hearty handclasp—these things reveal a happy state of affairs. "A church with a welcome"—a real welcome—is one of the most attractive places on earth.

HUMAN NATURE.

We have watched with much interest the proposed measures to prevent rent profiteering. One suggestion that seems fairly reasonable on its face, is to increase the taxable value of a house in proportion to the increase in rent above what would be recognized as a legitimate return upon the money invested. But human nature is not always reasonable; property owners have vociferously declared that taxes are too high already, and that rental values are altogether too low. (Since we have no houses for rent, the unreasonableness of this position is clearly apparent to us.)

HOW IT WORKS.

The following, an editorial in a recent issue of a leading New Orleans daily newspaper, shows how prohibition is working in a Louisiana town, as well as in many other places throughout the country: "Monroe, La., has a serious charge to make against the prohibition law. The commissioner of streets and parks says that it is to blame for the wretched condition of the principle thoroughfares. Up to a year ago arrests were numerous and the liquor devotees who had spent all their money were sent to work out their fines on the streets. The regular street force consists of only eight men, but every day it received reinforcements from the city courts. But now the cheap labor supply has vanished. One lonesome drunk was the police total for May. It is impossible to hire labor at what the city can afford to pay, its funds having been depleted by the same cause, so the streets go uncleaned."

I WANT RELIGION.

(A song composed by the late Rev. E. J. Taylor, Sr.)

I want religion when the flowers
Of spring bloom on my way;
I want religion in the sun
Of summer's burning ray;
I want religion when I hear
The blast of winter's sound,
I want religion, O my Lord,
Through every season round.

I want religion in my youth
When life is young and gay;
'Twill guide my erring steps aright
From sin's destructive way;
I want religion when engaged
In manhood's sterner strife,
'Twill keep my spirit from decline
And help me on in life.

I want religion when old age
Shall steal my strength away,
'Tis sweet to muse in lonely hours
On joys that ne'er decay;
I want religion when I lay
This dying body down,
'Twill take the heavy cross away
And give to me my crown.

I want religion when this earth
Is fading from my sight,
'Twill give my eyes of faith to see
The gathering angels bright;
I want religion when I stand
Before Jehovah's Throne,
To see Him smile and hear Him say
"Ye faithful ones, 'well done.'"

GIVING UP ALL FOR CHRIST.

By Rev. Milton C. Dayls.

Just across the street from my house in Matanzas is a shop which, according to the universal custom here, has across the window the name chosen for it by its owner. In this case the sign reads, "La Dichosa" de A. Espinosa. "Dlchosa" means "lucky," and on a large poster Antonio Espinosa, the owner, advertised, until a few days ago, his claim to that title. This claim consisted of the faet that in his store there had been sold, not many months before, a winning set of lottery tickets, netting the purchaser $100,000. All across the window, and in fact across the store on the inside, there were strings of government lottery tickets. The lottery business in Cuba is openly carried on by the government, and is one of the chief diversions of the people—rich and poor. Many times "La Dichosa" was crowded with eager purchasers, especially on Saturday afternoons and evenings, after the worklngmen had received their money, and many were the children who suffered for the necessities of life because their fathers indulged in the vain hope of being among the few lucky ones.

Some months ago, Antonio, the owner of thls shop, became interested in our church here. After attending for sometime, he asked to be enrolled as one of its candidates, that he mlght look forward to membership in lt. This was, of course, gladly done, and he was welcomed to a place in the thought and care of the church. The pastor, Brother R. L. Whitehead, then undertook to explain to him what it meant to be a Christian in the Protestant meaning of that word. Antonio was deeply impressed by the ideal of life as he saw it in Jesus Christ, and was soon ready, as he said, to surrender his life, and to attempt to live the Christian life. But there was one obstacle to his assuming the vows of the church—his business. For it is the rule of our church here not to accept for membership any who engage in the lottery business. Antonio is a young man, ambitious in a business way, and his business was paying him well. To give it up, possibly at a sacrifice, and to start out to find a position he knew not where, was a proposition to test the faith of a new convert. However, he saw the justice of the position of the church, and recognized that he must choose between his business and his Lord. There was no question in his mind as to which to give up. The only question was as to how he might succeed in getting out of his business. He decided to take the matter to his Lord in prayer, assured that He who had saved him from his sins and given him the power of a new life would guide him in the solution of every problem involved in that life. Some of us who were interested in him and who knew the difficulty through which his devotion to Christ was leading him, united our prayers with his, and looked with confidence to the issue of his struggle which we felt sure would come.

It was during the evangelistic services, just preceding Easter, that Antonio came to church one evening with his heart lifted up, and his face glowing with the light of an unusual joy, and told us that his prayer had been answered, and that a way had been opened for him to get out of his business. He was going to take advantage of the opportunity, at whatever cost financially to himself, and notwithstanding the uncertainty for the future which such a course would inevitably bring. He told the pastor he wished to be baptized Easter Sunday.

A week before Easter, I spoke to Antonio, and told him I was glad that the way had been opened for him to join the church, and that I was praying that he would be in every way a true Christian. "I am praying that I may," he said; "I am giving Him everything I have, and I am going to live for Him, for I believe He will sustain me." So, on Easter Sunday, at the evening service, Antonio, with six others, was baptized by Bishop McMurry, and received into the church. It was an unusually impressive service, because we all knew of the struggle he had been through, and that he had been called upon to show his devotion to Christ in a way not true of every new convert. As Antonio goes out into the world to live for the Master who has saved him, he must meet many things which the Christian in our own country does not have to face. He must face social and business ideals directly in antagonism to those we recognize as Christian and he must fight unceasingly those currents which would carry him back into the old life. Into this poverty of moral ideals he must carry the purity of Jesus, the honesty and the sacrifice and the strength of that manhood which bloomed with perfect beauty in the life of our Lord. We who from infancy have tasted of the power of Christ, and have seen the marvel of his sustaining grace in the renewed lives of thousands, do not doubt that Antonio will find there strength for every need. Is it too much to ask that he be borne up in his battle, by the united prayers, not only of us who know him here, but of those who through this little sketch will have heard of his new-found joy, and of his strong yet humble desire for strength to live the new life that Christ has opened up for him?

Pinar del Rio, Cuba, May 13, 1920.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

By Rev. T. B. Holloman.

In the late issues of the Christian Advocate (Nashville) and the New Orleans, appear communications from the pens of Bishop Ainsworth and Rev. J. R. Countiss, and the report from the Educational Association of our church, all bearing upon the burden of the incessant "drives" which have been, and are in contemplation by the church and others.

Dr. Countiss refers to the great successes achieved by the numerous national drives during the World War, to all of which there was a glad and patriotic response; upon which he bases the statement that "It is not time for united, organized, church-wide and nation-wide drlves to cease."

Bishop Ainsworth, in the Nashville of April 30, says, per contra, and to the point, that from his "observation throughout the church that neither our preachers nor our people are in tune for another long-drawn-out, high-pressure campaign." In my humble judgment the good bishop has wisely diagnosed the conditions; not only are our people tired, but they are confused. The whole matter recalls a unique prayer of Dr. Hunter, long-time pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Jackson, Miss. A long-time drouth had prevailed, and the churches held prayers for rain; the rains began—and it rained, and it rained, and it rained. So one Sabbath morning the good Doctor said, "Oh, Lord, we did ask Thee for rain and Thou hast most bountifully answered us; but O, Lord Thou knowest we've had enough; let it stop—let it stop!"

Now that we are planning for a big Educational campaign or drive, I am fully in agreement with the suggestion to couple the Superannuate Endowment therewith. Make the drive, get to the top, then let the teams "blow." For four years it's been, drive, drive, drive—"a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether;" but we've had enough—let us rest. There is such a thing as getting confusion confounded. We would do well to heed these suggestions from one of our General Superintendents.

Phoenix, Miss.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

During my morning walk, I picked up a spray of mistletoe which the rain and windstorm of the night had wrenched from an overhanging branch. This quaint and curious member of the vegotal kingdom has woven about it legend and history. It was hung in baronial halls where erstwhile armored knights and retainers feasted and shouted in song, of battles won, and deeds of valor. Impervious to the icy breath of winter, it hangs its garlands of lasting green in the oaks, sacred to the weird, mystic rites of the Druids. In these latter days coy maidens dare venturesome youths to rapturous bliss, or to winsome kiss, under its flaunting green. Yet with all this the mistletoe is a parasite. It lives and grows and spreads on another life than its own. Botanists tell us that once this parasite was not unlike other plants. It drew its sustenance from the soil and air. But its glutinous berry found lodgment in the creviced bark of an oak, or some other host, and there it clung and grew. It has all the mean qualities of a true parasite. Utterly useless so far as I know, for even its stem is a sappy pith with no fibre or strength, and its fruit a mass of sticky paste, yet it chooses the highest places to show its dependence and vaunt its worthlessness. In nature's great schoolroom it has a lesson. You may read it, or pass it on.

Regeneration is a universal principle. Its law obtains throughout the vast domain of nature. It energizes all matter, it fills all space, it sounds the depths and climbs the star ladders of all the heights; its range and sweep are only bounded by the limits set by its Almlglty Creator. Only in heaven, where all life reaches its perfect fruition, does this all-pervading law of nature's farthest reach cease its flight and rest its energy.

The law of regeneration obtains in the mineral kingdom. I hold in my hand a diamond; imprisoned light it is, says the poet, as it flashes and glares from every smooth facet. Most precious of gems, says the jeweller, fit to adorn the diadem of a queen or be the crown gem of a kingly Solomon.

Most valuable of all stones, says the economist, it is crystallized wealth.

Back yonder in some Eocene period of this old earth creation, a spore of a fern dropped on the warm, spongy soil; it was touched by a hand which made life spring into being; it grew into a great tree and sent its fronds abroad to gather larger growth and sustenance from an atmosphere overcharged with carbon dioxide, so favorable to rapid growth in the vegetal kingdom. Soon a mighty fern tree stood in strength and beauty. But God was building old earth for man's habitation. Its plastic crust was yet under the hands of the Great Master Builder. A mighty force uplifted the crust, broken and torn in huge masses; these roll and unroll until the one-time surface lies hidden in the depths. Overwhelmed in the mighty catastrophe the fern tree, with thousands others of like form and sustance, is strangled and pressed beneath strata of inconceivable weight. Then the tremendous energy of heat drives out all the sap and moisture, which steam in a thousand vents above. The lagging centuries move onward, age grows upon age, new forms of growth appear and the fern tree blackens and hardens beneath. Another mighty subterranean giant seizes the coal, once a fern, and presses and burns with titanic power. A furnace of earth fires burning at its heart hardenes and purifies the coal and it blooms into a crystal gem. Did one ever dream that a black lump of coal, pure carbon, was of the same constituent elements as a diamond? Did one ever dream this gem was once a fern? Yet, it is true. Dissolve them into their primal element and both are pure carbon.

The miracle of spring is again upon us. Again the glad earth dons her emerald garments and flings defiance to the grim grasp of winter's cold. Like some released captive, long imprisoned, nature sings anew the song of life. And the life touch, and the life flow, with all its marvelous results, its myriad voices, its thousand colorings, its wondrous awakening of sleeping beauty in bird, bush, tree and flowers, its thrill and movement universal, to me is the miracle, passing wonder, for all men, and all time. The march of this magician of life, from tropic clime to lands locked in winter's prison, was not without its fierce war on land and sea. Not easily does the frost king relinquish his relentless reign. The north wind and the south wind struggle for mastery; then, anon, whirl their united strength in tempest and tornado. The travail of this new life has its throes and anguish, yet the earth is born anew and nature is reclad in garments of praise and gladness.

Through all the vast corridors of visible creation God is working mighty miracles of nascent and growing life. Visions of splendor dawn and break on the eyes that see, sounds unsearchable and glorious in harmony, fall on listening ears, for there, too, are His witnesses. It is fitting that the day of the Risen Christ should come with all this springing life. May his divine presence fill our weary spirits and free them from the Doubting Castles of wintry death and cold desolation.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Shreveport District Conference convened in the Methodist church at Mooringsport, La., on the morning of April 22, at 9 a.m., with the Rev. Briscoe Carter, presiding elder, in the chair. After proper organization of the conference, visiting brethren were introduced, committees were announced, and the conference settled down to regular work. Rev. J. M. Brown, superannuate member of the Conference, preached at the 11 o'clock hour, giving a vivid description of Christ's trial and victory in the Garden of Gethsemane. The remainder of the day was given over to the reports from the different charges by the pastors and laymen in attendance. A very helpful and instructive program on Christian Education was rendered at the evening hour, with short addresses from the presiding elder, Briscoe Carter, W. W. Drake, and President W. R. Bourne, of Centenary College.

The second day brought the district conference and the Woman's Missionary Society District Meeting in touch with one another. Reports from the pastors and laymen were completed and the conference heard a sermon by Rev. S. S. Holladay, a pioneer of Methodism in North Louisiana, having spent a ministry of many years within the bounds of the Shreveport District. Devotional exercises were conducted by the presiding elder, J. B. Williams, G. D. Purcell, and S. J. Davies.

Very lively and interesting discussions took place on the afternoon of the second day with regard to the work of local preachers, both in and out of school. Rev. S. J. Davies made an earnest and timely appeal that in the midst of the many calls that are being made upon the pastor, he turn primarily to the supreme task of preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ as the power of God unto the salvation of man.

Bossier City was chosen as the next meeting place of the district conference.

Other interests of the church were represented by Dr. W. R. Bourne, of Centenary College, Rev. Alonzo Early, Sunday School Field Secretary, Rev. James B. Grambling, President Louisiana Conference Epworth League, and the Rev. R. W. Vaughan, of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage. These brethren brought timely and interesting messages from their respective fields of labor.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: Dr. John L. Scales, E. L. Joyner, S. H. Porter, Judge W. G. Banks, W. R. Bourne, Mrs. F. F. Jeter, Mrs. Ben Johnson, and Mrs. A. J. Peavy.

Rev. Briscoe Carter is in his first year on the Shreveport District and it is proving to be one of his best in the work of the Kingdom. Under his skillful leadership, the district is moving forward in many respects. There has been a substantial increase in the salaries of preachers, a number of parsonages in the district have been built or purchased, and the largest number of additions on profession of faith reported to him of any of the district conferences in his thirteen years as presiding elder in the Louisiana Conference.

The host of the Conference, Rev. R. T. Ware, and his faithful people made the visit of every one pleasant indeed. Everything was done for the comfort of the visitors that was possible to be done. The enterprising little town of Mooringsport, located twenty miles north of Shreveport on the Kansas City Southern Railroad, overlooking the great Caddo Lake, made famous by its large number of oil wells, surrounded by the unique "tents," served as a delightful change to those from the other parts of the district. It was indeed good "just to be there."

PREPARATION FOR EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN.

Out of regard for the rights of the Missionary Centenary and because of our interest in that great movement, the church at large has not been kept informed as to preparations for the Educational Campaign. By action of the General Conference the time has now come for the educational forces to occupy the field.

The campaign will be conducted by a Commission consisting at present of eighteen members. The campaigns for the Universities and for the schools and colleges have been merged. Negotiations are under way for merging the campaign for education with that for superannuate endowment.

While the chief values of the campaign will be moral and spiritual, it is sought to secure as a minimum $25,000,000 for educational purposes, and it is hoped that a much larger sum will be raised.

Dr. John Hugh Reynolds, President of Hendrix College, has been selected Director General. Dr. Reynolds is widely and favorably known both in and out of the church, and his experience, together with his splendid platform and executive ability, will inspire confidence in the movement.

Headquarters have been established at Nashville. Address Dr. Reynolds at Centenary Building, Nashville, Tenn.

A SOUND AND TIMELY UTTERANCE.

By Rev. R. A. Meek, D.D.

One now and then runs across an utterance in the public prints that so exactly expresses one's views, and which seems so timely, that one desires to pass it on to others. Such an utterance recently came under my observation in that sprightly Presbyterian weekly, The Continent; so I am moved to ask the privilege of letting my fellow-workers in this section of the church see this impressive discussion through the columns of the Advocate. It is from the pen of Mr. S. S. Estey, and, including the caption under which it appeared, is as follows:

Help—But Be Fair to Your Own Job.

American temperament does not easily find the "happy medium;" it swings from one extreme to the other. In attempting to avoid a fault it pursues the opposite virtue so zealously and pushes it so far that the exaggerated virtue itself becomes a fault. An illustration in point is the modern minister's program of work. Twenty-five years ago ministers were criticised for confining their attention so closely to pulpit and parish work that they neglected the big civic, philanthropic and reform movements which needed their help. All this has changed now, and to such an extent that more than one church is complaining that its pastor gives so much time to outside movements that he neglects his own church. An increasing number of churches are lamenting the resignation of an able pastor who leaves to enter on what he calls "the larger work" of pushing some big "movement" or propaganda.

It is no man's province to judge the relative importance of different lines of Christian work, and surely no one who loves the kingdom would minimize the value of the great modern organized efforts to push the work of that kingdom. Nevertheless, this one thing is becoming clear to many far-sighted church men: The hour has struck for re-emphasizing the importance and rank of the pastor's work in his own pulpit and parish.

A recent open letter in The Continent calls attention to the fact that the preceding issue of the magazine mentions in its news columns twenty-six different religious, reform and philanthropic organizations, besides the regular boards and agencies of the church, whose activities had been chronicled in the issue referred to. These organizations as a rule are officered by ministers. Their conventions and conferences always present programs on which the names of ministers figure prominently. Another open letter in the same number of The Continent calls attention to a certain conference in which much good talking was heard, but the writer adds: "The impression seems to prevail that the thing needed now is hard work and less talk."

Are we facing the possibility that ministers may become so busy pushing plans for "big movements" that they will have no time to carry out these fine plans in the local church? In the individual church, after all is found the crux of the whole matter. The fate of Christianity is settled not at conventions but in the parish church. Without live-wire pastors who stick to their jobs, the biggest plans and movements will be stillborn. It is conceivable that, if every church had a virile pastor who stayed by his own job in pulpit and parish, the church might make great progress without any campaigns or special movements. But the most wisely planned big programs can never get anywhere without the aid of the stick-to-his-job pastor. The argument seems to indicate that the key man in the religious situation today is the pastor who takes time to make things go in his own parish.

The tendency on the part of both ministers and laymen to sidetrack church work for civic activity and all sorts of campaigns, which was noticeable before the war, was of course greatly accelerated during the war period. To a large extent this was unavoidable, though even during the war some churches felt that they were unnecessarily neglected by pastors in favor of war activities that were more bustle than real work.

Let us face the fact: The desire to be patriotic and public spirited and "broad" is in danger of carrying us ministers too far from our pulpits and our parishes. The lamentable tendency visible in laymen and church women to give so much time to other organizations that they have little left for either the worship or the work of the church ought not to be encouraged by the example of the pastors themselves—yet it often is. To use a church merely as a base of supplies—the source of salary, manse and a position of prominence and influence—from which ministers sally forth to do all sorts of good work other than church work is hardly fair to the churches.

A deal more publicity is to be gained from such work than from parish work, it is true, and those who are thirsty for notoriety will get more of it from one civic address than from ten sermons and more commendation for serving on one chamber of commerce committee than on any church committees. This fact may explain why some ministers would rather be heralded as Chautauqua lecturers than as strong preachers. They have the idea that they are bigger men when they are on the platform than when they are in the pulpit—because they receive more advertisement in the former position. They think it a greater compliment to be called a great welfare worker than to be called a great pastor. The newspapers will not mention the latter fact, but the former makes a good newspaper story.

Let us not forget that an error in estimating values here may prove fatal to the church. The kingdom of Christ will not come through lectures, however entertaining or instructive, nor through civic reforms, however desirable, but through "preaching the word" and "shepherding the flock of Christ." If service to the kingdom is the dominating motive with us ministers, it is time that we harked back to our pulpits and our parishes. There, after all, the telling work for the kingdom is done.

America once again will produce great preachers whose pulpit utterances mould public sentiment and feed the higher life of the community when we shall magnify again the importance of the pulpit and accord it a rank above the lecture platform. In that day ministers will give to their pulpit work their first strength, not the fag end of it. We shall once again see among ministers a zeal and an ambition to become great pastors and we shall perceive as our fathers did that it is within the boundaries of the local church that all our great social problems can best and first be solved.

Let ministers stick to their own job. Let them magnify that job, not apologize for it. It is the biggest job there is. When pastors attend to it with their whole heart, then all the great movements will go farther and faster, because pastors will put driving power into the machinery of propaganda. The happy medium is possible—a pastor who sticks to his own job, yet does his work in the light that streams from world horizons and big movements, a minister who can lend a hand to these movements without forgetting that his chief and biggest task is found in his own pulpit and in his own parish.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: I am having published the report of our General Treasurer. Our worn-out preachers get about forty-one per cent of the amount collected for local work. See how little has been paid on those assessments. Suppose you were looking to this fund for a support! It takes $3000 per quarter to pay these claims. Look at the list and see whether your charge is there.

COMMENCEMENT AT PORT GIBSON.

The session of Port Gibson Female College closed on the 25th of May. The students acquitted themselves creditably, reflecting honor upon those responsible for their training. The sermons on Sunday by Rev. Noland B. Harmon, of Crawford Street Church, Vicksburg, Miss., were timely and impressive. The address on graduation day was delivered by Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Natchez, and was suited to the occasion.

At the request of the President, some of the Alumnae met on the 24th and organized the Alumnae Association. This organization has not been regularly maintained in the past; but those present pledged themselves to foster this important interest and assemble a large attendance a year hence. The addresses at the Alumnae meeting were delivered by Rev. M. L. Burton, in behalf of the Trustees, and by Miss May Russell, in behalf of the Alumnae. The mention of these distinguished names is sufficient guarantee. Miss Norine Schilling rendered skillfully a piano number and Mrs. Charles Humphreys gave an impressive reading. Mrs. Maude Kennard Shelby was elected president of the Association and Miss Norine Schilling, secretary-treasurer. Both of these reside at Port Gibson. Mrs. A. E. Heath, of Port Gibson, was elected vice president. Mrs. M. E. Reagan, of Hankinson, was elected honorary president, and Mrs. C. B. Galloway, of Jackson, Miss., honorary vice president.

Among the visitors from out of our town were two pastors of the Louisiana Conference, Revs. J. C. Price and R. T. Ware. Brother Ware has one daughter with us and Brother Price two. Mrs. T. J. O'Neil, of Rolling Fork, Miss., and her daughter, Miss Eula, were present. Rev. T. J. O'Neil and Rev. J. T. McVey, each had a daughter in the graduation class. Rev. J. R. Jones, our honored presiding elder, who, by virtue of his office, is one of our Trustees, was with us part of the time. Mesdames Shannon and Carnathan, of Vicksburg, were among the ladies who spent some time.

Sandwiched in between the graduating recital in piano by Miss Louise Hunt and the later commencement events, came the marriage of Miss Hattye Sartor, commercial teacher and secretary to the President, to Mr. H. Herbert Crisler, Jr., of the editorial staff of the Port Gibson Revellie.

We had a delightful session, with increasing prospects for the future. The Board plans further repairs and improvements. We are determined to place Port Gibson Female College in the forefront.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD OF FINANCE.

By Dr. Luther E. Todd,
Secretary, Board of Finance.

The Second Annual Meeting of the Board of Finance was held in St. Louis, Mo., at the Planters' Hotel, May 10-11. There were twelve members present, and the meeting was replete with interest and enthusiasm from start to finish. A two days' Council Meeting of representatives of the Conference Boards of Finance preceded the Annual Meeting of the General Board. The work accomplished at these two meetings is sure to prove of lasting benefit to the Superannuate Cause.

The Secretary's report showed that the Superannuate Endowment Fund was increased during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1920, by additions amounting to $81,517.17. Of this total amount added to the Fund, $30,896.86 came from the assessment, $27,974.13 from bequests, and $22,645.88 from other sources. The total amount of the Fund, March 31, 1920, was $580,262.89. Of this total Fund, $61,011.33 is subject to annuity.

In addition to the amount added to the Fund in cash during the fiscal year, several bequests have been made to it. One of these is now in process of settlement, and will yield the Fund $3000. Another is for a very large amount. This does not include bequests that have been made to Conference funds handled by the General Board.

The Secretary visited 30 of the 38 Annual Conferences held during the fiscal year, and had a representative at 5 others. He made addresses and took collections for several Conference funds, wherein some $17,000 was raised in cash and subscriptions. He also assisted a number of the Conference Boards in securing substantial increases on the assessment for the support of Claimants.

The Conference Claimants page in the Nashville Advocate was published weekly throughout the year, and also many articles appeared during the period in the Conference organs. In addition to the publicity secured through the church press, other publications have gone out from the offices as follows: "That You May Think"—20,000 copies, "The Annual Bulletin"—7000 copies, "By Their Fruits Ye Shall Know Them"—10,000 copies, and a number of others.

It was found that the Board can now distribute $35,322.39 to the Claimants. The checks will be sent direct to the individual Claimants, and will be mailed just as soon as the Secretaries of the Annual Conferences complete their reports to the Board on the Claimants' years of service. At this writing two of these reports have not come in, and the Board must have them before it can determine the amount it can pay per year of service. The General Board can make the distribution every year within two weeks after the Annual Meeting, provided the data is furnished by the Annual Conference Secretaries not later than April of each year. If the data is delayed, the distribution is also delayed.

The Annual Bulletin of the Board is now in process of publication, and it will be ready for mailing to all the preachers in the church within two weeks from this writing. The Bulletin will give a complete account of the transactions at the Annual Meeting of the Board, and of the proceedings of the Council Meeting of representatives of the Conference Boards. It will also carry a number of interesting and informing extracts from the Secretary's Annual Report to the General Board. Together with the Bulletin will be sent the new and illustrated 44 page pamphlet, "By Their Fruits Ye Shall Know Them." This publication includes the results of a complete survey of the Superan-nuates, which was recently made by the General Secretary.

A special committee from the Board of Education, consisting of Dr. Stonewall Anderson and Dr. A. J. Lamar, presented to the Board of Finance an invitation from the Board of Education to unite the Campaign for Superannuate Endowment with that for Education. The Board of Finance gave careful consideration to the proposal, submitted a basis upon which the invitation would be accepted, and appointed a Superannuate Endowment Campaign Commission, consisting of Bishop W. F. McMurry, Rev. T. H. Ivey, Rev. F. E. Sharp, Rev. C. W. Tadlock, and Rev. Luther E. Todd, to meet with the Educational Campaign Commission. The Joint Commission will meet in Nashville, Tenn., May 26, 1920.

IN MEMORY OF TWO GOOD MEN.

By Rev. L. Carley.

Rev. E. J. Taylor.

Rev. E. J. Taylor was born near Macon, Ga., in August, 1833, and died in Laurel, Miss., on March 28, 1920. He was, therefore, 87 years of age at the time of his death. His parents moved to Newton County, Miss., when he was a mere boy. He was educated at Sharon College, in Madison County, Miss., graduating from that institution in his early manhood. His work as a minister of the Gospel began in the Methodist Protestant Church, but, on the union of that denomination in Mississippi with our church in 1871, he became a member of the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He traveled in this Conference for several years, filling various charges, but finally located and spent the remainder of his life near Ellisville in Jones County. He served as superintendent of education in Jones County for sixteen years and as treasurer of the county for one term. He was married three times. His last wife and two sons survive him.

Brother Taylor was a man of remarkable physical endurance. From an intellectual and educational standpoint, he was far above the average of his day and generation. He was preeminently at home in the schoolroom, and in his best days he was a power in the pulpit. He was in great demand at camp meetings and on other revival occasions. Even to the last, his mind was clear and active. He was thoroughly familiar with the history and doctrines of Methodism and was strong in defense of its teachings. He believed in Methodist Arminianism with all his heart. His mind was stored with rich treasures of thought. In private conversation, as well as in the pulpit, the writer has heard him give utterance to discourses that would have adorned the pages of Quarterly Reviews and books of higher literature.

Brother Taylor was as unassuming as a child. His home life was beautiful. Kindness to the members of his family was one of the prominent features of his character. His neighbors honored him for his many virtues. His place here can not be filled, but in the heavenly world he lives on in purer enjoyments and with the possibility of higher attainments. One of the writer's best friends has been called away, but he sorrows not as those who have no hope.

Rev. E. J. Taylor, Jr.

Rev. E. J. Taylor, Jr., was born in Jones County, Miss., in February, 1888, and died at the age of 32 years in Harrisburg, Miss., in April, 1920. He had been a local preacher for several years and had hoped to enter the itinerancy and spend his life going about doing good. But the great Head of the Church ordered otherwise. Jimmie, as he was familiarly called, was a sweet-spirited young man who had the confidence of the people among whom he lived. He made a comparatively short record on earth, but he has entered upon an eternal career where he will not be handicapped by any earthly limitations. May the surviving members of the family follow him and his recently ascended father as they followed Christ!

THE COMPLICATIONS OF UNION.

By Rev. Jno. W. Boswell, D.D.

Under the title of "Complications of Union" the Editor of the Baptist Record, Jackson, Mississippi, discusses the matter of church union, alluding briefly to the efforts now being made to bring together the Northern and Southern Methodists. The purpose of this paper is not to notice that part of his editorial, nor to discuss Unification, but to call attention to an error into which the Editor has fallen in regard to what he terms "the Methodist idea" of church union. After a short introduction concerning Methodist Unification he says:

"The difference between Baptists, who hold the congregational form of church polity, and Methodists, who hold to the episcopal form, comes immediately into evidence. To a Baptist there is no such thing as visible union, actual or possible. It simply does not exist either in fact or in thought. It is neither possible nor desirable. On the other hand the Methodist idea, which is like that of the Protestant Episcopal and the Catholic, is that organic, bodily, visible unity is absolutely essential to the idea of the church. To them, unless the whole body of Christians is joined up into one great organization there is something seriously lacking in Christianity, that violence is done to the body of Christ, and offense given to his person; that otherwise the Lord is grieved and the world cannot be effectively reached; that the salvation of the world is retarded if not absolutely prevented by such divisions."

Observe the Editor declares that in the belief of Methodists "Unless the whole body of Christians is joined up into one great organization there is something seriously lacking in Christianity * * * and the salvation of the world is retarded," etc. These statements are not according to my understanding. I have been intimately associated with Episcopal Methodists a long time; have studied their polity and doctrines; have acquainted myself with their ways, and their attitude towards other Christian bodies; have walked and talked with their leaders from the highest to humblest, and I here affirm that I never read such a sentiment in any of their books or periodicals, never heard it preached from their pulpits, nor did I ever hear it uttered in any private conversation. No true, well informed Methodist entertains it.

Methodists believe and teach that there is but one church in the church of God; that the church is divided into different branches, and that believers may satisfy their consciences and please God by uniting with that branch in which they can live best, and do the most good. Further they believe that, as no form of government is prescribed in the New Testament, the number of Christians may unite and adopt that form of government they think best adapted to carry on the work of the Gospel. Hence they feel justified in worshiping and working under the Episcopal form of government, but they do not think it necessary or even expedient for all Episcopal orders to come together and form one body. Much less do they believe it essential to the prosperity of the church that the whole body of Christians be joined up into one great organization. No Methodist that I know entertains the idea that the present unhappy division of Christendom, carrying on the work in its own way, is retarding the kingdom. Such "unity" is not the unity of the gospel.

Methodists believe in organic union with Christ, the source of life, power, and in "keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." This they regard as essential to Christian brotherhood. But they do not believe that union with Christ requires all believers to unite in any one form of government or to submit to any one set of opinions or rules of living. If they did they would demand every other body of believers to disband and enlist under their banner—an extreme demand no body of Christians make except Roman Catholics and very high-church Anglicans and a few others less conspicuous. These all withdraw fellowship from the regular church and in the kingdom of heaven. They turn them over to the "uncovenanted mercies of God."

Our Baptist brethren "split the difference." Unless one is of their "faith and order," having been regularly baptized, they will give him the hand of Christian fellowship, but deny him membership in the church.

The reader may readily infer that I believe in the invisible or spiritual kingdom—the kingdom of God within us—and in the visible or organized church. I have no quarrel with those who deny that there is any ground for such belief. But with those who deny this I cannot see what is so plain before their eyes I do not understand. I know there is no such thing as the Baptist Church, but there are a vast number of Baptist churches, each one a visible and independent spiritual body maintained and managed by men and women under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. But how such bodies having the kingdom within them can come together and transact business without being seen, I do not know.

And these churches are practically connectional and growing more so. They are organized into associations within well-defined geographical lines. This is for mutual benefit and though only advisory bodies, what they advise has well-nigh the force of law. These churches also unite in a country-wide convention and send their delegates, not to look after the interests of any special church, but after the interests of the kingdom of God. The Southern Baptist Convention conducts great enterprises. I suppose the Northern convention does also. enterprises requiring the use of millions of dollars—missionary enterprises, home and foreign, educational enterprises, and has absolute control of the Sunday-school publications—not for the benefit of one Baptist Church but for thousands of churches that give their money to carry on the work. These enterprises we dare say have done as much as anything else to hold these churches together.

The growing connectional spirit of our Baptist brethren is further evidenced by the unanimity with which the churches joined in the recent "seventy-five million drive" for missions and the readiness with which they accepted and subscribed the assessments (quota they called it) laid upon them by the managers. Methodists were never more judicious or successful in assessing the churches. And this notwithstanding the Baptist Record says: "We are as free as the separate drops of the ocean, and hold together better than any other body of believers in the world!" Certainly, and can we not say truly that all believing bodies who hold to Christ as head by whatever name they are called "though distant as the poles are one as the sea"?

We join our brother from Hazlehurst in saying as to "one Lord one faith, one baptism," and more, "We have one God and Father of all who is above all, and through all, and in us all."

If anything can set us free, we shall be free indeed. But this thing is in the power of every soul.—William E. Channing.

THEY ARE HOMELESS.

They have knocked in vain at the door of the Ruston Methodist Orphanage. They were refused admittance because the institution is overcrowded, there being 130 children now in a building constructed to house 100.

A Permanent Home For 350 Orphans is the goal now sought. It must be built! It is a civic duty and in accord with the precepts of the Christ-child—we must not fail.

The Great Methodist Church, South,

WHAT A GOOD IDEA!

By Jean Halifax.

When Johnny goes to a party,
He says he wishes he
For a while could be a camel,
And then he'd happy be.

For he has heard that camels are
With stomachs well supplied,
And Johnny says with five of these
He'd feel quite satisfied.

One for ice cream, and one for cake,
And one for lemonade,
And one for turkey and such things
(As strong as they are made.)

Four might do at a pinch, he says,
But five he thinks are best;
The fifth he'd use next day, you see,
For those would need a rest!

BETTY'S FLOWERS.

By May G. Mooar.

Betty sprang out of bed the moment mother called her, and ran to the window to peep out. The sky was blue, the sea was sparkling, and everything looked fresh and bright. Even by twisting her head ever so much she could not catch a glimpse of the garden, so she dressed as quickly as possible and ran downstairs and out to see if last night's thunder storm had hurt her precious flowers. But not a thing was injured. The plants looked all the fresher for the rain, and every little flower seemed to smile a welcome to Betty as she bent over them lovingly. The pansies, mignonette, geraniums, nasturtiums, and zinnias made a brilliant mass of color in the morning sun.

"Oh, mother," cried Betty, rushing into the kitchen just as father was carrying the oatmeal into the dining room, and mother was following with a plate of muffins, "the rain didn't hurt my flowers a bit. They look lovely this morning."

"I'm so glad," mother answered, buttoning some of the buttons Betty had left unfastened in her haste.

"I was so 'fraid they would be spoiled," Betty went on, "and then I wouldn't have any flowers I I raised myself to take to the fishermen's memorial."

"I think a good many gardens were injured last night," father said, "the wind blew so hard, and the rain was so heavy."

"I hope nobody's garden was hurt who wants to carry flowers to-day," Betty answered.

Betty lived in Rock Harbor, a fishing village out on the coast, where almost every man earned his living on the sea. Many of them went to the Grand Banks, and every winter some lives were lost in the ocean. Once a year Rock Harbor paid loving tribute to the men who were drowned, and a little service in their memory was held on the shore, and a great many flowers were thrown into the waters as tokens of love.

This was the day to honor the fishermen, and Betty was planning to take a big basketful of flowers which she had raised herself, to the service at the seaside. From early spring she had carefully tended her little garden, and the flowers seemed to understand the purpose for which they were raised, and they rewarded her efforts with great masses of blossoms. The little service was to be held at two o'clock, so before the sun had dried them, and while it was still cool, Betty carefully cut the flowers and took them to the cellar to stay till she packed them into the basket in which she was to carry them.

About noon mother asked her to go to the store on an errand and as she skipped gaily down the village street she spied Grandma Bates bending over something in her back yard. Betty tried to wave a greeting to the dear old lady, who was "Grandma" to the whole village, and who always had a flower or a cooky for every little child who found his way to her big, sunny kitchen. But the face that grandma turned round in response to Betty's greeting was so sober that Betty stopped short.

"What's the matter?" she asked, hurrying up the walk to the old lady's side.

"The shower ruined my garden," faltered Mrs. Bates.

"Oh, what a shame!" cried Betty, "for your flowers were lovely."

"Yes, and it's the first year since I was a girl fifty years ago, that I haven't had flowers to carry to the sea in memory of the fishermen. For I come of a seafaring family. My father was a fisherman, my husband was a fisherman, and my sons were too, and last winter my Jim went down off the Grand Banks," and the tears rolled down the old lady's withered cheeks.

"Oh, I'm so sorry," said Betty, patting the wrinkled hand.

"I've tended 'em all summer like babies," grandma went on, "'cause I wanted 'em extra purty for Jim's sake, and now they're all gone, and I ain't got nothin' to carry in remembrance of my boy."

Betty tried to comfort her but she couldn't think of anything to say, for the garden was ruined. She walked slowly down the street and did her errand, and then she walked slowly back. No sooner had she left Grandma Bates than something inside of her seemed to say, "Why don't you give grandma your flowers?"

"I can't, I can't," Betty kept saying to herself. "I've worked and worked to make these flowers grow, and they're mine to give to the fishermen."

"But grandma wanted her flowers in memory of her son, so she feels worse than you would if you had lost your garden," this little inner voice persisted.

"But I've told everybody that I was going to bring my own flowers, and I never did before. I've always got them from Aunt Hannah's garden," Betty said to herself.

She was home before she settled the question; then, giving her mother the package from the store, she turned and ran to Grandma Bate's as fast as her feet could carry her, before she had a chance to change her mind.

"You may have my flowers to put in your basket, grandma," she said, rushing into the kitchen where grandma was sitting mournfully at the window looking out on her garden.

"Oh, no, dearie, I couldn't take yours," grandma answered, "but thank you just as much."

"Oh, I mean it, I mean it. You must take them 'cause you need them for your son, you know," persisted Betty.

"Do you really want me to?" asked grandma "Just hear what Betty says, Mary," she added to her daughter, who came in at that moment.

"You're a dear child to think of it," grandma's daughter answered. "Mother was heartbroken when she found what the shower had done, for she'd set her heart on taking the flowers she'd raised herself in memory of Jim."

"Oh, I want grandma to have them," Betty said, putting her arm round the dear old lady's neck, "and if you'll give me the basket I'll take it home, and pack my flowers into it, and bring it right back."

The basket was a lovely sight when it was finished, and grandma's face beamed happily as she touched the flowers lovingly

"They mean more to me because you raised them a purpose for this day, dearie," she said.

Betty filled her own basket with the wild flowers she could hurriedly pick before it was time to start—tansy, sweet marjoram, vetch, and some red-topped grasses. It wasn't nearly as pretty as most of the other baskets, but as she tossed the flowers on the sea at the close of the service, she felt as happy as she had ever felt in her life.—Zion's Herald.

This we may discern assuredly; this every true light of science, every mercifully granted power, every wisely restricted thought teaches us more clearly day by day, that, in the heavens above and in the earth beneath, there is one continual and omnipotent presence of help and peace, for all men who know that they live, and remember that they die.—John Ruskin.

If I could get the ear of every young man but for one word, it would be this: make the most and best of yourself. There is no tragedy like a wasted life, a life falling of its true end and turned to a false end.—Munger.

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feeling, not in figures on the dial; we should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best. —Bailey.

GETTING READY FOR WORK—A THREE-MINUTE TALK.

It is one thing to have a work to do, and another thing to be able to do that work. Preparation always precedes successful performance. It sometimes happens that the preparation is unconscious, but it is always made. In most cases, however, it is definitely and specifically undertaken beforehand.

The time has long since passed when we could think of the church as an institution whose mission could be performed by untrained, undisciplined workers. The church is to-day facing a situation that is so complicated, so unsettled, so momentous that it must give itself seriously and unreservedly to its task if it would accomplish its purposes in the world. In doing this, it is increasingly evident that it must have a corps of workers who are thoroughly prepared for the tasks that lie ahead. The need is not merely for properly trained and equipped preachers, but for laymen of like fitness. Broadness of vision, greatness of heart, thoroughness of consecration are necessary for those who would think in world terms and take part in a world program.

When our country entered the world war, we had a small standing army that was utterly insufficient for the needs of the hour. This condition was recognized, and immediately training camps were established to fit officers for their duties of training and leading the vast army that was to be raised. The outcome of the war shows how well they learned their lessons and how well they performed their duties in connection with the trained men who were put in their charge.

Our church has these training camps in its schools and colleges, and it must support and use them as never before if it is to meet properly the obligations resting upon it in this new day. As our church has been called to a great work, it has been called to get ready for that work, and Christian education is a part of the necessary preparation. Millions of dollars must be invested in her schools, colleges and universities, and thousands of young men and young women must be enrolled as students. If we do this, our manifest duty, the time is not far distant when we shall be able to do marvelous things to hasten the coming of the Kingdom of God on earth.

UNIFICATION.

The action of the recent General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in failing to adopt the plan of unification transmitted by the Joint Commission on Unification, in failing to point out in detail the provisions which are not acceptable, and in failing to propose amendments or a substitute plan that would meet with approval, makes it evident that the culmination of the unification movement has inevitably been deferred to a more or less distant day. Its action in authorizing a continuation of the Commission or the calling of a Convention, simply means that the question has been left open for further consideration.

While it may seem ungracious to suggest that the General Conference at Des Moines undertook to shift the responsibility of definitive action concerning the only plan that has been fully worked out by the Commission from its own shoulders to our own (and we do not, in the slightest degree, impugn the motives that lay back of that action), we cannot but feel that it simply "marched up the hill and marched down again," when the issue was fairly and squarely before it. As we see it, our church is not called upon to take any further action until the report of the Commission has been submitted to our next General Conference, along with such developments as may arise from such fraternal communications as may take place between the two Commissions as they are now or may be constituted. Since there is no occasion for calling a special session of our General Conference, we may await with perfect equanimity its regular meeting two years hence. In the meantime, we have a great program to which we need to give ourselves with the utmost energy.

We think it is hardly necessary to say that there is nothing now before the church in connection with this subject that will call for extended discussion through the columns of the church press. There is no plan to favor or oppose—only a proposed course of procedure, which will be considered by the General Conference itself in due time. Until then, we have enough of other things to keep us busy.

THE SLACK SEASON.

Probably in every business there is a season that is below normal so far as income is concerned, though expenses go on as usual. In most cases, this fact is taken into consideration and suitable provision is made against the slack season.

The Advocate is entering upon its slack season now, but, unfortunately, because of the enormous increase in the cost of everything that enters into its production, it has not been able to accumulate a reserve that will enable it to pass through this slack season without serious embarrassment. We are hoping, therefore, that its friends will bear this fact in mind and make every possible effort during the summer months to secure renewals and new subscriptions at the rate of $2 a year. The scarcity of newsprint seems to be as great as ever, and the price shows no signs of falling to a lower level. We are taking a legitimate pride in the fact that thus far we have not had to omit an issue of the paper, nor have we had to decrease its size, as so many papers have been compelled to do. We have done this by hard work, and at great expense, though we have used the most careful economy. We feel sure, therefore, that our friends will rally to our help and enable us to pass the crisis of the summer months without an undue strain upon our resources. If every pastor in our three patronizing Conferences will make a special effort to secure even a few renewals and new subscriptions, he will have our heartfelt thanks, and, in addition, he will be rendering a distinct service to an institution of the church and to those into whose homes he may be instrumental in having the Advocate go. We have faith to believe that all will help at a time when help is greatly needed.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. R. Cruthirds, of Lyman, Miss., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, remarks that he is among those who are opposed to unification.

Rev. Dan Kelly, of the Mississippi Conference, is assisting the pastor, Rev. Lastie N. Hoffpauir, in a meeting at Amite, La., this week.

Our congregation at Coushatta, La., has purchased a lot upon which a modern church building will be erected in due time. Rev. J. C. Price is the pastor.

Rev. J. Cude Rousseaux, our pastor at Abbeville, La., reports that progress is being made on his charge, the blessings of God being manifest in the work of the church.

Rev. C. M. Crossley, our pastor at Court Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., is having a good year on his charge. He has received forty-five members into the church since Conference.

Rev. H. L. Norton, our pastor at Logtown, Miss., was recently assisted in a fine meeting at that place by Rev. W. M. Sullivan, presiding elder of the Seashore District. There were twenty additions to the church.

Rev. J. F. Waltman, of Kentwood, La., represented the presiding elder at the quarterly conference of the Greensburg charge on May 26, Rev. A. S. Lutz, the presiding elder, being unable to be present on account of sickness.

We learn from the St. Helena Echo that Rev. L. E. Crooks, our pastor at Greenburg, La., left last week to attend the Commencement exercises of Asbury College, Wilmore, Ky., of which his brother-in-law, Rev. John Paul, is dean.

At Felicity parsonage, New Orleans, on June 1, Prof. Wm. Young Hiter, of Tennessee, and Miss Mary Angie Tally of New Orleans were recently united in the holy bonds of matrimony. Prof. and Mrs. Hiter will make their home in Memphis, Tenn.

We learn from the Brandon News that Rev. John W. Chisholm, our accomplished pastor at Brandon, Miss., recently preached the Commencement sermon for the Pelahatchie High School. He also delivered the address to the graduating class of the New Prospect High School.

The Department of Intermediate-Senior Work of the General Sunday School Board will conduct a Camp-Conference at Lake Junaluska, N. C., June 25 to July 6, for boys from 15 to 17 years of age. Information may be had by writing Rev. E. R. Stanford, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

Writing from De Ridder, La., under date of June 3, Rev. C. E. Fike says: "We have just buried Mrs. Perry. She was the mother of Mrs. P. M. Brown, wife of Rev. P. M. Brown. She was very much loved in our town, and the funeral was well attended. She was the daughter of Rev. A. F. M. Flye, who was a prominent preacher of the Mississippi Conference. She married Dr. S. Perry. She was 81 years old and had been a widow forty-nine years."

Rev. W. A. Wilson, of Myrtle, Miss., recently assisted the pastor, Rev. J. A. George, in meetings at Hollandale and at Arcola. There were thirty-six additions to the church, twenty-two of whom were on profession of faith. Brother George writes most appreciatively of the work of Brother Wilson in revival services, this being the third successive year in which he has had his assistance. Brother George says he has one of the finest charges in the North Mississippi Conference.

The Felicity Church, New Orleans, presented Miss Willie Zuber with a handsome gold Waltham watch and a silver pencil, as a graduation and farewell present on last Sunday at the evening service. Miss Zuber is a Newcomb graduate, and is already accepted for foreign service by our Mission Board. After delivering a special course of addresses on "Social Service" at the Mansfield League Assembly, she will take a special course in New York before leaving for China as an evangelistic missionary.

Ministers' sons are not such a bad lot, after all. Mr. Tandy Q. Foote, son of Dr. V. G. Foote, pastor of Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans, has recently been elected president of the student body of the College of Arts and Sciences of Tulane University, for next year, and Mr. Murph Snelling, son of Rev. John G. Snelling, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, has been elected assistant manager of the track team. Other ministers' sons have held important positions in the University during the session that has just closed, though there are probably not more than a dozen of them, all told.

SOUTH AMERICA: THE UNDEVELOPED CONTINENT.

By Rev. A. C. Millar, D.D.

VI.

The Reasons for Unsatisfactory Relations.

North America and South America are in the Western Hemisphere and both believe in republican forms of government. We have products which South America needs. Why, then, is our export trade only 11 per cent of the total exports to Latin America? "Why has France furnished five times as many motor cars, Germany twenty times as many iron beams, and England twice as much machinery?"

We have failed to study and understand our neighbors. We take their revolutions too seriously. We imagine that their countries are all unhealthful. We do not comprehend the Latin American mind, and consequently do not seek to adapt our methods and products to their requirements. Because our shovels and plows and stoves suit us, we think that these people should like and want them. We overlook the fact that until a man has learned how to use the best machinery he prefers the simpler. We boast of our superiority, which is always and everywhere offensive, while many South Americans have been educated in Europe and speak two or three languages, and few of us speak other tongues sufficiently well to be able to use them in business. We have few salesmen who are able or willing to deal with Latin Americans on their own terms.

We are not as careful as are European governments to send well equipped men as consuls to these countries. Our respresentatives on account of their brusque manners are justly criticised by the suave foreigners. Social and business life are so closely interlaced that our salesmen and consuls need to make a special study of the niceties of social intercourse. We call ourselves "Americans" when we have no exclusive right to the term, and the South Americans properly call us "North Americans" by way of differentiation. Our manufacturers and shippers, failing to realize the transportation difficulties, do not adequately pack their goods, which, consequently, often arrive in bad condition, and further orders become impossible. The demands for our goods have been so great at home that we have not diligently sought foreign markets, and our merchant marine was too small to avail in developing trade. While it is true that our goods may reach their destination in foreign bottoms, it is also true that the ships of a nation create business for their own people far more than they do for strangers. In many European countries labor conditions make lower prices possible. As we do not wish to lower our standards of living for labor, it is imperative that by our better labor we produce more and better goods, or competition is vain. Japan, with a rapidly growing and wonderfully efficient merchant marine, is reaching out for South American trade, and Germany, although temporarily at a disadvantage, is preparing to regain what has been lost and more. Our banks must also plan to meet South American demands for longer time and better facilities for obtaining credit. It is claimed that Germany's banking system has been its greatest factor in controlling South American trade. Their banks are to be found in all important places and they have eliminated the red-tape which has prevailed among our banks in dealing with Latin America.

A very discriminating writer of this country says: "Two things the Latin American and Spaniard will not change, and these are his language and customs. No matter how modernized he may be, no matter how up-to-date his country may be, no matter how much he may travel or how many tongues he may speak, yet his time-honored customs and his beloved Castillian are as enduring as the everlasting hills and as unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. Particularly is this true of his business ways, and whoever essays to deal with him successfully must realize this and adapt himself to conditions."

South America needs railroads and machinery and electrical appliances and automobiles. It particularly needs improvements in agricultural machinery and methods. We need the South American coffee and cocoa and hides, and tungsten, vanadium, chromium, molybdenum, platinum, and tin. The great Panama Canal now makes trade with the West Coast comparatively easy. Ours is the nearest nation to that Coast. Shall we try to understand conditions and then prepare ourselves intelligently and thoroughly to meet them? If we do not, we shall of all nations be the least wise in regard to the things which make for peace and prosperity in the Western World.

LOVE AND SERVICE.

Love makes all burdens light. Two poor little children, one a little girl of perhaps nine, the other a little boy of four, were following the circus procession, and forgot that they were wandering far from home. The little fellow became tired and sleepy. His sister, her own bare feet sore and muscles weary, took him in her arms to carry him, and he soon fell asleep. She was tugging away, her hair disheveled, her face dusty, when a kind-hearted man said to her, "Can't you awaken him and let him walk? He must be very heavy for you to carry." "Oh no," she said, "he is not very heavy; he's my little brother." Now, that looks illogical, but it is not. Love makes burdens actually light. It gives wings to tired feet. It thrills weary muscles. Impassioned love for the work to which one feels especially called alone can give enthusiasm and moral courage. It may be that our fathers were too enthusiastic, for emotion that is intelligently directed is born of conviction, and that must be first conceived in the mind before it is impressed upon the heart.—Author unknown.

JUST A LITTLE—

Just a little kindness added to what you do makes all the difference in the world.

Just an added smile, a song composed within your heart; just a little lift for some one close at hand; just a little more effort when things begin to lag—these are what bring out the sun and drive the clouds away.

Just a little planning, just a little thinking, just a little resolving hour by hour, and you will find yourself a-growing—just a little all the time.

Just a little knowledge—and then a little more—banked for the day that you need it will keep you fresh and glad and make you a sought-out man.

Just a little waiting when you ill-humored get, will save you extra tears and sadness, which to you will mean a lot.

Just a little solid sense, just a little wholesome faith, just a little word well spoken, just a little hope fulfilled in deeds, just a little scattered sunshine—these help to make this world a better place.

Just a little oil on troubled waters, just a little love turned loose, just a little consideration for the "under dog."

Let us all see what we can do to be just a little better and do just a little more.—Selected.

On the morning of February 13, the spirit of our dear friend and co-worker, Mrs. MARY ELIZABETH NORMAN, passed out into the great unknown. She died as she lived, most peacefully, just falling asleep never to awake again. She was a life-time member of the M. E. Church, South, and attended its services regularly up till a few years ago. She was also an earnest worker in the Woman's Missionary Society, having joined many years ago when it was a Ladies' Aid Society. Mrs. M. E. Norman will never be forgotten. Although she had reaped a ripe old age, her mind was active, always taking an interest in the happenings of the village and community. All loved to meet at her home and listen to her talk. When holding our monthly missionary meetings, all miss her and it seems as though she should be there when the roll is called. God has chosen our dear departed friend for His kingdom, and we each know if we live a life of righteousness as she did, that we shall meet her and be present at the final roll call. A FRIEND.

On the morning of May 3, 1920, about 10:30, the redeemed spirit of Sister ALBERTA A. EMERSON left this world to be with God, whom she loved and served, and to be with those of her loved ones who preceded her to the glory world. Sister Emerson was certainly a devout Christian. She was the wife of Brother W. H. Emerson, one of our most efficient local preachers. There were born two children to these godly parents, both children preceding them to the glory world. Sister Emerson, with a broken heart and amid tears, could say, "God's will be done." She loved the church, and was always present when able. Her presence was an inspiration to the preacher. She was one who believed in personal work, and many have been brought to the Master by her kind words. No doubt many will be waiting there to welcome her home, and call her blessed for having led them to the Christ. Long years ago she laid herself and all she had on the altar of service, and during all these years she never withdrew the offering. But she is not dead; the Lord said, "He that believeth on me shall never die." She not only believed, but she walked and talked with God. So we believe that some sweet day we shall meet her again on the other shore, where there will be no sickness, no death, and where, thank God, we shall never say good-by. May God's sustaining grace be extended to Brother Emerson. Her pastor,

W. E. DICKENS.

Pachuta, Miss.

After an illness of about ten days, Brother ISAAC CLARK died at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Seale, of Moorhead, Saturday morning, May 15, at 3:15. Brother Clark was born June 12, 1841. He was twice married, his first wife being Miss Almira Allen. Seven children were born of that union, three of whom are living yet. After the death of his first wife, he married Miss Cordelia Knight. Three children were born to them. As a father and Christian gentleman, Brother Clark was unexcelled. His efforts for the church, for man, and for the kingdom of God were untiring. He always stood ready and willing to help his neighbors and friends at any and all times. When I think of the death of Brother Clark, my mind naturally turns to the thought of the Psalmist when he wrote the immortal words, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints." God has truly gathered unto Himself a saint, and Brother Clark has gone on to enjoy the many treasures that he had laid up in heaven. As a citizen, he stood out pre-eminently for his country and for the fundamental Christian principles of State and nation. Through the civil war he fought unreservedly for the Confederacy and he always showed a willingness to suffer if need be for the things of God. I am sure that he is happy to-day enjoying the blessings of heaven, for he died in Jesus and we have the comforting assurance, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." One who loved him,

S. H. CAFFEY.

MEMORIAL.

There is no standard of measuring a human life except by that perfect life of the man of Galilee.

So here we find a perfect pattern for our lives and one by which it can be correctly estimated. And it is by this model of perfection that we desire to estimate the unselfish life and sterling character of our dear departed sister, MRS. ETTA SHAW HOLLAND. We do not know why she was taken from us, but know that she was given to us to hallow our lives and teach us to live more nearly like the Master.

It is impossible for human words to estimate the true value of any character and especially one like hers that was overflowing with benevolences and divers good deeds.

She was tireless in service, fervent in spirit, joyous in hope, firm in faith, kind and sympathetic in heart. Her presence and strong personality will be greatly missed by us.

Therefore, be it resolved, That we sadly miss the radiant presence and guiding hand of our departed president and that we mourn her absence as a wise and safe counselor, a comrade in service and a true yoke-sister in the Gospel of Christ.

Resolved, That we express to the bereaved husband and family our tenderest sympathy and assure them of our prayers and condolence. That copies of these resolutions be sent to the St. Helena Echo and the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and a copy be spread on the minutes of our Ladies' Aid.

Signed by: Mrs. W. M. Nettles, Mrs. J. B. Dean, Mrs. Opha Gill, Memorial Committee.

PAINS NEARLY DOUBLED ME UP

Nothing Helped Me Until I Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Wyandotte, Mich.—"For the last four years I have doctored off and on without help. I have had pains every month so bad that I would nearly double up. Sometimes I could not sweep a room without stopping to rest, and everything I ate upset my stomach. Three years ago I lost a child and suffered so badly that I was out of my head at times. My bowels did not move for days and I could not eat without suffering. The doctor could not help me and one day I told my husband that I could not stand the pain any longer and sent him to the drug-store to get me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and threw the doctor's medicine away. After taking three bottles of Vegetable Compound and using two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash I could do my own housework. If it had not been for your medicine I don't know where I would be today and I am never without a bottle of it in the house. You may publish this if you like that it may help some other woman."—Mrs. MARY STENDER, 120 Orange St., Wyandotte, Mich.

Over fifty years ago a young physician practiced widely in a rural district and became famous for his uniform success in the curing of disease. This was Dr. Pierce, who afterwards established himself in Buffalo, N. Y., and placed one of his prescriptions, which he called "Golden Medical Discovery," in the drug stores of the United States so that the public could easily obtain this very remarkable tonic, corrective and blood-maker. Dr. Pierce manufactured this "Discovery" from roots and barks—a corrective remedy, the ingredients of which nature had put in the fields and forests, for keeping us healthy. Few folks or families now living have not at sometime or other used this "Golden Medical Discovery" for the stomach, liver and heart. Over twenty-four million bottles of this tonic and blood remedy have been sold in this country.

FROM SARDIS, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Brother J. L. Neill, of Nashville, was with me in a revival last week. We used the Standard Plan of Evangelism and found it to be ideal. The purport of the plan is to "find out first what to do and then do it." The plan has many advantages, especially two: first, it defines your job, and, secondly, it enlists the co-operation of your membership.

Thirty-one members were added to the church—eleven on profession of faith. We expect to receive others. And what can I say of Brother Neill? To use an old phrase, "He came, he saw, he conquered." He won all the people by his manly deportment, Christian character and splendid preaching. He can easily be classed with the strongest preachers of Southern Methodism. Best of all, he is deeply spiritual. He is a man of God, a man of much prayer, thoroughly in sympathy with every enterprise of his church, loyal to the core, wide-awake and progressive. We love him, admire him and believe in him. The reception of thirty-one members is not the only result of the revival. The whole town was spiritually lifted, our membership revived, family altars erected and many hearts reconsecrated to the service of the Lord. It was truly a gracious revival and we praise and thank God for the manifestation of the Holy Spirit in each service.

The people of Sardis are very responsive to every high and noble appeal, especially kind to and considerate of the writer and his family. We do want so much to be worthy and helpful. Our constant prayer is that we may be able to lead these good people to higher and greater endeavors.

Come to see us, Brother Carley. We are living in one of the best homes in the North Mississippi Conference. You can smell fresh paint, and the flies and mosquitoes will not disturb your rest, in as much as our parsonage has been recently re-painted and screened. You are giving us a great paper. How I do wish you had the financial support and help you so much deserve.

Almost forgot to tell you. We are in the midst of another one of these detestable (?) drives—one in Louisiana, one in Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences. I see from reports in your paper that some of our preachers are galling under these drives and in somewhat of a rebellious state of mind. Personally, I have never seen it in that light. We have never been driven in the general acceptation of the term. A Methodist preacher is a free man, and when the Kingdom of God lies heavily upon his heart, he doesn't need to be driven. We have not been driven, but wisely led from victory to victory, resulting in the advancement of the lines in all quarters. How glorious our forward march has been! I consider these so-called drives, progressive movements, advancing the lines, the undertaking of greater and larger things for God. Progress we must. The law of the life of the church is progress or rot. I often wonder who are the tired ones—the people or we preachers? Some one asked in the Advocate, "When will these drives stop?" God have mercy on our church when they do stop. With such a vision, such wonderful achievements that have been ours in the last two years, they will stop when sin is eliminated from the earth and when the Kingdom of God is ushered in. And I trust never until then.

E. G. MOHLER.

Sardis, Miss.

A NOTE FROM A LAYMAN.

Dear Mr. Editor: Among the wise things said recently in the Advocate, are a few statements by Rev. J. Tillery Lewis in the issue of May 20. Let me ask every reader of the Advocate to get the paper, and re-read Brother Lewis' article, headed "Fundamentals and Drives." It is illuminating, and touches the vital truths that will save humanity and the church from certain ruin and wreck.

It has been clear to my mind a long while, that there is real danger to the individual's, as such, or to the church's, as a whole, becoming "top-heavy" trying to be just a little "taller" or just a little "bigger" than anything else in existence. The celebrated Titanic doubtless would not have been wrecked, with the appalling loss of life, had it not been for the insane desire to be just "a little ahead of anything in speed."

Preachers, listen! Do not urge the poor, plodding man or woman who is trying to follow the lowly Nazarene and trying to be honest towards God and man, too—I say, don't rush him. He can't go the gait of those who are honestly well-to-do—much less the fellow who has, by ways that are crooked and devices that are dark and sinister, accumulated unto himself a lot of worldly goods.

No, Brother Carley, we are not going to "quit" the dear old church of our fathers. It will have to be the other fellow that "quits" the M. E. Church, South. E. P. HARPER.

In its final form the Christian life is not a life of renunciation, but a life of consecration—a life that means giving up—only insofar as giving up is giving upward—giving upward of the whole self, its gifts, its present, and its future. It is the life of courageous freedom, the life of security in peril, the life of abundance in the midst of want, the life of peace in the midst of care, the life of large fellowship in the heart's loneliness.—Charles H. Brent.

We cannot copy the great work which Christ did for the world, but we may copy his spirit. The smallest trickle of water down a city gutter will carve out of the mud at its side little banks and cliffs, and exhibit all the phenomena of erosion on the largest scale, as the Mississippi does over half a continent, and the tiniest wave in a basin will fall into the same curves as the billows of mid-ocean.—Alexander Maclaren.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Friday and Saturday of last month, the Seashore District Institute was held at First Church, Gulfport, Miss. This was a good Institute and deserved a larger representation from the district. The following officers were elected: G. L. Carley, Gulfport, Secretary; Mrs. Frank D. L. Smith, Gulfport, Teacher-Training; W. H. Wainright, Gulfport, Int. Sen. W. B. C.; B. C. Page, Columbia, Y. P. A. W.

You Do More Work,

You are more ambitious and you get more enjoyment out of everything when your blood is in good condition. Impurities in the blood have a very depressing effect on the system, causing weakness, laziness, nervousness and sickness.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value.

GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC is not a patent medicine, it is simply IRON and QUININE suspended in Syrup. So pleasant even children like it. The blood needs Quinine to Purify it and IRON to Enrich it. These reliable tonic properties never fail to drive out impurities in the blood.

The Strength-Creating Power of GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC has made it the favorite tonic in thousands of homes. More than thirty-five years ago folks would ride a long distance to get GROVE'S TASTELESS Chill TONIC when a member of their family had Malaria or needed a body-building, strength-giving tonic. The formula is just the same today, and you can get it from any drug store. 60c per bottle

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

SOUTH IS TURNING AGAINST CALOMEL

Mr. Dodson, the "Liver Tone" Man, Responsible for Change for the Better.

Every druggist in town has noticed a great falling off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place.

"Calomel is dangerous and people know it." Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle doesn't cost very much but if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, just ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable remedy, harmless to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling fine; no biliousness, sick headache, acid stomach or constipated bowels. It doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel today and tomorrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day.

B. C.; Miss Zora Saucier, Saucier, Miss., Elementary Supt.; H. B. Rush, Biloxi, Missions.

This is a fine set of officers and with the proper encouragement they will do good work.

Sunday we visited Vosshurg Sunday school and held two sessions at the Eucutta church. We enjoyed this visit much and believe that God will bless these people and their efforts.

Brother B. F. Lewis held the Charge Institute of the Williamsburg charge for me. Each Sunday school in the charge had its report and three of the four were represented in person. The following officers were elected: Sam Crawford, Ora, Secretary; Miss Cora Calhoun, Collins, R. F. D., Elementary Superintendent; G. M. Dean Bassfield, Miss., Int. Sen. W. B. C.

From the report given me, this is the thing to do. Utilize the fifth Sundays in bringing the Sunday school workers of each charge together and work out the plans for the whole charge. Their next Institute will be held the fifth Sunday in August at Williamsburg. If there are any others who wish to organize a Four-Times-A-Year Institute for their charge, we will be glad to take the matter up with them and furnish them a worker.

Applications for Teacher-Training Schools are coming in right along. I hope that we will be able to supply all who ask for them.

Have you had Sunday School Day? If you have not, please make an effort to observe the day soon.

If there is any way you can use the Sunday School Board, let us know and we will be glad to render any service possible.

Pray for the work and the workers.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

"A CITY IN THE WOODS."

Dear Brother Carley: I attended the recent closing exercises of Port Gibson Female College and was so much impressed with the picturesque little city, and enjoyed the cool shades from the stately trees which grow on every street and so beautifully shelter every home.

We were escorted to one of the best kept cemeteries I ever saw. We found a real cedar forest, possibly seventy-five or a hundred years old, where men and women sleep who have planned so wisely for those who now live in that community. We took another stroll which led us up to C. H. A. (Chamberlain-Hunt Academy), that splendid Presbyterian school for boys under the presidency of Dr. C. T. Thompson, who is doing such admirable work in educating and shaping young men's lives for the future.

Another very attractive feature of Port Gibson is its splendid church buildings. It has fine brick churches — Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopal, Catholic, and Jewish Synagogue. It also has concrete sidewalks to any point in town. When I see these magnificent things, and many more that could be mentioned, then I search for their origin. I find down on College Street a building which has stood since 1843—a place for the education and culture of young women for seventy-seven years. From these walls have gone many accomplished young women who have become the mothers of distinguished sons and daughters who made the world better for this generation. It is my opinion that out of the influence of this institution (though unconscious) have come the above mentioned things to this city that it enjoys above other cities of its size.

I am just wondering if some noble-hearted man or woman whom God has blessed with money isn't looking around for some place to spend some of his or her treasure to make the world better for young life. I know of no better place than P. G. F. C. I wonder if some big-hearted man in Port Gibson won't be first to start this move?

That princely man and queenly woman, Dr. and Mrs. Hunt, who are at the head of this institution, are second to none. I have known them for twenty-five years or more, and have never known any one to be more self-sacrificing for others than they. Port Gibson has much to be thankful for as well as the college—to have this accomplished man and woman at the head of this institution and he citizens of this splendid little town.

I would like to say that Mrs. Hunt is a daughter of the late Dr. J. H. Bruner, president of Hiwassee College, Tennessee, for years. Dr. Rolfe Hunt is a son of the late Dr. Frank Hunt, who was once president of Harperville College, Mississippi, and one of Georgia's distinguished sons. Dr. and Mrs. Hunt were both almost reared in a college and have given their lives to the education of the young. I don't think I ever saw such splendid discipline and such universal love for a president as I found at Port Gibson Female College. My daughter wrote me not long since, "Papa, Dr. Hunt has gone to Vicksburg and Jackson, and we will all be so glad when he comes back; everyone regrets to see him go away."

EVEN SO, BE BRAVE!

Whose fame extends through every zone;
My place is with the millions who

"I use it for the family, and certainly feel it has saved me a lot of money.

"I am glad to recommend Black-Draught, and am sure if others would use it they would be as glad as I've been."

Anybody or anything to command confidence must deserve it.

A medicine that has commanded the confidence of the public for half a century, as Hood's Sarsaparilla has done, has merit, real merit.

EAT IT ALL.

You are likely to be afraid when seated before a large dinner or before a particularly delightful dish lest you may suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion heart burn or some of the other disagreeable after effects. We are prone at times to forget our stomachs and our rashness causes us trouble. A simple natural aid at times when your organs rebell will not only avoid temporary discomfort but will also give comfort and rest to the tired, over-worked, mistreated organs and smoothly pave the way to strength.

RELIABLE VADCO REMEDIES

VADCO Dyspepsia Remedy is a harmless though immensely comforting and effective corrective. A teaspoonful just after meals or whenever needed will bring immediate relief and by aiding the stomach in its work, restore it to strength and health. It is simple to take and pleasant to taste. LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Interesting News From The Zwolle Auxiliary.

"We have a small but active Mission Study class. We have a lesson every other Thursday. The topics are assigned in advance and, as a rule, are not read, but told. Outside clippings apropos of the subject are brought in. Our book is, "Americanization," to my mind, the livest topic of the day. Eight ladies have books and always know the lesson. About ten belong to the class. They are women of vision, culture, and, best of all, consecration. The president is a queen bee! How she hustles! Some of you met her at Lake Charles, Mrs. McKinnon. Our business meetings are held on the first Thursdays and the social meetings on the third Thursdays—and, oh, those socials! Chicken salad (I didn't get chicken much during our pastorate in New Orleans), olives, crackers, pimento sandwiches, ice cream, home-made cake and coffee. During the chatter we all sew. We have paid the first quarter's installment on our $100 pledge. We should be glad to have you make us a visit. Sincerely,

Mrs. ROBT. BROWN,
Zwolle, La

Thank you, Mrs. Brown, I think we will all come, especially after reading the menu. Mrs. Snelling, please let me postcript this comment to Mrs. Brown's report. A good lady in our auxiliary remarked lately that some of us were not as careful in our entertainment of our Missionary Society as we were of our purely social entertainments. Now, that should not be so—not that we need be so elaborate with these social meetings, but surely we should make them just as enjoyable as we do our non-church parties! I think we should do our best for God's affairs, even if it involves the making of chicken salad! So Zwolle Auxiliary has unconsciously held up before us an example that we will all do well to emulate, especially those of us who may have given small time or care to our Missionary Social Afternoons. Conference Publicity Superintendent.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

Children's Department.

Corinne Rogers.

Instead of giving instruction on the work, this Department will be devoted for a time to news items. During the year, I hope to have something of interest from every children's auxiliary. Please write me what you are doing. It may help others.

Water Valley Juniors have a wide-awake Bible Study class. Houston also has a Bible Study class, and the Houston children have sent me a set of Bible Study questions to be used in the study of any chapter in the Bible. Any one wanting these questions, will write me and I will forward them at once.

Houston received a dollar last quarter from little Brooks Haynes, of Brandenburg, Ky. God needed little Brook's mother in the Heavenly Home, and the little boy is now living with his grandmother in Kentucky. The morning he left Houston, as he stood looking into his dear mother's face, he said to a friend, "Did you pack my mite box with my things?" What an unconscious tribute to his mother's faithfulness!

Tchula is very enthusiastic over their new Mission Study book, "Called to the Colors." They have secured 25 new Junior members, and 23 new babies. They are working for the Honor Roll. Of course they will make it.

Greenwood has a pledge of fifty dollars. Their leader, Miss Annie Stephens, put on a membership and attendance drive. She divided the society into Reds and Blues. The side that lost was to entertain the other. One side gained the most members, the other the largest attendance. Since neither had lost, Miss Stephens entertained the whole society herself. Of course they had a good time.

Dublin has the distinction of having every child in the church in the missionary society, while Artesia lacks only one. Are there any others with a record like this?

Gunnison, a new society, has started off with fifteen life members. One mother with six children made them all life members. Mrs. Goza was chosen leader by the children themselves. They realized that a leader was about to be chosen for them, and they took it into their own hands and demanded Mrs. Goza. Could a more beautiful tribute have been paid this lovely woman! Gunnison promises to be a leading society in the Greenville District.

Beulah will also organize the children. There are not many children in that church, but they want to be counted among the faithful few. Benoit has a very enthusiastic band of children. They sent a delegate to the District meeting, and they are promising great things for the future.

Mrs. L. C. Gauze has consented to lead the Leland children this year, and that means that a great year's work

Letters That Inspire Confidence

I wish very much that every reader of this paper could spend sufficient time in my office to read the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country. I have printed several hundreds of them in a booklet, but I wish you could see the originals, for I would like to have you realize the wonderful results which they report in the relief of dyspepsia, indigestion, persistent headaches, rheumatism, kidney, bladder and liver diseases, uric acid poisoning and other curable conditions due to impure blood.

Before my own health was restored by Shivar Mineral Water and I purchased this Spring, and before I received all these letters from sufferers, I didn't take very much stock in advertisements like this. I therefore cannot blame you if you doubt, but, my friend, I am absolutely convinced that the Shivar Spring is the greatest restorative mineral spring ever discovered, not excepting the famous Spas of Europe. I have shipped this water to thousands of sufferers in all parts of the United States and they almost invariably report either permaneat restoration or beneficial results. That is why I make the offer contained in the following letter. Sign it now and mail it.

Shivar Spring,

Box 17L, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:—I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and, if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

FROM TUNICA, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: According to pronouncements by many of the oldest citizens of this community, one of the greatest revivals ever held in Tunica has just been closed at the Methodist Church. Rev. W. B. Hogg, senior chaplain in the late war, did the preaching. Brother Hogg is a great pulpit man. He is a student of human nature and has learned many valuable lessons from the school of Experience. These minor essentials and other qualifications, connected with the great essential—faith in God—enabled him to preach the Gospel of Christ with transforming power. The Holy Spirit's presence was felt, and souls were born into the kingdom of heaven. Forty-two gave their names for membership in the local churches, as follows: Methodist, 30; Baptist, 6; Presbyterian, 4; Christian, 1. Out of those who gave their names for membership, 35 were on profession of faith, and among the 35 were 13 full-grown men. Surely, the arm of the Lord is not shortened that he cannot save.

The spirit of co-operation between the local pastors and their congregations was beautiful and meant much to the success of the meeting. The whole community received a blessing from the meeting.

Tunica will always remember with great pleasure Brother Hogg and his soul-stirring messages, which lifted us all to higher planes of Christian living. C. A. PARKS.

A NOTE FROM REV. W. D. BASS.

Dear Brother Carley: Am just home from East Oklahoma Conference, where I assisted Rev. J. H. Rogers in a good meeting in the town of Braggs. There were a number of conversions and additions. Some of the good people said it was the greatest meeting the town ever had. Brother Rogers is doing a fine work. Has bought and paid for a parsonage. That made about ten revival meetings I have helped him in, first and last. Have a few open dates I could place with pastors. Write me at Corinth, Miss.

A LETTER FROM ARKANSAS.

Dear Brother Carley: Thinking perhaps some of the readers of the Advocate would be interested in a line from me as to my whereabouts, etc., I am glad to say I am getting along splendidly. I am only eight miles from the line of Louisiana. I can give my "Tin Lizzie" a crank and be in Louisiana in thirty minutes. I have a good work, which is paying me $1670—it always pays what it assesses. We have a nice church building here at Wesson, with five Sunday school rooms, etc. Wesson has been a station, but on account of the shortage of preachers, we are having to make circuits out of some small stations, and two good country churches have been put with Wesson.

We have a fine Conference—as fine a body of preachers and laymen as you usually meet. There is room here for a few more preachers, however. Our Conference will be held at Camden, and will be presided over by Bishop Monzon for the fourth time. He is greatly beloved here.

We have a Summer School for ministers at Conway. (Conway is in the bounds of the North Arkansas Conference). This school is for the two Arkansas Conferences, and practically all the preachers attend. Camden District, which is the district I am in, and one of the farthest, is planning to be there to a man.

Brother J. A. Sage is my presiding elder. We like him very much, but will have to give him up at Conference as his time is out.

I am reading the New Orleans Advocate, and keeping a line on you Methodist people in Louisiana. I am sharing in your successes and sorrows. I was grieved and shocked to hear of the death of Brother J. B. Fulton—how I did love him! We came from the same circuit. I extend my prayers and sympathy to his bereaved family, and pray that God's grace may sustain them in this great sorrow.

Brother Carley, you are giving us a good paper. We, too, have a good Conference paper—the Arkansas Methodist. It belongs to the two Arkansas Conferences. R. H. BAMBERG.

Wesson, Ark.

THE BEST OF LIFE.

The best half of life is in front of the man of forty, if he be anything of a man. The work he will do will be done with the hand of a master, and not of an apprentice. He can seek and use opportunities which he did not have and could not have in youth. The trained intellect sees everything in just measures. The trained temper advances with the calm and ordered pace of conscious power and deliberate determination. Every year of his life may be happier and more hopeful than the last.—London Hospital.

How Nuxated Iron Feeds The Blood

Helps Restore Wasted Tissues and Give Increased Strength, Power and Endurance

"Without iron there can be no strong, sturdy men, or healthy rosy-cheeked women," says Dr. Ferdinand King, New York Physician and Medical Author. Iron is red blood food," and when the iron in your blood runs low your red blood corpuscles die by millions, the strength goes from your body, the color from your face—that mirror of yourself—and your every action lacks in power.

Actual Blood tests show that a tremendously large number of people who are weak and ill lack iron in their blood and that they are ill for no other reason than lack of iron. Iron deficiency paralyzes healthy, forceful cells, puts down the whole organism and weakens the entire system. A pale face, a nervous irritable disposition, a lack of strength and endurance and the inability to cope with the strong vigorous folks in the race of life—these are the sort of warning signals that Nature gives when the blood is getting thin, pale, watery and literally starving for want of iron.

By enriching the blood and creating new blood cells, Nuxated Iron strengthens the nerves, rebuilds the weakened tissues and helps to instil renewed energy and power into the whole system.

THE TEST THAT TELLS—

If you are not sure of your condition, go to your doctor and have him take your blood count and see where you stand or else make the following test yourself: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired; next take two five-grain tablets of Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained.

Unlike the older inorganic iron products Nuxated Iron is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee satisfactory and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

will be done by them. Coahoma also had a delegate at the district meeting. Coahoma expects to keep her good standing in the Greenville District.

The Shaw Juniors have taken on new life, and promise to do splendid work.

Cleveland expects to keep up with Merigold, and that means that Cleveland expects to be a banner society. Hurrah for Cleveland!

The budget of the Greenville children as pledged at the District meeting was $769.50. They will easily make it $1000.00 Three cheers for the children of Greenville District!

Several new societies have been organized in Holly Springs District—Adult at Winborn on Potts Camp circuit, one at Mt. Zion on the Abbeville circuit, a Young People's society at First Church in Water Valley, and Mrs. R. L. Pearson of Holly Springs reports the organization of Young People's Society with twenty-three members.

Organization Week.

And the rains fell and the winds blew—and the plans for organization week were doomed to failure. Appointments had been made at most of the churches in the Conference, but the roads were impassable. These appointments will be met later by the faithful women who have promised to see that the churches assigned to them are organized. One district secretary writes, "Disappointed? Yes. Discouraged? NEVER." That's the stuff a good organizer is made of.

But in spite of the elements, "the Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad." The report of the districts follows:

Greenville—7 new organizations, 1 re-organization.

Holly Springs—6 new organizations, 1 re-organization.

Corinth—5 new organizations, 1 re-organization.

Columbus—2 new organizations.

Aberdeen—1 new organization.

Sardis—1 new organization, 1 re-organization.

Durant—1 new organization.

With one district, Winona, yet to hear from, we find we have 23 NEW organizations, 4 auxiliaries re-organized. This means that 27 organizations are beginning work this month. Let us remember them in our prayers that they may be beginning a year of large usefulness.

With the 19 new auxiliaries reported the first quarter and the 23 of this month, we are already ahead of our organization record for the entire year of 1919.

BUT WE HAVE JUST BEGUN TO ORGANIZE.

Organization week is past. ORGANIZATION YEAR has just begun. Let us remember our Key words: Prayer, Study, Work; our Motto: "To the LAST woman in the LAST church." If our district secretary calls, let us be swift to answer.

BEULAH S. BOSWELL.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE EPWORTH LEAGUE.

The Mississippi Conference Epworth League will convene in Crawford Street Methodist Church, Vicksburg, Miss., on Tuesday, June 15, at 8 p.m. An elaborate, interesting, and profitable program has been prepared, and a record-breaking attendance is expected.

Banner.

A banner will be presented to the district having the largest number of delegates present, and the League in the district having the greatest number of delegates will be custodian of the banner for the year. Hattiesburg District won the banner last year and Broad Street was custodian. What district will win the banner at Vicksburg?

Certificate.

Each League will be awarded a certificate in proportion to how it measures up to the Standard of Excellence.

Special Car.

A special car for the delegates from the Meridian District will be attached to the regular A & V. train leaving Meridian at 12:10 p.m., June 15. Every one going to the Conference from the Meridian District is invited to go in this car—no extra charges for the car. Arrive at Vicksburg at 5:15 same day.

Visiting Speakers.

Miss Helen K. Boulware, Junior Supt., Junior and Intermediate Leagues, Nashville; Rev. T. A. Matthews, Nashville, Tenn., Centenary Slide Department; Rev. T. E. Reeve, Calhoun, Ga., Missionary to Africa (with exhibit of curios). We hope to have Bishop W. F. McMurry with us for one day, at least.

Reduced Rates.

A rate of one and one-third for round trip fare has been granted by the railroads upon the following terms:

1. That each person purchase a ticket, paying full fare going, and get a certificate from the agent from whom you purchase the ticket and you will be entitled to one-third fare for return ticket, provided there are 250 certificates properly signed; therefore be sure to get the proper certificate properly signed when you buy your ticket. If there are fewer than 250 certificates—YOU WILL NOT GET THE REDUCED RATES.

2. Buy a through ticket from your station to Vicksburg, but if the agent will not sell you a through ticket, be sure that you get a proper certificate each time you buy a ticket. Present your ticket to Miss Erma Kile, Secretary, as soon as you get to Vicksburg. Pastors should use their clergy permits.

Who Should Attend.

Each presiding elder, pastor and Epworth League president and superintendent of the Junior League, with not less than two delegates from each League (more if possible). Should a pastor have a church without a League, he should attend and bring two or more of his young people with him, or, if for any reason he cannot attend, he should send his young people.

Send the names of your delegates to Miss Louise Preston, Box 550, Vicksburg, and homes will be provided and free entertainment furnished them. We had a fine meeting at Laurel last year. We are planning and praying that this will be the best we have ever had; join us.

African Special.

Be sure to send Rev. L. F. Alford, Treasurer, Laurel, Miss., the amount your League subscribed on the African Special; if you did not make a pledge, your League should have a part in this great work. Therefore send what your League can pay.

There should be 300 in attendance.

All of our superannuate preachers are specially invited to attend.

The pastors are requested to announce at each service the date of the Conference at Vicksburg and urge their young people to attend—it will mean much to them, the League and the church. We are counting on you to help us have 300 present.

FROM VARDAMAN, MISS.

Dear Brother Carley: Our second quarterly conference was held at Loyd, Saturday, May 29, in our new church. Our P. E. complimented our report during the year. We have received 24 into the church. Sunday, May 30, was a great day with us. Brother Dorsey, our P. E., dedicated our church at Loyd. This year we have finished our parsonage, finished our church at Loyd, painted our church at Cross Roads, and have planned for our revival meetings at each church on the charge—only 7. I feel encouraged. I hope and pray for a glorious revival all over the charge. Pray for us.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE EXPECTATION OF FRIENDS.

Friends are worth much because of what they expect of us. Sometimes our own hopes grow faint, and we feel our energies beginning to lag, and that old question of the cynical pessimist, "What's the use?" dins itself in our ears. But before we give way to a feeling of hopelessness, we remember that a friend spoke an encouraging word to us not long ago, and another one looked into our eyes with the light of faith shining in his, and another one let us feel the warm heat of his heart through a simple handclasp—and we stiffen our muscles and press on, for we cannot disappoint our friends by failing to do our best. There is much truth in the saying that we are what our friends make us. We have friends, too, whom we may help.

IT STANDS THE TEST.

The Supreme Court of the United States handed down a unanimous decision last week sustaining the constitutionality of the prohibition amendment and of the Volstead enforcement act. If we did not know the temper of the liquor forces so well, we would say that this decision would set at rest the agitation that has been carried on in favor of a disregard of the law on the ground that it had not been properly passed. For all law-abiding citizens, the official utterance of the Supreme Court is sufficient; but there are some people who have so little regard for "God or man" that they will accept nothing as settled that does not agree with their own ideas of what ought to be. We suppose we shall have to endure the lugubrious wailings of the liquorites for a season—but prohibition is here to stay.

NOW WHAT SHALL WE DO?

For a long time we have been lamenting the fact that abnormal conditions resulting from the war have raised prices of all commodities to an almost prohibitive level, as a result of which many conscienceless profiteers have taken advantage of the situation to enrich themselves at the expense of their fellow-men. Recently there has been some indication of a downward tendency of prices, and we were beginning to rejoice over the prospect of better times. But now we are met with the argument that great economic injury will result from a rapid falling of prices, and we are urged not to take advantage of such concessions unless we are convinced that they have come about in the regular course of competitive business. Will somebody please tell us what we are to do?

PLENTY OF NOISE.

We have long known that noise appeals to some people as being the highest form of oratory, to say nothing of its value as an argument, but we had supposed that this high estimate placed upon its value was restricted largely to excitable crowds at an athletic contest, or to those who commonly fall into the error of mistaking the form for the substance. There must be about it, however, some peculiar psychological power that makes it a desirable accompaniment to the carrying through of any great program. We have read with much interest the accounts of the proceedings of the recent national political convention in Chicago; it has added to our interest to note the emphasis that was placed upon mere noise as a means in influencing votes for the respective candidates. Some of the noise, of course, was the result of spontaneous cheering, but much of it was purely mechanical, designed, evidently, to play upon the feelings of the delegates and cause them to support the name that produced the loudest and longest uproar. Politicians are supposed to be expert manipulators of public sentiment; since they have found it profitable to employ such methods in their work, we do not wonder that the same methods are in use in other fields. From all of which we deduce the following suggestion: Make plenty of noise about what you are doing and the world will think you are doing wonders.

"IT'S AN ILL WIND," ETC.

According to a recent press dispatch, the chairman of the Joint Commission on Printing has announced that because of the shortage of print paper, the circulation of the Congressional Record will be limited for the present, only enough copies being printed to supply the members of the House and the Senate, and that a limit will be placed upon the number of copies of speeches that may be printed for any one senator. We can imagine greater calamities that might befall the country than even such drastic action as this.

EARNING A SALARY.

We are in perfect sympathy with the feeling that most salaries in this country are too low, especially of preachers, teachers—and editors. However, we have reached this conclusion, after mature deliberation: The man who is not worth more than he is getting, is not worth as much as he is getting. A lesson is contained herein for those who need it.

WHOM TO PLEASE.

Every normal human being likes to have the approval of his fellow-men, and it is perfectly natural that we should try to please those with whom and for whom we labor. Yet it is just at this point that many a good man has fallen into serious error. The effort to please men sometimes involves a policy of expediency that is at variance with the principles of strict justice, and the fear of giving offense to some brings about inconsistencies in conduct that are hard to explain. As a matter of fact, it is too much for any man to hope to please everybody. The only rule that can be safely followed at all times and under all circumstances is the rule of right. He who does right is approved of his own conscience and God is pleased. If God is pleased with our conduct, not much else counts.

HOW WILL THEY SPEND THE SUMMER?

Thousands of students, having completed the session's work in various schools throughout the country, are now at home for the vacation season. It is natural to suppose that they will seek relaxation after their arduous labors of the past nine months, and we wish for every one of them a most pleasant and delightful summer. We hope, however, that not one of them will engage in such social dissipations as will lessen their intellectual vigor or weaken their moral character. A heavy responsibility rests upon those pastors from whose charges these students have gone to college and whose churches they will attend during the next two or three months. These young people will need good fellowship, kind counsel, and definite religious instruction, and they have a right to expect it at the hands of the church. So far as we are aware, no dispensation has been granted to anybody for moral laxity during the summer.

KILL THE GRASSHOPPERS.

A grasshopper is a rather insignificant insect, but multitudes of them can do irreparable injury to growing crops. We read just the other day that the farmers of Michigan are threatened with the total loss of their young grain through the ravages of these pests, and that a vigorous effort is being made to exterminate them by poison and other means. Little sins may not seem to amount to very much, but left alone they will ultimately destroy the most firmly established life. They should be overcome before they work destruction.

THE VOICE OF A SAINT AND A SEER WARNING US FROM THE SKIES.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

In the April number of the Southern Review of 1872, Bishop Marvin published an article on "The Methodist Episcopal Churches, North and South," which was characterized by the most elevated spirituality and the highest wisdom.

In it he showed how the politico-religious position of the Northern Church, assumed in the debate of 1844, had by the "unconscious logic in the course of events" committed that body "to a political career."

The inevitable damage to the ministry and certain danger to any church that falls into such a politicalized program, he then proceeded to set forth in eight strong propositions, which may be summarized as follows:

(1) "It renders the ministry of the church unacceptable and uninfluential with all who may be of the opposite faction."

(2) "It destroys the fact and consciousness of consecration in the pulpit," "induces a secular character" in the ministry, and leads to "the gross violation of the vow" taken in ordination "to give themselves" wholly to this one thing "of preaching the gospel."

(3) "It breaks up that concentration which is an essential condition of the highest success in the Christian ministry."

(4) "Even amongst politicians, though they may be of his own stripe, the political preacher has, to say the least of it, an equivocal reputation. * * * The ministry, the church, and even religion itself, come into bad odor through this means."

(5) "Its effect in actual bad character. The trade of the politician is demoralizing. * * * The church can work towards a purer condition in public life only in an indirect way, by preaching the gospel, and thus increasing the prevalence of Christian morals at large. It is not by preaching politics, and coming down to the strife of potsherds, but by simply preaching Christ, that the ministry can accomplish any permanent good, either in this or any other field."

(6) "Ecclesiastics make the worst politicians in the world. * * * God never intended them for this service. * * * Their standpoint is not favorable for it. It is altogether unfavorable in a country especially where the church exists, as it must always be where there is any liberty, in the form of distinct denominations."

(7) "When churches enter into politics, bad men will seek connection with them for the sake of their influence. The church will and must become corrupt in such a state of things."

(8) "The church is the bride of Christ. She is debauched by political alliances. They are a breach of her marital vows. Her purity is lost when she goes after other lovers."

Amplifying these strong propositions of eternal truth, which have perpetual application in all lands and in all ages, Bishop Marvin said further:

"A church which becomes a politico-ecclesiastical organization is a hybrid—a cross between religion and politics. The progeny of this cross is a monster. The very conscience that comes from the spiritual side of its pedigree is fanatical and unnaturally sensitive, and by virtue of this it is always remorseless. It is a monster and always a bloody one."

Although Bishop Marvin was a man of the most catholic spirit and the most ardent brotherly love, his convictions, as expressed in these propositions, were so strong and fixed that when he came to apply them to the question of union with the Northern branch of Episcopal Methodism in America he said:

"Into a church, into whose very texture political instincts and ambitions have been wrought, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is invited to merge her existence, and to sink it; for, as we have seen, being the smaller body, the Church, South, would be lost in the union. She would simply swell the bulk of the larger unit by which she would be absorbed. If her existence has any meaning, it would be lost. If anything sacred and of high value has been committed to her custody, as she is distinguished from the Northern Church, the trust would fail, and her members be held responsible for the loss. What she does stand for is given in the declaration of her dying Lord: 'My kingdom is not of this world.' This great fact, which contains within itself the purity and safety of the church in all ages, has been committed to her keeping. The Church, South, as far as Methodism is concerned, is the custodian of this vital truth for the American continent, and for the coming ages. She can not surrender her trust; especially can she not, in view of the character of the hands into which she is invited to place it. She is invited to place it in the hands of the very party from which God separated her, that she might be able to keep it. Impossible!"

It will be noted that in these profound utterances, Bishop Marvin was not setting forth principles of transient expediency and passing policy, and of temporary application. He was proclaiming truths which he believed were of abiding authority, and which he considered indispensable to the religious welfare of "the coming ages."

They are not less important to-day than they were when Bishop Marvin published his great deliverance in 1872. On the contrary, there is now greater reason for proclaiming them anew than there was in 1872; for some of our preachers and people, it is to be feared, are in danger of letting them slip. Beguiled by many delusive plausibilities prevalent in these excited and unsettled times, there are those who would draw our church and its ministry into all sorts of political discussions and divisive debates. Siren voices are calling to our preachers, "Lo, here, and lo, there!" and some are in danger of being lured away from the fulfillment of their high commission and led to their own destruction. High above the tempests, which are blowing, we do well to hear the majestic voice of our divine Master warning us against these seducing cries with their promises of speedy deliverances and spurious millieniums, and saying, "Believe them not. Go not after them."

The voice of history also warns us. Never yet has a church aspired to be "a world church" and relied on mundane forces and earthly methods that it has not become a worldly and weakened church.

Fewer souls saved, diminished membership, and spiritual decline have always marked the course of such a church.

The decrease in our own membership, the larger decrease in the membership of the Northern church, and the alarming decline in the membership of the British Wesleyan Church which has continued without arrest for more than a decade, admonish us of the danger which threatens Methodism. Let the ministry and membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, consider seriously and prayerfully what these things mean, and cleave with full purpose of heart to the high calling which Bishop Marvin declared was committed to us.

And this is all the more necessary for the welfare of American Methodism and the prosperity of evangelical Christianity in our country in view of the regrettable fact that our Northern brethren seem to be disposed to run more and more into the policy and methods of a politico-ecclesiastical organization.

The strongest political currents seem to run through both their Annual Conferences and their General Conferences. In proof and exemplification of this statement, which is made with genuine sorrow, are a number of things which have occurred in their General Conference at Des Moines.

Resolutions concerning the "Treaty of Peace" (some favoring the treaty as submitted by the President and some calling for the treaty with the "Lodge Reservations"); resolutions concerning the question of the independence of Ireland; resolutions concerning "Japanese Policy and Action in The East;" resolutions "for the settlement of industrial unrest;" a resolution to appoint a committee "to be sent to the political conventions" of the Republican and Democratic parties to urge the nominations of candidates and the adoption of platforms favorable to the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution; resolutions concerning "a bonus to postal service employees" of $1000 to each annually above the basis of 1912; resolutions approving "The Sheppard-Towner Bill" for "aid in saving the lives of American mothers and little children" by making certain appropriations and by creating a "Federal Board of Maternal and Infant Hygiene;" resolutions concerning the "Industrial Court of Kansas;" and many other resolutions of like character, have been introduced. A number of the resolutions mentioned have been adopted "enthusiastically," if we may trust the daily reports of the press.

With the sentiments expressed in many of the resolutions, perhaps most of them, one might readily and cordially agree; but it is obvious that they are political in character, do not belong properly to church legislation, and may give rise to much strife and division. Indeed, the resolution concerning the treaty of peace brought forth from the committee to which it was referred a majority and minority report, revealing very sharp differences and recommending very conflicting actions to the General Conference.

In Bishop Marvin's article occurs this striking and thoughtful passage:

"There is an unconscious logic in the course of events. Sequences are sure to be realized in organized communities, though they are not comprehended by the individual understanding. Probably no man of the majority in 1844 understood himself to be committing his church to a political career. But the unconscious logic was obliged to realize itself. These ecclesiastics had charged themselves with affairs that belonged to the civil government. If any man had said to Olin, or to Finley, or perhaps even to Peck, at that time, 'In the course of ten or twelve years your Annual Conferences will be raising committees on the state of the country, and adopting fiery political resolutions, identifying the church thus, in an official way, with one of the political parties of the country,' they would have replied, 'Are thy servants' dogs that they should do such things?' But alas! they themselves had set the church to work upon a civil institution of the country, and the unconscious logic could not but reach its result."

Since Bishop Marvin wrote his irrefutable article in 1872, the "unconscious logic in the current of events" has carried our Northern brethren much further than ever before in the direction of a politico-ecclesiastical organization; and no one can say when or where the most spiritual elements among them will be able to arrest the swiftly running current.

Let us be warned in time against adventuring on such lines of action. We are no better than they; and if we adopt the same methods, we shall be caught in the same currents and carried where it would shock us now to be told we could ever go.

It is more easy to get a body started on dangerous lines than it is to stop it when once a start has been made. Almost any political matter may be made to appear as having in it a moral issue, once an ingenious interpreter takes it up for discussion.

And let us remember that when a church engages in political agitations it inevitably hinders its ministry to all the people and limits its work to the class, or faction, or party with which it agrees.

Bishop Marvin's words are wise and sound. We should heed the voice of that saint and seer, who has passed into the skies after having fulfilled a Scriptural ministry and fought a good fight and kept the faith.

Let us lay to heart the warning words of Him who is infinitely greater, who is the Lord and Master of all saints. Let us hear Him when he says, "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight" (John xviii:36). An unworldly kingdom can not be established by worldly means and methods. Wherefore, our hope is in God, from whom cometh our strength, and, not in mundane forces of any sort whatever—least of all in political forces.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON TEMPERANCE AND SOCIAL SERVICE.

To the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dear Brethren: In accordance with paragraph 420 of the Discipline the following annual report is respectfully submitted:

The past year will be ever memorable in the history of Social Service. There has been an almost continuous struggle between Capital and Labor, not only in the United States, but in the other great countries of the world. The most outstanding events in this struggle in the United States have been tho Steel strike, and tho Bitumlnous and the Anthracite coal strikes, followed very recently by the so-called "Outlaw" strike. In addition to these have been strikes of lesser degree scattered throughout the country. While it is true that the high cost of living, resulting not only from selfish and greedy profiteering, but from the exceedingly abnormal conditions created by the war, is responsible to some extent for the determination to strike for higher wages and shorter hours, there have been other contributing causes which are more basal than the simple question of the amount of money received for a day's work. Not only the methods, but the very structure of the economic and social life of our country are in the melting pot and are being subjected to the test of the fierce fires, both of class and racial hatred and of the stern and bitter struggle of multiplied thousands of the so-called middle classes to secure not only the necessities of life, but to maintain their former economic and social status in the make-up of the national life. One fact stands out clearly, social conditions will never be again what they were before the beginning of the great war, and in this fact all lovers of the progress of the race may rejoice. Every man with a sympathetic brotherly nature must long sincerely for a great uplift in the physical, intellectual and spiritual life of mankind, but this uplift cannot be obtained by the methods of the strike or physical force. It must come through the permeation of the entire life of all classes of the people with the principles of Christian brotherhood as laid down by the all-loving Master, Jesus Christ. All life, both economic and social, must be brought into captivity to Him. Only as the capitalist and the laborer alike accept the leadership of Jesus, the carpenter of Nazareth and the crowned king of the universe, can there come any lasting peace among men.

And this principle of love applies not only to economic, but also to racial strife. There must be an honest, frank, willing recognition of the fact that God has made of one blood all races upon the earth, that He has declared that He longs for all men alike to become citizens of the heavenly kingdom, and that He has erected no standard of color or race as a prerequisite of admission into that kingdom, but has declared: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Our Commission has endeavored to make its contribution to the settlement of the social questions which confront our people to-day by proclaiming the great underlying principles of the teachings of Jesus concerning the relation of man to man and of man to God. A carefully prepared statement was issued by the Commission after its annual meeting in August, 1919. This statement was published in our own church papers, sent to the Annual Conference Boards of Temperance and Social Service, forming the basis of similar declarations by a number of these Boards, and the statement was also quoted from and commented upon by a number of influential papers outside those of our own church. We trust that the basal principles of that statement will be adopted more and more by our preachers and people in all the practical relations of life, and be indeed as leaven which leaveneth the whole lump. Certainly the voice of the Master must find its best and most effective medium of expression through His body—His church, and we cannot expect that church to receive either respect or support if it rejects or even is ashamed or fearful to proclaim a full gospel of brotherly love with all the meaning of that gospel in practical everyday life. Repentance and faith are of necessity fundamental to salvation through Jesus Christ, but both repentance and faith, if they are to be accepted at full face value by an always critical and a frequently suspicious world, must be followed by love and works.

The ratification of the Federal Prohibition Amendment and the passage of the Volstead Enforcement Act are cause for great rejoicing by all lovers of human progress. And the exceeding great importance of this legislation is recognized not only by great religious bodies, but by the leaders of the great economic forces of the country. Speaking for these, Mr. Frank S. Vanderlip, one of the world's greatest financiers, declared: "With a true combination of moral insight and plain common sense we have amended our Constitution and have provided the greatest single economic factor looking toward material prosperity ever created by legislative enactment. I believe that the economic value of prohibition will eventually be an influence for the prosperity of society the like of which will amaze ourselves and the world." But while the nation has branded the liquor traffic as an outlaw, as the enemy of the economic, social and moral welfare of the people, it cannot be ignored that this outlaw is still insolent, desperate and defiant, declaring openly its purpose to nullify and then to repeal the Prohibition Amendment. Our warfare is not yet over, we cannot disband and lay our armor down. Our Commission urges our people to continue their assistance in maintaining the organizations of the Anti-Saloon League and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, under whose efficient leadership the liquor forces have been routed and the great prohibition victories won. All the results of our educative campaign of the past fifty years are being challenged, and the Christian leadership of our nation must declare in unmistakable language its determination that there shall be no surrender at any point to the forces of evil.

We, furthermore, rejoice that a World League against Alcoholism has been founded. The United States as the first great Prohibition nation of the world, must of necessity take a leading part in extending the frontiers of sobriety throughout the world. The World League against Alcoholism will be the efficient ally of every Mission Board. Our own church, through its Commission, has had a very active part in this great movement, and the Chairman of our Commission has been elected Chairman of the Executive Committee of the World League. In the dual capacity of a representative of our own Commission and of the World League, he has recently visited Great Britain and several countries on the continent of Europe, and found from personal conferences with leading statesmen that the adoption of Prohibition by the people of the United States has made a profound impression in the highest government circles of Europe. Under the provision of a Local Option Law the people of Scotland will be permitted to vote next November, and the result of the election will greatly influence the Prohibition movement throughout the entire British Empire. Our Commission has not been able to respond to the appeal for literature for lack of funds, but the promise has been made that some member of the Commission will, if possible, spend a month in Scotland during the coming summer to testify as a competent witness concerning the effects of Prohibition in the United States. A fund of even $5000 could be used to great advantage by the Commission during the next six months, and an appeal will be made for voluntary contributions.

A Conference for Social Workers was held at Lake Junaluska in August, 1919. It was an exceedingly stimulating, thought-provoking conference to those in attendance, and if suitable arrangements can he made a similar conference will be held during the coming summer.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES CANNON, Jr., Chairman
DANIEL MORTON, Secretary

Commission on Temperance and Social Service,

SOUTH AMERICA: THE UNDEVELOPED CONTINENT.

By A. C. Millar.

VII.

Colombia: The Land of Opportunity.

The west coast of South America has few good harbors, consequently steamships call at as few ports as possible.

As the Hodge Ship Company, to which our ship, The Nika, belongs, is seeking to promote trade with Colombia, we had a small consignment of freight for Buenaventura, the best harbor on the 400 miles of Colombia's Pacific Coast. As the coast is not yet marked with lighthouses and buoys, Captain Wheadon worked the ship along cautiously for twenty miles before the entrance was discovered. He said that it was something like Columbus discovering America. Then we anchored in the bay, but nine miles from the town, and reconnoitered. Fortunately we found in the second mate of the Balboa, at anchor in the harbor, an experienced pilot, who brought us to deep water half a mile from the docks. As unloading is by lighters and they move with the tide, we were four days at this obscure place.

From the sea, Buenaventura (meaning good venture) looks quite pretty, as its houses on the bluff appear well from a distance, and, certainly in this case, "distance lends enchantment to the view." Closer inspection reveals a squalid village of 3000 people, mostly negroes and abjectly poor, if judged by their ragged clothes and little shacks. There is only one business street, and the stores and warehouses and hotels are of the cheapest possible construction. It is said that the town has burned up twice, and one would think that it would soon burn again. This narrow passage-way is graveled and has sidewalks, but the side streets lack even these crude improvements. Decorated with flags in honor of the President of the Republic, who was that day expected, the main street presented a gala appearance. The small plaza has few trees, but has a bust of Bolivar, the patriot and hero of South America. As we were taking a picture of the plaza, the only mule in town was grazing there. No horses or carriages or Fords were visible. On the elevation is a poorly built church. While it is not imposing, its interior is tastefully decorated. A little, square, one-story, parochial schoolhouse adorns another elevation. The three rather sweet-faced "Sisters" in charge tried their best to give us information, but as our Spanish is meager and their English even less, the conversation was limited. As no living water is obtainable, there is behind the school a reservoir, 50 by 50, halfway in the ground, in which the water is caught from the roof, and, as it is supposed to rain every day, the supply is ample. Nearby another schoolhouse of concrete is being built. No public school was found, but it is said that a room is rented and school occasionally opened. From the hill-top we could see, looming up 20 to 30 miles away, the foot-hills of the Andes.
